A good many people talk the minister down. They discount all his doings. They misunderstand his plainest sayings. They credit him with unworthy motives. They hang as a millstone about his neck. They predestinate his failure. An angel from heaven could not succeed under such conditions.

Talk up the minister in the outside community. The world will accept him at your estimate, and respect him according to the measure of your own respect. Talk up the minister in your home. Help him to win and save the children. Talk up the minister among the young people; lift not a finger to break the spell of his uplifting influence. Talk up the minister among your fellow-members. Be his solid friend. Join his body guard. Suffer no tongue of malice to speak against him in your presence. Talk up the minister in the social circle, on the street, in the cars, in the factory, store, or office. Magnify his strong points.

Minify his weak ones. Speak kindly of him, or speak not at all. Do you know what such loyalty to the minister means? In nine cases out of every ten it means for him superlative success.—Epworth Herald.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—April 24, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LA PRADRE.

The Lord My Shepherd.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." (Verse 1.)

The shepherd lad of Bethlehem, grown to be the king of Israel, knew how wisely and tenderly the faithful shepherd cared for his flock. From pasture to pasture he had often led his father's sheep, protecting them from ravenous beasts as they passed through the dangerous gorges of the Judean hill-country, finding them food, and water, and shade where they might quietly chew the "cud of contentment." He had risked his life for the flock, too, having slain a bear and a lion that attacked them. No doubt the appealing helplessness of the timid sheep, and their promptness in following his call and yielding to his guidance, was a lesson of faith to him; while his own love for them and tender solicitude for their safety suggested the greater love of God for his people.

We can well imagine that the sight of a flock, quietly resting after hunger had been satisfied, while the shepherd watched over them, brought back to the Psalmist's thought the experiences of his early life and suggested the beautiful Psalm of our lesson. Then he had been shepherd now—his wider range of experience, his cares and temptations and anxieties having shown him his own need of some kind, protecting, providing power—who would, who could care for him? The Psalm is the answer—an answer of both faith and experience.

Ver. 1. "The Lord." Was David anticipating the claim Jesus put forth, "I am the good shepherd"? We can not say that he had the Messiah in mind; yet what an endorsement does Jesus give to the heart's demand of God! "The Lord is my shepherd." "I am the good shepherd." Loving, watchful, wise, faithful, willing to lay down his life for his sheep. "My shepherd," I caring for me, loving me. Therefore, "I shall not want." He knows me, calls me by name, has me and my safety in his hands.

Ver. 2. The world's pastures yield for hungry souls but scant supplies, useless and unwholesome at best. Not so the "green pastures" of tender grass, full of juices rich and nourishing, and soft and cool to the touch of tired ones, which God supplies. "Still waters"—waters of quietness. Not a torrent, dangerous and filling the soul with fear; nor a stagnant pool, unrefreshing, breeding disease; but the quiet stream, flowing gently, thirst-slaking, cooling, leading to rest.

Ver. 3. As the food and drink and rest restores the half-famished, weary flock, so the provisions of grace, the love and care of God, the boundless of his great, good heart, revives, refreshes the weary, hungry soul. And then, that the revived soul may not wander away and be lost, he leads in right paths, safe paths—"his name's sake"; that is, in fulfillment of the pledge he makes as a good shepherd.

Ver. 4. Not when I am dying; this is not the thought of the Psalmist. The flocks must sometimes pass through dark, lonely, dangerous dingles, where death's shadow seemed to fall. There, more than elsewhere, they would depend upon the courage and guidance of the shepherd, upon his rod and his staff. So in life the child of God finds gloomy, dangerous places; light all gone, and deep the very shadow of death, seems to settle down upon them. There God, "with them," his care, his power, his guidance assures; they can see their way out, but they can keep close to him, and are safe.

Ver. 5. Here the pastoral figure is dropped, and the kindly care of God is set forth as the host of his servants. A table is prepared; abundant provision made, however enemies might surround him; the oil of gladness is poured upon his head, soothing, full of fragrance; the cup of comfort is full to overflowing; God is his host, the great God, pours upon his beloved the riches of his goodness.

Ver. 6. Will it always be so? Will the Good Shepherd always guide the gracious host always provide? Always. Going on his way "goodness and mercy shall follow"; the "house of the Lord" shall be "dwelling-place forever." The green pastures stretch all the way to the river of life; the rod and staff are always at hand; the table is spread every stopping-place; the anointing oil is ready always for the hot, weary head; the cup is full, evermore; God's children shall dwell in his tabernacles till the end. After that, the "mansions."

My Recollections of Methodism in North Mississippi.

My father was born in Maury county, Tenn., 1802; moved to North Mississippi, and settled in Yalobusha county, 1834, while the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians were still there in force. I was born in an Indian camp, thus literally fulfilling one of the old prophecies—Japheth shall dwell in the tents of Shem, and Canaan shall serve him. One of the first things I can remember were the songs and prayers of the Methodist pioneers in their log cabins. I can not remember the day that I did not love my mother's God. But they told me I had to repent and get religion before I could be good or a child of God, and often when my young heart swelled with emotions too absolutely profound for human utterance I checked myself and did not claim relation to Christ, not knowing that he had said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

While the itinerant preachers had much to do with the grand success of Methodism in that wild region, to the local preachers the glory undoubtedly belongs. There were three local preachers who settled in that community: Revs. Joshua Fly, John P. Boynton and Thomas Keelen. They were men of but little learning, so far as books are concerned, but they were full of the power of the Holy Ghost. There were giants in those days. Never while memory holds her throne will I forget the thrilling scenes of those early days. These preachers were poor, with large, helpless families, in a new and undeveloped country, and yet they set that country on fire and kept it in a blaze for more than a third of a century. I have often known them to plow until Friday night, and start Saturday morning by daylight to ride twenty-five or thirty miles by eleven o'clock, and hold meeting till ten or eleven o'clock Sunday night, have fifteen or twenty converts, then ride home that night, and be ready to go to plowing Monday morning. They formed a society in their neighborhood, and called it Salem, where they held their membership. This was the most remarkable church I ever knew. It was almost impossible for a man to live in that community for a year and not be converted.

Bro. Keelen left the neighborhood after a few years, but carried a living flame with him and kept it burning in parts beyond. After some years he died in his light and went up to God on the flame himself had lighted. The others remained, and it did seem that they lit those people upon the wings of their faith Godward and heavenward. I have frequently heard them preach and exhort till the altar would be crowded with penitents; then get on their knees, one on each side the altar, and sing and pray until the last penitent would be converted, and, meeting in the center, embrace each other. Oh! what a shout of triumph as they would sing, "What wondrous love is this, oh my soul." I believe they were inspired; they influenced men as I have never seen it done by others.

Salem sent out more than a score of preachers; many of them made preachers of the highest order of talents. No preacher ever went from that community who did not bear the impress of those men. Uncle Johnny, as we familiarly called him, lived till after the late war; then laid his head on the bosom of the blessed Christ and went home to heaven. Uncle Joshua, as everybody called him, lived to be seventy-three years old. He was a great missionary among the negroes. He loved to preach to them. I expect he did more work for them and was instrumental in the conversion of a larger number of that race than any man in Mississippi; and they almost worshiped him. He raised three sons who gave their lives to the ministry of the Methodist Church; one of whom died last December, saying he would give his life to save one man. The others are still holding the banner to the breeze. The last time he attended his church, he insisted that Uncle Joshua should preach. He, being unable to stand, sat and delivered his last sermon. Sept. 25, 1875, he finished his work. Said to his oldest son, "Tell the children to meet me in heaven." Like Joshua of old, because of his fidelity, he was permitted to enter the Promised Land. Heaven was much richer when these three heroes came and brought their trophies. Shall we ever hear them sing again? I think so. When the church of the first-born shall gather and join in the last coronation, and heaven's burning orchestra shall swell the song, I expect to hear their sweet voices rise amid the chorua till they sweep the diapason of heaven's grandest harp, "We'll crown him Lord of all."

M. D. FLY.

Is It Not an Opportunity?

"Hard times!" is the cry everywhere. Nor is the cry without a cause. The cry just now is most distressing in cotton-growing States. Grain-growing sections have suffered not far less than ours. The wealth of our nation increases by eighty per cent. every decade, but it is passing from the multitudes to the millionaires. I believe this is the most avaricious age of the world's history. Mr. Gladstone estimates that the wealth produced during the first fifty years of the nineteenth century was equal to the wealth produced in the eighteen hundred years of the Christian era previous to that date, and that from 1850 to 1870 an equal amount was produced. Civilization multiplies wants, and money is a great means of gratifying these wants. I further believe ours is the most avaricious nation the sun ever shone on. The Christian religion is itself an ex- tant. Steam has quickened man into almost a fury. The telegraph and press have brought all parts of the world together. These, added to many local causes, such as race, climate, opportunities, etc., have made us the most nervous and restless people of the world. The eastern merchant, true to the tradition of his ancestors, gossips for an hour with his customers, while the western merchant is busy, with deep-laid schemes or some trick for a dollar.

And how has this energy been directed? All nations have an aristocracy. In eastern countries this is a matter of birth; but in the United States it is a matter of wealth. Each is trying to build their pedestal the highest. The epithet, "too beastly prosperous," which Matthew Arnold applied to Chicago, is, alas! too true of the nation. "But they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition." (I. Tim. vi. 9.) "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God." I believe these words have a fuller meaning in the nineteenth century than they had in the first century.

From hundreds of pulpits all over the country warnings of this gilded snare have gone forth, and it seems, with very little effect. They who have uttered these warnings have been branded as deluded perverters of the Scriptures. I can not say that the present financial crisis is providential. It may be. But if not, God can make the wickedness of men to praise him. I believe "the Exchange," which is another name for "gambling hell," is the cause of it. But let us take advantage of the devil's work. Times of financial depression are apt to be times of great spiritual awakenings. I believe the crisis to be a blessing to the church and, therefore, a blessing to humanity. This financial depression will better check the avarice of the people than all the pulpits warnings of the century. The field is now ready for a great spiritual harvest. Shall we miss our opportunity? You ask if such a time is not a harvest for the socialist and anarchist. It is, unless we cultivate the field first. So much greater, then, is the need for activity on our part. Can we not afford to emphasize the state of the heart rather than the deeds of the hand? And do this with an assurance that there will be no falling off of the church's finance? Is not this crisis an opportunity for the church? I think so.

But if the church is not awake to its opportunity, the Whitechapel districts and "Black Bottoms" of our cities will be greatly swelled. People are leaving the farms and country for shops and city, and unless the poor of our cities are looked after and the gospel given them, atheism and irreligion will hatch their foul progeny in the ruins of a great opportunity. There is a widespread impression that poverty is incompatible with spiritual Christianity; and from this impression has grown our neglect of the poorer districts. In 1880 there was in Chicago one evangelical church for over 2,081 of the population, and in New York one church for over 2,468 of the population. Even at this proportion church accommodations are growing more inadequate each year. There is a certain district in Chicago in which a thorough examination has been made. Out of a population of 50,000 there are 20,000 under twenty years of age, and Sunday-school accommodations for only 2,000!

Firmly do I believe that if the church was to spend as much energy on the poverty-stricken sections as it spends among the mansions of "up town," its numbers would be multiplied, its life quickened, and more means turned into its treasury. Surely the Salvation Army furnishes demonstrated proof enough to establish the assertion. Nothing was affirmed of Christ more startling than the statement, that "the poor have the gospel preached to them."

Was not the Christian Church planted in a poverty-stricken district? Did not its Founder become as poor as the poorest? Was not the statement, "The poor have the gospel preached to them," reaffirmed of the founder of Methodism? And what, I ask, is the class from which we get the majority of our converts in foreign fields? Shall we depart from the traditions of our fathers, from church history, both past and present, or, above all, from the divine command and example, and lend an itching ear and an itching palm to the worshippers of mammon?

I have been turned aside from my original purpose in writing, which was to speak of the financial depression of the States covered by our Conferences, viz: Louisiana and Mississippi. Since a time of financial backsliding is apt to be an opportunity for spiritual progress, let us hail the time as a great opportunity, and reap during the year of 1892 the greatest spiritual harvest the States have enjoyed for years.

The reformed sexton—what manner of man will he be? He will be a man of iron constitution, capable of working twenty-four hours in a day without food, sleep or weariness. He will be liberally educated, having graduated from college and taken university courses in such specialties as heat, light, ventilation, physiology and hygiene. He will be conscientious, performing all the drudgery of his calling with the most scrupulous fidelity, even in the matter of cohears and dusty corners. He will be religious, keeping himself in constant sympathy with the purpose and efforts of the church he serves, and always co-operating with the pastor. Finally he will be, he must be, a genius. He must know how to suit everybody, keeping everybody's pew at just the temperature which its occupant prefers, and having a different temperature for each individual worshiper. He must be able to keep a room hot and cold at the same time. He must have a system of ventilation that will overcome the defects of architectural construction, triumph over the interference of wind, and compel air currents to move according to his wishes, whatever the laws of nature may have decreed in the premises. How shall this great reformation be accomplished? Our colleges and universities may do something towards it, by giving intending sextons special facilities in regard to scientific options and electives, and by endowing chairs of Sextonology. Scientists may aid in the work by writing books upon the subject. Our university extension scheme should provide courses of lectures for the same purpose. Sextonological newspapers and magazines should be established. Prizes should be offered for essays upon the subject, and for stories and poems based upon sexton life. Above all, training-schools for sextons should be founded, where sweeping, dusting, firing, bell-ringing, draught controlling and kindred arts might be thoroughly studied and practiced. Where is the millionaire who will immortalize himself in this field of philanthropy?—Advance.

A great deal is heard about woman's occupation and how it can or should be extended. There is one occupation of woman as old as Eden which has always been productive of good results, and that is the occupation of making herself beautiful. It might better be called keeping herself beautiful, but the fairest of her sex will fade if no proper precaution is taken to preserve the charms that are her birthright. This is especially true of the hair, and no better means for its preservation can be adopted than the use of the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, a purely vegetable compound which is not only one of the most elegant hair dressings that can be used, but in the worst cases of baldness will restore the growth, stop the hair from falling out and give back the natural color. Hundreds of certificates from leading ladies all over the United States attest its power to do this, and a single bottle will prove its invaluable virtue. If your druggist or merchant is out of it, send to the Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

Satisfied! Who is really in this blessed condition? Who can claim the fullness of peace, the glad content which this word expresses? The man who is satisfied in this world, if such there be, has a dwarfed soul. David had a true conception of the requirements of the soul when he looked beyond the present existence for the good desired. "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." "We know that when he shall appear we shall be like him."—Christian Inquirer.

From the Baptist Year Book, for 1892, we learn that in the United States there are 23,800 ordained Baptist ministers; 35,890 churches; 18,829 Sunday-schools. There were reported 160,247 baptisms, and the total membership is 3,269,806, a gain of 105,579 over the previous year. There are 1,307,628 pupils and 136,053 officers and teachers in the Sunday-schools reporting. Church property is valued at $67,664,596, while contributions for all objects, including local expenses, aggregate $11,886,558.89.

The new bridge across the Mississippi river at Memphis, which is to be opened May 12, is said to be one of the finest structures in the world. The length of bridge and approaches is three miles. The bridge proper is three-quarters of a mile long, the length of the longest span being 794 feet. There are five spans. Nine thousand tons of steel have been used in the construction. It is built on the cantilever principle and cost $3,000,000. At the opening Senator D. W. Voorhees, of Indiana, will deliver the oration.

One thing we must resent. A brother has the audacity and temerity to call our waste-basket "a ravenous waste-basket." No, brother, not a "ravenous" beast devouring everything in reach, but a good goblin that eats up only that which might do harm in some direction if not destroyed. Many men and women owe their existence today to some benevolent waste-basket. The waste-basket is a charitable institution which Christian people ought not to speak against. The good it has done, the evil it has stopped will only be known when the final hour comes.

It does seem to us that the Christian people of this land, in some things, are the most foolish people in it. There are several immensely bad things in this country that can only be destroyed by the concerted action of great numbers of people. Christian people are supposed to be opposed to evil things, but the biggest evils are growing bigger with every year. The separate churches protest, and the evils laugh and grow. So long as these evils control votes they will continue to grow. But let the Christian people unite against these evils at the ballot-box and we shall see the end of them in short order. There never was a better illustration of our Savior's proverb—"A house divided against itself can not stand"—than is afforded by the failure of a "divided" church to cope with the liquor traffic.

If a stranger visits your church and you don't give him cheerful greeting and a warm welcome, do you think he will return? Would you?

Work for City Churches.

We have never been so impressed with the importance of city church work as we are at this moment! The absolute necessity of concerted action on the part of Christians in this city never seemed so clear to us as it does now! That the people of our own church here should unite heart and purse upon an enthusiastic missionary campaign, to give the gospel with all its attendant blessings to those who have it not, can not now be doubted by anyone who looks at the necessities of the case! We have been cultivating, almost exclusively, our own little patches, and letting alone the great field right under our eyes, and the result is not what it ought to be! But before we go fully into this subject we give our city readers the following clip from the Epworth Herald, and ask them to ponder over it:

Hundreds of young people from village and rural district are pouring into our cities every month. More are coming this year than ever before. Many of these young persons are Christians. Many are not. In either case the first six months spent in the city will probably be an index of how all subsequent months will be spent. A wonderful opportunity is given to city churches. Do they appreciate it? And do they realize that the measure of their opportunity is also the measure of their responsibility? Christians in our large cities should be especially alert and sympathetic. Newcomers should be soulfully welcomed and quickly surrounded with upbuilding social and religious influences. But we must do more than welcome those who voluntarily come to us. We must go after those who are disposed to love badness, and who are sure to lose their souls unless speedily saved from sin's fascinations.

Two or three cases have come to our attention in Chicago lately which have set our heart beating with real anxiety. The devil's nets are spread upon every street. His unscrupulous agents are hard at work. Every form of temptation which satanic ingenuity can invent is being used to wreck human lives. Gilded saloons stand wide open. Theaters show broadcast their urgent invitations. Social pleasures even among those who move in respectable circles educate away from God. The strange young man or woman in Chicago, unless under positive religious influences, is running a fearful risk. The same is true of other cities. The only thing left for us to do is to quickly marshal our forces and outdo the servants of evil in devotion and zeal. The young people's societies of the churches have a wonderful opportunity to do practical service in this needy field. Some have entered it, and have already conferred unspeakable benedictions. But most of our people are unconscious of the tremendous importance of this duty. Oh! that every Christian would become aroused, and every heart catch fire. "He that winneth souls is wise."

All this is fearfully true of our city and shows the need of united, earnest, practical and uninterrupted work on the part of our churches. Will we enter upon that work heartily? Can we afford not to do so? The opportunity is given us and the resulting responsibility is come, and our Lord says to us louder than ever before, "Go work today in my vineyard!"

If our Methodist people would come together and talk over their opportunity and responsibility in the matter of giving the gospel to the thousands in this city who have it not, it would be a glorious sign to those who in secret places are groaning and sighing and weeping on account of the hurt of Zion! It would encourage many discouraged souls. It would strengthen the weak faith of many. It would bring down the blessings of God. It would inaugurate a "forward movement" that would rescue thousands. If you don't believe it, try it and see. We believe the time is ripe and God calls.

The Seashore Camp Ground.

The Spring meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground Association was held last week. One dozen members of the Board were in attendance, and the presiding elders of the Mobile and New Orleans districts; the presiding elder of the Seashore district being unavoidably absent. The business of the Board, under the superintendency of President Hearin, was carried forward with dispatch and harmony.

Since our last visit to the grounds we noticed several much needed improvements. A fine artesian well, bored since the last meeting, now affords an abundance of excellent water. It is said to discharge fifty gallons to the minute, which is sufficient to water everything and everybody that comes upon the ground. One fine new cottage is in process of erection, and several others are spoken of as to be built by the meeting in July. The grounds have put on the Spring robes and everything looks "green and gay." This is indeed one of the most beautiful places along the whole coast.

The presiding elders, though embarrassed by the absence of Bro. Ellis, of the Seashore district, made what preparation they could for the success of the meeting in July.

The Board resolved that the camp meeting should begin Friday, July 8, at eight p.m., and end Sunday night, July 17, thus giving two Sabbaths.

We trust that our friends will begin now to think and talk about the coming meeting and pray earnestly every day for its success.

God's Regard for His Word.

One of the most remarkable utterances of the Bible is found in the 138th Psalm: "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." That God has the highest regard for his word is proved by the history of the results of the first transgression. The first precept was as simple as an injunction to little children. The results of its violation are complex enough to touch human nature at every point. The penalty for transgression has come with an impartiality and a certainty and a power appalling to human thought. The track of humanity along the ages is marked by black monuments of woe, and upon each one is written the terrible words: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die!" What a vivid view this gives us of the honor in which God holds his law! The deep philosophy of this is in the fact that God's Word is not only the expression of his will, but it is the sublime revelation of his character embodied in human language. Hence, he "magnifies his word above all his name."

Conference Claimants.

We are sorry that anything has to be said or written in order to the collection of the fund for our Conference claimants more than merely stating the amount assessed or desired, for the words, "Conference claimants" are familiar to our people. It does seem to us that any heart not devoid of a fellow feeling would be moved to give cheerfully to this fund where it is at all possible and right. It is good to collect one-fourth of this fund quarterly, but it is far better to collect all of it at once and forward it immediately to the treasurer, Bro. W. M. Thornton, Lake, Miss., for by so doing there would be no delay in paying the claimants quarterly, and besides the treasurer would know exactly what to do and, therefore, would be subjected to less worry and trouble. Let us, by the help of God, do our whole duty towards our claimants.

ISAAC L. PEMBLES.

Effects of the Dram-Shop Bill Already Visible.

The new liquor law of Mississippi is already bearing good fruit. The attorney general was interviewed and asked if the law applied to saloons now licensed. His reply was that the only point in which it did not apply was in fixing price of license. Wholesale dealers must go through all the forms of petitions, bonds, etc., same as retail dealers. It has been given out that many of the houses in several of our larger towns now used for the iniquitous traffic will soon be for rent—the saloon keepers despair of getting petitions signed by a majority of the electors. As this measure is enforced its effectiveness will be more and more appreciated. The following from the Vicksburg Herald is an earnest of better morals:

The effect of the new liquor law on horse racing and other sports is considered rather worse than a dash of cold water. One of the principal sources of revenue on such occasions is the sale of bar privileges, which many hold can not be done under the new law.

A gentleman who had expected to take a hand in organizing a State base ball league, said frankly, when approached on the subject a few days ago, that he could see nothing but loss for the managers of such events under the present law, and would, therefore, keep out of the projected enterprise.

Since writing the above, the attorney general has changed his mind and holds the law only applies to new license. However, that does not affect the case in hand at all. The saloon is doomed in Mississippi.

Sunday Closing and the World's Fair.

Every Christian in this great country is interested in this subject. The Christian papers, without exception, have spoken in no uncertain terms. The consciences of Christian men and women have been greatly quickened and the sentiment in favor of closing the Fair on Sunday is evidently gaining ground. The following note sent us by the American Sabbath Union tells how the good work is going on, and thus encourages the hope that the gates will be closed on Sunday.

The prospect of Sunday closing at the World's Fair is bright. Several State Legislatures have taken decided action in favor of closing, notably New York, Kentucky, Ohio and New Jersey. Several of the States through their commissioners have spoken most emphatically upon the same side. The friends of the Sabbath from every State of the Union have earnestly appealed to Congress, by petition and other ways, to decide the question immediately.

The recent hearings granted the American Sabbath Union at Washington by the Senate and House Committees on the World's Fair have been most encouraging. Acting in accordance with the demand of millions of our citizens that the Exposition shall be closed on Sundays, the Union has urged this as a condition in any bill making additional appropriations by Congress to the Fair.

It is now highly important that every Senator and Congressman should be urged by his constituency at home not to vote one dollar more to the Fair without this condition.

A Successful Epworth League.

Some facts relative to the success of our Epworth League in Natchitoches may stimulate interest in this work elsewhere. The League was organized, under many difficulties, one year ago with thirteen members. Since that time the numerical force of our charter members has been doubled twice. In the commencement we found it impossible to conduct our work as prescribed by the constitution; now the League is well organized, many young men and women being led into practical work for Christ. In our meetings we have magnified spiritual subjects, studying the Bible textually and topically. This has greatly encouraged the systematic reading of God's Word. After some of our Bible readings, enjoying studied expositions of the Truth, we could say with the two disciples whom Jesus met on their way to Emmaus, "Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?" The intellectual part of the work is receiving attention. Short essays of church history, suitable readings from the Discipline, appropriate selections from other sources, add special interest to this department. The members of our committee on "Charity and Help" are visiting the sick, looking after the destitute, calling the attention of the League to proper objects of charity in our midst. Thus the building up of practical Christianity is one of the direct and best results of our League. This is a practical age; men are sinning in a practical way, and unless there be a practical force generated in the spiritual world, nothing can counteract the tide of godlessness in our country. So the various departments of Christian activity have been incorporated in our League work, and a special impetus given to the Lord's cause thereby. The Epworthians of my church have made our Methodism more aggressive, giving life and efficiency to the Christianity of our town.

ARTHUR D. MCVOY, P. C.

Natchitoches, La.

[We trust our friends will give us accounts of the League work from all parts of our territory. This is an important branch of our work and needs to be brought prominently before the church and people. Will other pastors follow Bro. McVoy's example and write about their League work?—EDITOR.]

The Flood Disasters.

Since our last issue the news from the regions in Mississippi devastated by the recent floods has not only been confirmed, but additional horrors have come to light. The losses in life and property are much larger than was at first supposed. The lowest estimate now placed upon the loss of life in the flooded district is 100, most of whom, perhaps all, are negroes. It is reported that in Lowndes, Monroe, Clay and Noxubee counties many families have been rendered homeless and are suffering for bread. The tales of woe that we read from the stricken district are sickening in their awful details. The citizens are doing what they can to relieve the suffering; but larger means are needed than they can supply. The State and General Government could not do a better thing than afford measures of relief, for under the most favorable circumstances it must be a long time before these stricken and beggared people can be in position to help themselves. What is done should be done quickly.

A Venerable Institution.

In this city among our Methodist Churches there has existed an institution for thirty-five or forty years, which has afforded annually a great gratification to our children and been a great benefit to our Sunday-school work. We refer to the New Orleans District Sunday-school Association. The members of this association met last Saturday evening in Carondelet Street Church and elected the following officers for the current year:

It was resolved to have the anniversary this year, on the third Sunday in May, in Carondelet Street Church. All the necessary arrangements were made to make the annual meeting a success: We trust that all our Sunday-school superintendents will co-operate heartily with the officers of the association, and see to it that their schools are all present at 3:45 p.m., May 15, in Carondelet Street Church, at which time the exercises will be promptly opened by President Mackie.

Easter.

I still insist that "Easter Day" and "Easter Sunday" are two different things. Easter Day is the day on which the first full moon occurs after March 21, and Easter Sunday is the Sunday following. If Easter occurs on Sunday, or the moon falls on Sunday, then the Sunday after that is Easter Sunday. So say all the books. This year Easter came on Tuesday, April 12, and Easter Sunday, April 17. Tell Sister Sadler "Gilderey" followed the books. If the books are wrong, he is not to blame for it.

Rev. H. L. Vaughn.

The Rev. H. Luther Vaughn, of the North Mississippi Conference, pastor of our church at McNutt, died a few days ago. On account of the floods and suspension of travel, no particular have been received. Bro. Vaughn was born near Columbus, Miss., March 11, 1856; educated at the Vanderbilt University, and admitted on trial to the North Mississippi Conference in 1879. An obituary will, doubtless, be published.

J. S. OAKLEY.

NOTES.

The churches have enough to do to fight the devil without fighting each other.

The preacher should be careful to place the emphasis on the right word when he reads the Scriptures. The truth often depends upon this.

The sixth Annual Convention of the Louisiana State Sunday-school Association will be held in this city, in the First Presbyterian Church, May 3-5, next. The railroads will give reduced rates of travel. A fine program has been prepared for the occasion.

Many of God's best and most precious messages come through slammering lips. The speech of the most splendid intellect of history was contemptible, if he himself was a judge and the critic called him a babbler, but the great truth which fell from those slammering lips have moved the world.

—Mid-Continent.

There is no harmless form of gambling! Public sentiment must be stirred by the voice of faithful pastors, earnest laymen and the press, until the demand for the enforcing of laws is heeded in a way that will break alike the gambler and his abettors, criminals. More than this, we need every possible way to educate and train the youth of our land in the principles of truth, honesty and temperance.

—Christian Weekly.

Our Church Extension Board did good work last year. The cash receipts from all sources was $75,770, being $1,852 over last year. The number of churches "helped" was 427, being more than last year. The amount of help afforded was $87,089, being an increase of $1,360 over last year. Dr. Morton and his coadjutors are to be congratulated upon this good showing.

A distinguished Methodist preacher once said: "But for the interest and devotion of the women of our churches, one-half of them would die the first year, and the other half the second." The same remark is largely applicable to our Presbyterian Churches. A considerable proportion of the Sabbath congregations consist of the women. And as for the week-night prayer meeting, it would have to be given up in a good many of our churches were it not for the women.

We presume the foregoing, from the Mid-Continent, is true, and it is a sad truth; but it is sadder to see that in many places so little is being done to bring about a different condition. A good many preachers and congregations seem to be satisfied that things are as they are, and make no special effort for improvement. "Neither cold nor hot," they are in danger of being cast off by the Lord.

Not long since we observed in one of our Northern exchanges an advertisement of sermons on any subject prepared on short notice, and for a small price. The other day in a very popular paper with us we came across like

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

The Mississippi State W. C. T. U. will meet in Corinth, Miss., at 9:30 A. M., Thursday, May 5, and close the following Sunday night.

Work has been resumed on the Baptist Church, now in process of erection in this city. When it is completed, it will be worthy the pride of that denomination throughout the State.

We spent the first Sabbath of this month with Bro. R. J. Jones, at Yazoo City, and had the pleasure of preaching both morning and night to his congregation in their handsome new church.

Ex-Lieut. Gov. Shands spent two or three days in Jackson, last week, in attendance upon the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, and was warmly greeted by a host of friends. Few men in public life in Mississippi have made a more brilliant record than he, and our obituary in her biggest columns has often had the benefit of his distinguished services.

The Dram-Shop bill went into effect Saturday, April 2. All scenes of every description have been removed, the traffic has been brought to the front of the saloons, and there is now nothing to hide the tipplers from public gaze. We have seen more than one bartender subserviently holding his hands and looking sheepish. Well, the business is calculated to make a man of sensibilities look and feel just that way.

Bro. Melien, presiding elder of the Meridian district, stepped into the branch office long enough to shake hands and pass the compliments of the season while in Jackson last Friday, and later in the day we had quite a pleasant visit from Dr. Wheat, of Grenada. Both these brethren came down to attend the meeting of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, and we were very glad to have had the pleasure of meeting them while here.

"Baptism As Seen by a Woman," is the title of a pamphlet ready for the press written by a good sister in Texas. In response to some skeptics who doubted the ability of the sex to discuss that question, she refers to Joel for vindication of woman's capacity as an antagonist of error under great provocation, and adds, "Now, I would ask, in all candor, if a woman hasn't as much right as anyone else to write on the subject of baptism? Why not? She certainly is a far greater sufferer in matter of indolence by being immersed than is a man, and surely 'self-preservation' still remains a cardinal law of nature."

In the Annotated Code chapter on privileges passed by the Legislature, just adjourned, we find this:

CIGARETTES.—On each dealer in cigarettes or cigarette paper, $50. And this shall apply even though the party has paid a privilege tax as other dealers.

Cities and towns may add as much as 50 per cent. to this, as well as to all other privilege taxes. Since the passage of this act, a young man of our acquaintance went to every dealer in the town where he lived, but could neither procure tobacco or cigarette paper. The tax will run nearly or quite every dealer out of the business, and that will be nearly as great a blessing to our country as the destruction of the liquor traffic.

Why may not an opportunity be given at every service for any who may so desire to unite with the church? The politician expects to make converts to his side with every speech, the lawyer before the jury knows it is "now or never." Why should not a minister of the Lord Jesus Christ have the same aspirations and feel the same responsibility? He is laboring for the salvation of souls and for eternity. Hundreds of persons attended service last Sabbath who will never hear another sermon, and there are thousands upon whose hearts the Spirit has possibly made this last impression, and we failed to follow it up with a direct appeal to "come out from" the world "and be separate," and it was lost. Do we not find in this a possible, if not a probable, explanation of the reason we do not have converts every Sabbath in our evangelical churches?

To every Christian woman there are said to be two hundred heathen women.

The first missionary society of the M. E. Church was organized in 1819. In 1820 it raised $832.24.

We spent last Sunday at Carthage in attendance upon the Brandon District Conference, a full account of which will appear in our next.

It is said that the George Muller Orphanage, at Bristol, England, has received since 1834 over one million and a quarter pounds sterling in answer to prayer.

A child seven years of age has lived a whole year of Sundays. One fourteen has lived two whole years, one twenty-one has lived three, and so on. If we only read the Bible on a Sunday, how much we could learn of God in a lifetime.

We neglected to note in our last issue that Dr. Wheat, of Grenada, spent several days in this city with his friends last week, and preached at the First Methodist Church on Sabbath. It is the first time we have had the Doctor with us for quite a while, and his presence and sermon were greatly enjoyed by his numerous friends.

Bro. Dominick has laid on our desk a sample copy of the Children's Day Programme for 1892, just received by him. It is as tastefully designed and neatly finished as any yet issued. All the hymns are from our Standard Hymn Book. The programme consists of sixteen pages, but the price remains the same as formerly, viz: 10 cents per dozen, 60 cents per hundred.

Bro. J. A. Black, in the Central Methodist, of April 9, says that the Western Virginia Conference in the last twenty-five years has had a net increase in ministerial force of more than 114 per cent.; more than 426 per cent. net increase in membership; over 272 per cent. net increase in Sunday-schools; over 460 per cent. net gain in Sunday-school scholars. The amount raised for all purposes in 1891 was $66,894.41 more than was raised in 1866. This is an average yearly gain of $2,675.37 for twenty-five successive years.

A successful pastorate does not consist in the ability to preach eloquent and (commonly called) drawing sermons, nor in depth of theological research, nor in congeniality around the fireside, but in getting the church organized against the forces of sin, and the individual members backslide every year, and thousands stand in jeopardy for lack of something to do. Every man, woman and child has a certain amount of surplus energy which must be worked off, and if we can direct and use it for the cause of Christ, we have not only benefited the world at large, but the individual himself. This is putting the necessity of this organization on the lowest possible plane. The great motive is, "The love of Christ constrains us."

The best way to avoid scalp diseases, hair falling out, and premature baldness is to use the best preventive known for that purpose—Hall's Hair Renewer.

Special Notice to Preachers.

The preachers in charge will confer a favor on the publisher if they will report in full as to collections for new and old subscriptions to the New Orleans Christian Advocate at their approaching District Conference. A representative of this paper expects to be present at same.

Plicher's Studio of Music.

We have had the pleasure of attending several of Prof. Wm. H. Plicher's charming musical recitals at his elegant "Studio of Music," No. 169 St. Charles Avenue. They evidence the culture and ability of Prof. Plicher and his faculty. For many years this institution has deservedly held the first position as the best place to receive an education in music, either vocal or instrumental.

Rev. Joe Jones is to begin a meeting in Hattiesburg, Miss., April 24. A large tabernacle has been erected, and the railroad is expected to give reduced rates of fare.

Dr. Morrison, in the Wesleyan, says that the missionary collections from assessments for ten months—that is, to Feb. 29—amount to $280,797.25. This, he says, is a larger collection from the general assessment than heretofore.

On account of the floods a full attendance of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, April 6, could not be had. Those who met agreed to adjourn to April 27, at which time a full Board is expected to attend, when important business will be transacted.

BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

—THE DANCE is a little pamphlet by James Brand, D. D., and published by the Advance Publishing Company, Chicago. It is a good presentation of that subject.

MY MOTHER: An Appreciation. By Bishop J. H. Vincent. Flood & Vincent, Meadville, Penn. Price, thirty-five cents. This is a beautiful tribute to the memory of a mother who passed from earth nearly forty years ago.

We have just received two recent publications that touch subjects of first importance. Dr. Langford's treatment of "Christian Benevolence" is wise, able and conclusive. Every Christian in the land ought to read it. Bishop Ryle's graphic treatment of Dives and Lazarus, in his "Rich and Poor," is especially called for now when there is intense haste to be rich and cries of want arise on every side.

The publisher of both (Thomas Whitaker, No. 2 Bible House, New York) issues them in an excellent style at a very low price. Send twenty cents to him for both, or $1 for a dozen assorted. Good missionary work may be done by getting these excellent booklets widely read among friends.

To the Superintendents of the Sunday-schools in the Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: For the purpose of having a general observance of Children's Day, the Sunday-school Board propose to furnish Children's Day Programmes free to all the Sabbath-schools in the Conference. The Board has tried to get your names and addresses, but has only partially succeeded. We have the names of all in the Meridian district and most of those in the Vicksburg, besides a few others. To all whose addresses we have the programmes will be mailed this week. All others will please write immediately to Rev. W. D. Dominick, Jackson, Miss., and he will supply you free of all cost to your school.

H. M. ELLIS, Sec'y.

To the ministers and friends who subscribed to the Bible and Training-school during the session of the Louisiana Conference, Baton Rouge, December, 1889, I beg to say, that during the past year only six dollars have been paid, and on many notes no payment has yet been made. This is, doubtless, due to there being no accredited agent at the late session of the Conference, which is regretted.

The Training-school building nears completion; we are collecting on subscriptions as fast as possible, that the house may be furnished and teachers and lecturers secured by the time of the opening of school, Sept. 14, 1892.

I will be glad to receive any amounts by postoffice money order (the sender can pay for order out of the amount), and a receipt will be promptly returned. Very respectfully,

Mrs. M. D. WIGHTMAN, Associate Agent for Training School, 79 Anson St., Charleston, S. C.

The Greater Responsibility.

There are two missionary societies in the Southern Methodist Church. Both are now in a very grave situation. One has a debt of over one hundred thousand dollars, upon which interest is being paid at the rate of six per cent.; the other has a surplus of about one hundred thousand dollars, which is drawing interest at the rate of four per cent. To a lover of the Master the question is, How can money thus be held, which was collected for missions; be hoarded and drawing interest when the world of humanity in Japan, China and the islands of the sea are dying by the thousands every year unsaved? Is all the work of "woman for woman" completed, or is this merely a small sinking fund? But the greater responsibility of these two societies is assuredly assumed and carried by the one with a surplus, for the time held in abeyance from reaching the end for which it was given. A debt accrued from being over-sanguine, over-zealous in pushing the kingdom of the Lord Jesus into the regions of paganism is far less a responsibility than to have a vast unexpended surplus collected for missions, and drawing interest while souls are perishing for lack of knowledge. There may be so-called sufficient reasons for the accumulation of these funds. It may be very satisfactorily explained to the society, to the women of the church; but the fact, bald, bare, unanswerable to the Lord, to the dying souls is still the same—a sum drawing interest given to save souls. Another question suggests itself: Maybe societies have no conscience, no soul; therefore, they are like corporations—have no sense of responsibility, no sense of obligation. This may be the reasoning: "I am not wholly responsible for this thing, but it is the business of the society; therefore, I have no obligation in the matter." If such is the status of these societies, without soul or sense of responsibility, it matters not how much one owes, or the other holds, as a small sinking fund. We may be obtuse; and this surplus may be merely a brilliant piece of financiering. The similarity of the figures suggests that maybe the great Southern Methodist Church has merely been swapping her missionary money from one pocket into the other. The right-hand pocket into the left-hand pocket; the pocket of the Parent Board into that of the Woman's Board, and the pocket of the Woman's Board sealed—not hermetically, but the aperture is small, very small, through which the money is to pour out, but large where it comes in. But suppositions are pleasant, though not profitable. Let other Boards have a surplus of fifty or one hundred thousand dollars; but may ours never take upon itself such a grave and awful responsibility. It is sad that our church is hindered by a large debt, but better far than be receiving interest on unexpended money that should be saving souls.

S. S. KEENER.

Important.

To the Preachers of the Mississippi Conference: "The third Sunday in May, or as near thereto as practicable, shall be observed as Children's Day throughout our church with appropriate services; and on that day a collection shall be taken up for the aid of needy Sunday-schools, and the advancement of the Sunday-school work under the direction of the Annual Conference Sunday-school Committee." (See Discipline, page 142.)

This is not advice, but—law. You have no alternative but—the violation of your word, for you are pledged to "not mend our rules, but keep them." Doubtless, you are all aware that the collection last year for this cause fell far behind that of the year previous; but when I tell you that, of our one hundred and thirty-six pastors in charge of works within the Mississippi Conference, sixty-six—one of every two—reported no collection whatever, you may well be surprised. This may have been from ignorance of the law; but, with Disciplines so abundant and cheap, such ignorance is criminal. If, however, the law was known, this is, indeed, a sad commentary upon the loyalty of our pastors. If a fine of fifty dollars and imprisonment of thirty days were the penalty for such violation, would you do it? Then will you, who profess contempt for such low motives, be more moved by them than by conscious obligation? I trust not.

Programmes for Children's Day can be had free of all cost to your school by applying at once to Rev. W. D. Dominick, Jackson, Miss. You, of course, need not observe the programmes strictly as printed, but they may be a nucleus or suggestion for plans of your own.

Now, brother, you need not be surprised if somebody asks you at Conference, "Have you observed Children's Day?" and, if not, "Why not?"

Bishop Fitzgerald to Reside in Atlanta.

Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald, Nashville, Tenn.:

My Dear Sir and Brother: As secretary of the Atlanta Preachers' Meeting, I am instructed to send the following action of the meeting, on Monday, 25th instant:

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES.

Rev. Walker Lewis presented the following resolutions, which, after a free and full expression of the members of the meeting, were unanimously adopted with a rising vote:

Whereas, There is no resident Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, in either of the States of Georgia, Alabama or Florida, combining almost one-fourth of our church; therefore, be it Resolved, By the Methodist Preachers' Meeting of Atlanta, that Bishop Fitzgerald be asked to reconsider his contemplated settling in California, and be invited to locate in Atlanta—the preachers in behalf of the church and in accord with their feelings assuring the Bishop of a glad, generous welcome.

Resolved, That Bishop Fitzgerald be furnished with a copy of these resolutions. WM. A. PARKS, Sec.

BISHOP FITZGERALD'S REPLY.

Rev. W. A. Parks, Secretary, Atlanta Preachers' Meeting:

Dear Brother: I have taken full time, as you will see by the date of this letter, to consider the matter presented for my consideration in yours of Jan. 30, 1892. I am profoundly grateful for the kindly expression contained in the resolutions adopted by the brethren.

My delay in giving an answer has been caused by a controlling desire to do the will of God in this matter, not conferring with flesh and blood, but seeking to go where he would have me go, and to do the work he would have me do, conforming to the letter and spirit of the law of the church. Having reached a decision, I take this method of making it known to all concerned.

I accept the invitation extended to me, and at an early day will go to Atlanta, and there make my domicile.

At Atlanta I received my first appointment as a traveling Methodist preacher in 1854. During the intervening years I have described a wide circle, and now I will go back to the starting-point of my itinerant ministry. This conclusion has been reached after careful and prayerful consideration.

Many kindly voices have asked me to remain in Nashville. The people of this goodly city have shown me much kindness since I came among them in 1878. But, however agreeable it might be for me to remain in Nashville, because of social and family considerations, to do so would violate a principle to which I have held for many years.

The ties that bind my heart to California can never be broken. I expected to go back thither and end my labors where the strength of my manhood was spent, and to be buried by the side of our children. A change of conditions, without any change of feeling, causes a change of purpose on my part. My true friends on the Pacific coast will understand that I have been governed by a sense of duty in reaching this decision, and I am consoled by the reflection that our church in that field will not thereby lose either in the quality or amount of episcopal service. And I indulge the hope that in the revolutions of the itinerant wheel I shall enjoy the privilege of working and worshipping with them again. Be that as it may, my interest in the work and my affection for the laborers on the Pacific coast will not abate.

Georgia has always touched me for good from the day I first set foot upon her soil. In going back thither I would be glad to be of some service to the cause of God among her people. As much as in me is I will labor to this end.

O. P. FITZGERALD,
Nashville, April 22, 1892.

Is the Church Aggressive?

At no time since the Reformation has the interest in religious questions been so profound and so widespread as it is now. It extends throughout Christendom, and is manifested by both Protestants and Catholics, and the believers in no definite or definable religion are not less affected by it. Next to politics, the most serious attention of the secular journals of this period is bestowed on questions of religion and theology, subjects to which they gave no consideration a generation ago, not venturing to enter into a field so dangerous and for whose cultivation they were indubitably unfit. Now the public interest in the great theological controversies of the day forces them to follow the progress of the debate and to take part in it. They not only dare to have opinions on the gravest of questions, but they are expected to utter them, and no matter on which side they may be, they are listened to with respect, if they treat the subject with the dignity it demands.

The Presbyterians are grappling anew with the great Calvinistic doctrines of election and predestination, and discussions as to the infallibility of the Scriptures crowd their churches as the most sensational of the day. A few years ago Prof. Briggs might have been regarded as a dry speaker on subjects of no general and contemporaneous interest, but now, whenever he appears in the pulpit or on the lecture platform, great audiences listen to him with as much eagerness as if he were a very Whitefield. Theologians of distinction are the popular religious orators.

It is the same in the Episcopal Church. The discredit which the opponents of Bishop Phillips Brooks would cast on his doctrinal position has served only to increase the desire to hear him. The Methodist Church, also, is stirred by the prevailing influences, and plans of church work so liberal that they would have shocked the last generation are proposed by ministers and laity. The problem of better utilizing feminine zeal and piety is commanding universal attention. Shall the church go on in the old way of uplifting and regenerating humanity by simply preaching the gospel to them, or shall it wage its fight against the devil and his works by taking from him some of the popular amusements and recreations which he turns to a use so pernicious?

A proposition is under consideration in New York to erect in the famous Bowery a People's Church, connected with which there shall be reading rooms, bowling alleys, and other and like provisions to attract the masses by whom a church is regarded as a place of intolerable restraint and repulsive gravity. In the great cities generally church work is taking on a philanthropic no less than a religious character, with societies for both the spiritual and material benefit of the surrounding population; for their amusement and not for their religious profit only.

By every practicable means and by methods innumerable it is sought to awaken the interest of the public and to show to them practically the sympathy of Christians and the church. The enthusiasm of humanity, as Robertson described it, was never before so active in its manifestation, and its current expression is a tender concern for the welfare of men in this world even more than in the world to come.

Temporal salvation seems to engage the first thought rather than the salvation which is everlasting. Philanthropy is made the chief and the most characteristic Christian sentiment. Belief is made less important than obedience to moral and natural law, and toleration of differences of religious opinion proceeds to an extreme never before reached. The consequence is that, revolutionary as are the pending theological discussions, they go on without provoking acrimony. Even believers and unbelievers converse about these questions without heat, if not with a respect which is reciprocal.

Meantime, how is the church holding its course? Is it as aggressive in revival work as of old? Moody and Sankey, Sam Jones and Sam Small seem to have retired from the general field. Instead of going about this country and England exhorting sinners to repentance, Mr. Moody is absorbed with his Biblical School at Northfield. He is advancing on the enemy from a distance and by slow approaches. The camp meetings of the day have also taken on largely an educational character, and their policy as to amusements and recreations has become more liberal. They, too, are moving on the enemy by indirect roads rather than attacking him squarely in his intrenchments after the old method of warfare. It is an age of education in the church rather than of revival work.

It is also a time of theological controversy, investigation, inquiry, reflection and interest rather than a period when the forces of religion are pressing forward enthusiastically under the banner of the cross. They are encamped debating over the situation, and questioning as to the methods and objects of their warfare.

This lapse of aggressiveness in the church can not continue without destroying utterly its vital force. The church is the army of the Lord, and it must forever move onward, unceasingly animated by a living faith. Unbelief and negation can afford to be supine, trusting to natural influences to bring in recruits without other aid; but belief and faith must be always alert, always aggressive, and always warm with vitality. This, then, is the time of all others in the history of the church when it needs to be infused with a pentecostal spirit. Intellectual education is well, and it is necessary. Philanthropy is a beautiful flower of Christianity. The moral and material elevation of humanity is a noble object of endeavor. Self-improvement and self-advancement, so far as the world is concerned, deserve every incentive. The philosophy of life is worthy of study by every individual. Yet, first of all, the need of men is that they shall be spiritually minded. First of all, they must enter into the kingdom of God. They must know whereof they believe, and know it for a certainty, or they will not believe otherwise than as a mere formality. They must be in earnest, and not lukewarm, if they are to have a positive influence in the world.

What, then, is the outlook from this time of theological controversy; from this interval when religious questioning produces corresponding religious inaction? It seems to us to be toward a period of religious revival which will be memorable in the history of the church. Human nature can not feed long on the husks of logic and intellectual debate. It must have nutriment for the heart and warm blood for the veins, and it can not get them from mere philanthropic sentiment and by picking at the dry bones of theology and polemics. It must have faith, religion, love, hope, and the food which is sent down from above only.

This great awakening, this unprecedented revival of genuine religion, may not come in this century, and its beginning may appear any day; but we do not doubt that it will occur in the not distant future, and that it will find men ready to feel its influence as never before in the memory of those who are living. The deeps are already stirred.

—Chautauquan.

An Herculean Task.

Only the people of Louisiana can form even an approximate idea of the Herculean task which has been accomplished in this State in the last two years, and only those who were leading in the struggle are aware of the tremendous efforts which were necessary to accomplish the result which has been achieved. People in other States can not form even the faintest idea of it.

The State was in the grasp of a giant corporation—one dealing in a business reprobated by the civilized world, but which had familiarized itself to the people of Louisiana by a suzerainty of long years. A corporation possessed of unlimited wealth, with absolutely no scruples as to how it used it in the accomplishment of its purposes. A corporation which cared not for the opinions of the world, and which was as careless of the reputations of individuals as it was of its own. A corporation which had a theory that every man had his price, and which acted upon that theory. A corporation with no conscientious scruples, no political preferences, and apparently no fear of God, man, nor devil. A corporation which stole the mantle of charity to cover its brigand's dress, and which erected churches in the service of the devil, and doled out alms as a blind to its robberies.

More than twenty years of power had made it the master of the people to such an extent that when a few men, alive to the disgrace which rested upon their State and determined to wipe it out, took the field against it, they were looked upon as fanatics and fools rushing blindly upon annihilation. It was weeks before they could get recruits, and it was months before people were willing that they should be publicly known as members of the Anti-Lottery League. Men who had faced death upon the battlefield without a tremor, and who had led forlorn hopes with dauntless courage, spoke in whispers when they discussed the lottery.

But confident that the right would prevail in the end, and relying upon the honesty of the people, and feeling assured that when they were informed they would rally to their support, the men who opened the war upon the lottery persisted. They believed, with Lincoln: "You can fool part of the people all the time, and you can not fool all the people all of the time."

Strong in this belief, they never gave an inch. They contested every foot of the ground with the lottery; they fought it in the House of Representatives; they fought it in the Senate; they fought it in the court; they fought it at the primaries; they fought it in the general election; and at last they won. At every point the lottery met a stubborn resistance. Often it triumphed and forced back the band which opposed it by sheer weight of numbers; but it never routed it. It found that hand in the next parallel as ready for the fray as it was the first day it organized; always stronger than it was before. Each day it grew stronger, for as the people were enlightened, they were converted. It was only necessary for them to know the facts for them to swear hostility to the arch-foe of Louisiana and to enlist themselves under the banner of its enemies.

In the contest the lottery was a very Proteus. In the two years it took a different shape with every change of the campaign. It first came out as a lottery, pure and simple, asking for a recharter as a matter of course. Then it took the shape of a public benefactor, and scattered its largesse with a liberal hand to the poor sufferers. Then it came in the plain guise of a business man making a business proposition, having nothing to do with sentiment and dealing only with a matter of dollars and cents. Then it appeared as the sympathizer with the unfortunate and afflicted, with its soul wrung with pity for the unfortunate insane, the maimed veterans and the uneducated children.

Then it took the shape of the champion of true Democracy and white supremacy, and threw itself between the people of Louisiana and an imaginary danger of negro domination. It constituted itself the ministering priest of the temple of Democracy, and offered to sacrifice all of its enemies upon the altar of "the will of the people." Followed in this, it then secretly became the friend of alleged Republicanism, and was the go-between in the bargain between the negro cohorts of the Leonard faction and the renegade Democrats who were willing to sell their party, their people and their State for thirty pieces of silver.

But at every turn it was met and foiled by the anti-lotteries. No position seemed so impregnable that they feared to assault it; no disguise was so perfect that they did not penetrate it; no subterfuge was so subtle that they did not circumvent and expose it. They routed it in its attempt to get a new charter directly. They defeated it in its attempt to get control of the Democratic party. They exposed and nullified its compact with the negroes. They prevented it from getting possession of the offices of the State. They have crushed and overthrown and destroyed it.

None but those engaged directly in the task ever can or will appreciate its magnitude. Few can appreciate its danger. The men who fought the lottery fought, as it were, with ropes around their necks; they staked all upon the success of their efforts to free their State. They have finished. Their task is done. They submit their work, its motives, its acts and its results to the world for its judgment. —New Delta.

Pledges: For church at Lebanon, Ore., taken at Arkansas Conference, $26; for church at Monterey, Mexico, taken at North Carolina Conference, $750; for church at Rouse, Colo., taken at North Mississippi Conference, $31.50; for church at Rouse, Colo., taken at Mississippi Conference, $27. Total of pledges secured during the year still unredeemed, $840.50.

Work: The General and Conference Boards helped this year 427 churches, paying them $87,089.46. The General and Conference Boards helped last year 387 churches, paying them $82,729.42—showing an increase of 40 churches and increased payments, $4,360.04.

With $550 in addition to what we have in our treasury at this time, we can pay all outstanding appropriations, new and old, absolute and conditional, foreign and domestic, made by our Board. The Board has also paid all its expenses of every kind to date, and is literally free of debt. By order of the last General Conference the "Woman's Society has assumed the work of the Woman's Department of Church Extension, and it was decided from the work of this Board October 1, 1890, except that after appropriations have been made by that society, it turns the money over to us for disbursement upon the execution of proper legal papers. The ladies have done a noble work this year, and will make full report of same.

We spent the better part of two days in Louisville while the Board was in session, and were much impressed with the straightforward and business-like manner in which its proceedings were conducted. Secretary Morton had everything in shipshape, so that it was easy to understand and act upon the various matters that came up for consideration. Our fellowship with the managers and visitors was most delightful. —Nashville Advocate.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, Macon, Miss., April 18: "We closed last Wednesday night a meeting in Macon station, which had continued for about twelve days, resulting, we hope, in much good. Bro. N. G. Augustus, of Okona station, was with us, doing all the preaching, which was plain, pointed and fearless, exposing many of the evil practices of our community. At the time some complaint arose from some quarters; but we think that, after reflection, all will be bound to admit the truth and justice of all said, and, we hope, will have a tendency to cause us to straighten up at much-needed points. We received into the church on profession of faith, seven—a bright and promising class. Upon the whole, we are moving on very well; the finances of the church are well up."

Rev. Wm. G. Evans, Castor mission, La., April 11: "I have now been on this work three months; have made 162 visits to 105 homes, including 33 visits to the sick; have preached 16 times—once to the negroes—and held 3 Church Conferences; have baptized 2 persons and married 1 couple; have distributed quite a large number of tracts, and started one prayer meeting; have received three persons into the church; and last, but not least, have organized a church at the new town of Olla, on the H. C. A. and N. R. R. After service I visited one of the members, and, in talking of the church, it was decided we must have a building. A gentleman present told us to put him down for a corner lot on which he hoped, in the near future, to see a church edifice. A part of the lumber is already in sight, and I hope, in the near future, to have money enough in hand to commence work. Pray for us, brethren, that we may take this doorway to this part of the Lord's vineyard."

Rev. C. C. Grisham, Paris, Miss., April 19: "Our second quarterly meeting for Banner circuit, North Mississippi Conference, was held last Saturday and Sunday at Hunter's Chapel, in Pontotoc county, at which place the good people have just about completed a nice and beautiful church, which reflects great credit to the surrounding country. Our beloved presiding elder, Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, was present in due time to preach the two first sermons. He came in the spirit and power of the Master. Long will be remembered, if ever forgotten, those sermons, for the Holy Ghost came upon us, and our hearts were glad and our souls made happy. The love-feast on Sunday was followed by the funeral sermon of Sister Martha Lamar, a devoted, consecrated mother in Israel, ninety years of age. Her sainted husband (called Uncle Nathan), ninety-five years of age, was present, full of the Holy Ghost. Oh, bless the Lord for such a message of love and power as was seen and felt on that day, which will long be noted in the history of that community! We have about completed two churches this Spring. We have seven Sunday-schools on the circuit. We also have ten churches to which we are trying to give preaching on Sunday, with the assistance of our faithful local preachers. We have a very good parsonage at Paris; twelve-acre lot. Notwithstanding all this, the report of the stewards indicate hard times, financially. We are greatly behind with money matters. I have had but little success in getting subscribers for the ADVOCATE. Would be glad if I could get it in every family. I still will try. May the Lord bless you and the ADVOCATE! Pray for us."

You can count on less than the fingers of one hand the prelatons of all the leading colleges and universities in America who are not ministers. An extremely large proportion of the professors are also ministers. In fact, ministers teach the teachers of our country and do more to shape and mold the thought and mentality of the leaders of American scholarship than all other professions and occupations combined. —Interior.

BY JAMES M'CAKILL.

There are many consecrated men and women in the church to-day who are as true to Christ as any of those in the days of old, but woefully in the minority and smothered all but to death by the Nicodemus crowd. For a long time I was confronted by this problem; so many unconverted people in the church, and was unable to solve it until one day the Bible solved it for me in this wise: "There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: the same came to Jesus by night." Afraid to go by day! As soon as my eye fell upon these words the problem vanished in a flash and was as plain as day.

The hour is fraught with red-hot, living issues of stupendous import to the people of God. In this great republic civil law is our only earthly king, and we, each individual member of society, are the pillars of his sublime throne. It was the intent of the founders of this great republic to have the people make the laws. This the people did for a long time; but now things have changed. The making of the people's laws has got beyond the people's jurisdiction into the hands of corrupt politicians. Avaricious rascals and deceivers make the laws and trample upon the old laws, written in our fathers' blood, which in their pristine vigor and beauty have stood the test of time. Christian patriotism must come to the front lest it be everlastingly too late. That the bride of Christ will be aroused from her death-like slumber we are confident; but how will it be? God uses fearful methods sometimes to arouse his people, especially when lethargy and apathy is caused by prosperity and forgetfulness of his promises after the prosperity has come. "When they are full and deny him." Base ingratitude. God has always followed it with fearful chastisement. Know you not that upon the old-fashioned Bible rests the whole superstructure of this new world, the Union of States known as the Paradise of Liberty, the great Mecca to which flows all the nations of the world in a living stream of pauperism, anarchism, socialism, nihilism, infidelity, idolatry; every kind of belief and every species of humanity under heaven, all hastening to the great Eldorado of America. All rightly informed people are compelled to admit the incontrovertible truth which is most evinced by our former security, peace and prosperity, that this great republic owes its unparalleled success and glory to the solid foundation upon which they built—i. e., the bed-rock of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and God the Father Almighty. The great Washington, in his address to the people of the United States declining being considered for re-election to the presidency, makes use of the following language: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who would labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these finest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and cherish them. And let us with caution indulge the supposition that Says Wadsworth: "The framers of our Constitution recognized their obligation to act as in the everlasting presence of a higher than human authority. And they did act as in such presence. Protestant Christianity is positively part of our common law and part of our Constitution. The civil law of this land is a Protestant Bible in every official inauguration, and proclaims the Sabbath as consecrated to God, alike in the halls of our higher national council and in the rudest hut of the borderer."

Says Daniel Webster, one of the greatest exponents of the law of our country: "Christianity is part of the law of the land. This was the case among the Puritans of New England; the Episcopallans of the Southern States; the Pennsylvanians Quakers; the mass of the followers of Whitefield and Wesley, and the Presbyterians; all brought and all adopted this great truth, and all have sustained it. And where there is any religious sentiment amongst men at all, this sentiment incorporates itself with the law."¹⁷

Am I true to God through Christ? This is the only question that concerns me, because upon it depends the welfare of my citizenship in this country, as well as my duty to posterity and my eternal destiny in the world to come. What do I mean by being true to God? Jesus made it plain. John xii, 25, 26: "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world, shall keep it unto life eternal. If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honor." When I found Christ and joined his church, it became a part of the church of Jesus Christ. A small part though I may be, nevertheless, unless I was a liar when I joined, I am a part of that church. Some people have a queer idea of the church. It is the devil's own idea. Their little two-by-three idea is, that the church is a house splendidly upholstered and gilded inside, with a grand sky-scraping steeple on top—an ornament to society and the community, a place of intellectual entertainment and amusement. Their relation to it is the same as that of the worldling to a theatre—the own a box and that's all. My idea of the church is the Bible idea, and that is the only place I know where to get an idea.

The Bible idea is that the church is not a dramatic mimic, not a pantomime, but a grand army, the goodly fellowship of the disciples of Christ fighting sin, purifying the world, getting it cleaned up so it will be decent enough for Christ's kingdom to come. Yes, I am a part of the church of Christ. "Know ye not that ye are the temples of the living God?" Glory be to God! I myself am a temple in which God dwells—a living, walking, breathing, thinking temple. I am a temple unit which goes to make up the temple aggregate in the church militant. Since this is so, how must I act? Just like Christ would act. How must I think? Just like Christ would think? Where must I go?

As a nation, some way or other we are all wrong; our blood is not as clean as it once was. Respectability is sick. Labor is ragged and tired and hungry, and "truth forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne." Virtue is still hanging, bleeding, nailed to the cross. It seems to me hell has enroached a little too far on our domain. The devil has captured well nigh everything, and is running it to suit himself with little protest from the church. Hell's recruiting offices are set up thick all over the land, doing a driving business day and night; conscripting many, beguiling more. The Inquisition and the rack for those who protest. With the hail-room and german blighting the bloom of young manhood and young womanhood tearing apart the close-shut petals of virtuous modesty, injecting into the system of purity and chastity a deadly anæsthetic, and ultimately adding to the great army of prostitutes. And with modern society in the swim well nigh as corrupt as any stage of society in the days of Rome during the decline and fall, and with sporting, speculating, making haste to get money by any method or device or knowledge whether legitimate or illegitimate, and lottery devils and gambling-aggrandized soundtracks

jobbery-subsidized schemers control-ing legislatures, and corrupt office-seeking, office-holding, truth-stifling virtue-crookifying politicians making and controlling and setting aside the people's laws. The sovereignty which was vested in the people, now in the tentacles of monopolies, trusts and combines. And the worst of all, the gigantic black death, the irrepressible liquor traffic, all ramifying and stral-ing and eating out the world's olimof civilization. Says great Washington: "To political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." What would he think of the stupendous sacrilege, the liquor traf-ic embedded in our constitutional law and the damnable saloon, one of our national institutions, under as great national protection as the public school, greater in power in political affairs than any other power. Mammon, the ultramontane king, sitting in the seat of state, ever crying, "Down with the American Sabbath," and would fain lull into a peaceful sleep, virtueoccult forces and influences all the while doing their finest to stifle

Am I, as a temple of the living God, particeps criminis with, all this crime against him, or am-I free? My record at the ballot-box will answer one part, while the other acts of my life will answer the other. Yes, God will examine the church's record at the ballot-box as well as her record anywhere else. If it is a sin for me to pursue ostentatious lines, it is also a sin for me to vote for a man who does pursue those sinful lines. If a political party is corrupt, I can no longer go with that party, since the recommendation of being a member of that party will not be recognized as a passport when I stand before the great white throne. "That which is politically wrong can not be morally right." Fidelity to God and to my country is greater than fidelity to any corrupt, aggrandized oligarchy. A Party that must not supersede Christ's allegiance and patriotism. If I can not take Christ up to the ballot-box with me, then woe be unto me if I go up to the ballot-box. I believe God has little use for a coward. I believe if Nicodemus had gone to Christ in the broad, open daylight instead of sneaking around after dark, I believe Nicodemus would have been as great a man as St. Paul. Seeking Christ as a man when no one will find us. Serving Christ secretly when no one will see us. Anxious to get into the kingdom, but not willing to go in through the door. Brethren, it is easy enough to follow Christ at night when the world is asleep and no one is up to criticize. But let us quit that and go out like a man and stay with the Master from sun-up till sun-down. True to Christ on Sunday in the house of God. True to Christ on Monday at my place of business. True to Christ in association with men. True to Christ at the ballot-box, even though we have to vote against flesh and blood. "Suppose you say that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, nay, but rather division: for from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided three against two, and two against three. The father shall be against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother-in-law against the daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law against the mother-in-law."

Here we are, all here in this old world together with saints and sinners, God and the devil. The question is, Who shall triumph? Tell me who you voted for last—what kind of a man; what kind of a character—and I will tell you who.

MRS. LAURA IZARD.

Mrs. Laura Izard died in Meridian, Miss., Feb. 18, 1892. She was the wife of Dr. Henry Izard, long a resident physician of Meridian. She was born in Columbus, Miss., April 1, 1841. Her father was the late Dr. Dabney Lipscomb, of Columbus, and she was an only sister to Dr. W. L. Lipscomb, who still lives in Columbus. Her last sickness was of about two weeks' duration. Her symptoms were not alarming until two days before she died, when she became unconscious, and so remained, save during occasional lucid intervals; when she would rouse up and speak intelligently to friends watching at her bedside.

Her childhood was bright and beautiful. Full of life, joyous and hopeful, devoted to her friends and kindred, her presence was ever welcome and gladdening, like the sunshine. Endowed by nature with excellent qualities of mind and heart, and enjoying superior advantages for mental and social culture, she grew up to lovely young womanhood; and, while still living in the town of Columbus, was happily married to her now bereaved husband.

She gave herself to God and the church in the morning of life, and joined the M. E. Church, South, when ten or twelve years of age. She loved the church, its appointments and means of grace, and was seldom absent from her place in the house of God, save when prevented by providential hindrance.

Although her health had been delicate for years past, and she had suffered much in body, yet she was full of life and energy, and the impress of her character was seen and felt in the home and in society. Her presence and helpfulness will be missed, not only by the members of her own household, but also by her co-workers in the missionary and aid societies of her church. Besides her husband—a skillful physician—and a son, who is also a young physician, she had many friends to minister to her wants during her last sickness. All was done that loving hearts and ready hands could do for her. Rallying somewhat at one time, she said, in answer to a question, "Oh, I want, I want heaven!" A lady relative and life-long friend, to whom she was devotedly attached, asked if she could repeat with her the twenty-third Psalm. "Oh, yes!" she replied, and repeated most of the Psalm with emphasis, as if realizing the preciousness of the words. On the last morning she made some request as to the care of her little daughter and of her household affairs, after which she lapsed into a quiet state, and so remained until she fell on sleep, so gently that the watchers by her side scarcely knew when the change came. The shadow of a great sorrow had come over her home and family circle. May husband, children and sorrowing friends find light in the darkness, looking with assured hope to that heaven of which she spoke while passing through the deep waters! "She shall rise again."

T. C. WIER.

Twenty-five years ago we were not wanting, as Free Churches, in a splendid array of popular pulpit men. We then possessed two of the foremost preachers in England—preachers whose names were widely known outside our own denomination, and who were able to fill our largest chapels with appreciative and enthusiastic congregations. These men were hacked up by, at least, a dozen more, who only came a little way behind them in their possession of the popular gift—men whose names were known far and wide, as well as being household words in Free Methodism. All these men, changed with the change of ministerial roll, were, with a few representative men, fewer men known beyond the limits of our own churches, and fewer men known beyond the limits of the several circuits and churches wherein they have from time to time traveled.

The fact is worthy of a little thought. Indeed, it suggests many reflections and many questions. In the first place, Have we ceased to draw our men from the same order as in days gone by? Is the material upon which we have to work of an inferior kind? No! We think not. Nor are the sermons preached of a poorer type. There might be more apparent earnestness thirty years ago. One thing is certain—there was more rhetoric; and this, we are inclined to think, has much to do with the falling off of the popular man. Our fathers were trained to cultivate their oratorical powers; we have been taught to suppress them. There were so common in our days—viz., the thrills—the ow out of days—as far as the sermon is concerned. They have been relegated to Tom and Dick and Mary Maria of the Salvation Army, and to what has been termed "The Galvanic Monster," the special missioner. Where our preachers of the last generation perorated, we talk; where they were impassioned, we are passive and quiescent; where they made the sermon the work of months, and then carried it, like the Ark of the Lord, for years—we run off the development of an idea, and then lay it aside for the next new thought that crosses our mind. We say nothing against all this. Each age has its own ideal, its own mission, and its own men. We merely mention it as accounting in part for the falling off of the popular preacher as far as our own denomination is concerned. With perhaps one exception, he is no longer a significant example of the cultivation of the oratorical gift—we have no man amongst us who may be ranked as an orator, or as a preacher for the million.

If we turn to other denominations, while we find the same falling off in popularity men, we also find that the few popular men are the orators. We have lately read a volume of sermons by Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, and nothing surprised us more than the splendid rhetorical fire flaming forth from every page—nay, from every sentence. And as for Archdeacon Farrar, whatever may be said to discount his popularity by reference to "his metallic ring" it will be owned by all he uses it to golden purposes.

Some little time ago the Spectator bawled the falling off of rhetoric in modern sermons, and attributed the waning of pulpit power to this cause. Why should we cease to cultivate a divine gift? Why should we cease to appeal to that in man which, when secured, becomes a key to the fortress of his heart and understanding? Why should a man be disgraced in the eyes of the élite of his brethren because he introduces the purple patch, or, to return to our earlier figure, indulges in the thrill? Ah! we are told, these savor of insipidity, of show, of clap-trap. Not necessarily so. That rhetoric has been debased as no other gift we admit; that in its use there is strong temptation to misuse, we admit. But that it necessarily leads to insincerity or in any way supplants thought, we refuse to admit. A sermon without it is like a meadow without a daisy, like a firmament without a star. Daisies and stars may have little real influence upon the actions of every-day life; none the less they brighten the world and make it more attractive. They catch the eye, break in upon monotony, and gladden the heart of man. We want more of them in our sermons. If we can catch the eye, the ear, the heart, the multitude will flock to the doors of our churches and of our chapels, and they will listen to, and be influenced by, the truths we preach and teach.

It is to be sincerely hoped that our rising ministry will not overlook, as the present race of ministers have overlooked, this 'all-important' gift. Our fathers were mighty in the use of this weapon. May our sons follow them rather than us, their timid and conventional sire!—Free Methodist.

Psalm 11, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."
(Verse 10.)

David had sinned—sinned grievously. A good man had gone wrong. He sinned, not because he could not help it, but because he would not. He sinned deliberately (see II. Sam. xii.), seeking to cover one sin with another. He seemed to be growing hard rapidly, until a faithful man of God, fired with holy indignation, preached conviction by the Holy Spirit, into his heart (II. Sam. xii.). Then he repented and said, "I have sinned against, the Lord." The Psalm from which the text of our lesson is taken is his prayer for pardon and for cleansing.

Vers. 1, 2. One who has been falsely accused demands justice; but mercy is that for which the sinner prays—mercy measured by the loving kindness of God's great heart. Pardon, cleansing, the record of sin blotted from the tablet, the stain of sin washed from the heart; for this twofold blessing the penitent prayed. The real penitent longs to be right as well as to be forgiven.

Vers. 3, 4. No attempt to cover his sin, and none to make it appear less than sin. It was sin; sin purposed in heart and acted in life; sin against God, as all sin, properly understood; ever in. The sinner, truly penitent, sees the justice of God's rulings, while he begs for mercy. As one of our hymns well expresses the feeling:

Ver. 5. David seemed to recognize that the "carnal mind is enmity against God;" that by nature he was depraved; but he mentions this by way of further confession, and not as a defense.

Vers. 6, 7. Character, not simply outward demeanor, is seen to be the end of the law. Cleansing is needed—the cleansing of which the sprinkling of the leper with blood into which a bunch of hyssop had been dipped, was a symbol. When God cleanses, we are clean, indeed—whiter than snow.

Ver. 8. True repentance is an agonizing process. "Bones broken" is not too strong a figure to express it. Sin is awful; the sinner so sees it; he "abhors himself;" he is utterly miserable when truly convicted. "The pains of hell got hold upon me" well describes the "woe of the soul with which God's law grapples before the voice of mercy is listened to; then it hears "joy and gladness."

Ver. 9. Shame, self-aborrence, guilty dread. Shall the pure eye of God look upon me? It is not an attempt to escape from God, but a prayer that he would first forgive and make pure, and then look upon him.

Vers. 10, 11. Simple reformation involved in the repentance prompted confession, was not sufficient. The work must be deeper, more radical. He must have a clean heart, a right spirit, and these God only could give. Only a clean heart, a right spirit could hold communion with God, and so the Psalmist prays for them, and that he be not thrust aside as unclean.

Ver. 12. Sin had driven out of his heart the "joy of God's salvation." Without it he was not only miserable, but ineffective. A joyless heart cannot "preach glad tidings" successfully. It can not witness for him who was anointed "with the oil of gladness above his fellows." God gives, in salvation only, but the gladness of it.

Uphold me, my spirit being willing is the sense of the last clause. When one "delights to do his will," being full of the joy of his salvation, he is strong, and safe and useful.

Yer. 13. A present-experience of and of spiritual strength first. Consistency gives courage. Love is God stirs love for man. "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." How can one teach that has not truth in his heart? If you are successful in winning souls to God, it is the power of a joyous experience. Have you no joy? Then pray the prayer of the Psalmist, remember that "a clean heart and a right spirit must come first. Then God will bestow" the joy of his salvation.

Note how frequently the first person of the pronoun is used in this Psalm—thirty-six times, perhaps. Penitence, confession, prayer—these are very personal matters. It is not simply, "My men have sinned," but, "I have sinned," not simply, "We need thy grace," but, "Have mercy on me." It is when the soul feels that it is alone with God—guilty, unclean, lost—that God for mercy goes up; and such cry, if true penitence be there, he always hears and answers.

It is always a choice of masters in which Christ is urging men. It is not by striking off all allegiance, but by finding your Lord and serving him with complete submission, that you can escape from slavery. Then give yourself to him completely. Let him use you as his by whatever marks he will.

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. J. P. DRAKE.

The Conversion of the Jews.

The return of the Jews to their own land has been much stimulated by persecution. Within three or four years 20,000 have come to Jerusalem, while the influx into other parts of Palestine has been without precedent. There are more than 80,000 in the country in all. An era of improvement has also begun. Jerusalem is a new city. The streets have been paved, five hotels have been opened, water is about to be introduced, large factories have been erected, a railroad is almost completed from Jaffa to Jerusalem. With this enlargement of population and revival of trade there has been a marked increase in the rainfall. The factors seem to have been supplied to make Palestine, as of old, "the garden of the Lord."

The conversion of the Jews. More interest has been taken in this than in any other subject. The Protestant Churches have 377 missionaries among them. It is estimated, there are 6,000,000 Jews—this gives one missionary to every 10,000 Israelites—a larger number in proportion than among the heathen. The results of this effort are becoming apparent. Prof. Delitzsch's Hebrew New Testament has exerted a Hebrew influence. Jewish-Christianity, which is not unknown in the congregations of Christendom. Notable opposition of Romanism, there are more than 200 believing Jews in Jerusalem. More significant is the Jewish-Christian movement at Kishinev, in Southern Russia. Its leader, Rabinowitz, a learned lawyer, who has come to the knowledge of the truth through the independent study of the Scriptures, and who is in substantial accord with evangelical teachers, adheres to his original plan of organizing a National Christian Church for Israel, in which such characteristics of Judaism as circumcision, observance of Saturday as the Sabbath, and the like, are to be retained, though not as essentials. He seems to be imbued with the Spirit of Christ, and numbers among his supporters thousands of the Jews of Southern Europe. Is there not much to warrant the hope that the redemption of Israel is drawing nigh?

The above suggests the following facts in regard to the work of a converted Jew among his fellow-Israelites in New York City.

Rev. Jacob Freshman is not only a Jew by birth, but the son of a Jewish rabbi, and, therefore, thoroughly indoctrinated in Jewish doctrine and rabbinical lore. Born in 1844 in Hungary, while still a boy his father removed to Canada to take charge of the Synagogue of Quebec. Here the boy was confirmed at the age of thirteen years, his father officiating. His education, secular and religious, was conducted with the thoroughness characteristic of the Jews, especially the rabbis.

But after a time the rabbi began to doubt, and by a series of remarkable providences was converted to Christianity. The first of his family to accept his new and true faith was his son, who set himself earnestly to the study of the Word, engaged in Sunday-school work; then offered himself to the Montreal Conference, and during fifteen years filled many important pulpits in Canada. This work, though successful, began to arouse the questionings of conscience. Many had sought to reach his people and failed. Ought not he, who knew by experience their difficulties and the way to meet these difficulties, to give himself to the work for which God had prepared him—the salvation of his fellow-Israelites?

He heeded these calls of God's Spirit, relinquished the assured income he enjoyed as a Methodist preacher, and threw himself upon God's providence. On account of the large number of Jews in New York, he chose that city as his sphere of work. At this time Mr. Freshman was married to an excellent and devout woman, a member of one of the oldest families in the Province, whose godly father's home had been a haven to Methodist preachers. She had been converted young, and had been an active Christian worker. She cordially consented to her husband's adoption of a new sphere of work, and has heartily labored with him for the salvation of his people. It is just eleven years since they came to New York, and they testify to God's faithful care and guidance. They have had many trials, but their labors have been blessed. For some time the number of Jews who could be induced to listen was very small. They were invited to Mr. Freshman's rooms, where the prophecies were read and explained, and their fulfillment in Jesus pointed out. Conviction and conversion followed, and the numbers grew. Soon greater accommodations had to be secured. At 17 St. Mark's Place the Hebrew-Christian Church was regularly organized. The congregation has increased, and only $2,000 of the $25,000 necessary to purchase their house of worship remains unpaid. For this sum and the maintenance of their work Mr. and Mrs. Freshman have relied wholly on the Lord. Gifts, large and small, reach them from all parts of the Union, not only from converts, but Christians concerned for the salvation of the Jews. Services are held in the church every Sunday and two evenings in the week. But these meetings represent only a small part of the work done. Much personal work in the way of visiting and private argument is done. The success is remarkable. Scarcely does a communion service pass without the baptism of converts.

The following extract from "Woman's Work in the Far East" shows that the power of witnessing for truth is the same among the heathen in China as in our own Heaven-favored land. The letter was written from Amoy, and it refers to the mission work in Chin-Obiu.

A short account of our last meeting may, perhaps, interest some of the readers of the magazine.

It was a crowded one, nearly one hundred being present, and quite filling the little school-room. Among these were a great many heathen brought by Christian friends, some of whom were in a Christian meeting for the first time in their lives. We began with a few moments of silent prayer, and then, all still kneeling, a hymn of prayer for the Holy Spirit was sung very softly, and after that some ten or twelve of the brethren followed one another in brief, earnest entreaty for God's blessing on our gathering. The leader then announced that the meeting was to be somewhat different from the former ones; it was to be a "witness meeting"—and began by telling the story of Elijah's great gathering on Carmel. The story was told without name and made as graphic as possible, so that for some minutes even our Christians did not know it was a Bible story to which they were listening. Elijah was described as holding a court of enquiry in order to decide whether God or the idols should be worshipped. On the one hand were the Baal priests to witness for their god; on the other, himself, the solitary witness for Jehovah; and the people were to judge whom they would serve. The story finished, the heathen present were asked who among them could stand up and bear witness for the idols they worshipped, who among them had been saved from the power of sin—say, from opium-smoking or gambling, or any other sin—by their idols. Had the idols saved them from fear of death, or given them peace of conscience or lasting happiness? If so, let them stand up and bear witness. A dead silence followed this appeal, and again the old story—"There was no voice, neither any that answered." Then the witnesses for Jesus were called on to stand up and testify to what He had done for them. Quite a host of witnesses were eager to spring to their feet and tell in simple, heart-stirring words how Jesus had saved them, some of them from grosser forms of sin, some from fear of death and hell—all of them uniting to bear witness that "He is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by Him." The heathen listened with most earnest attention to these testimonies, and they were still more stirred when one or two general questions were put, to which the Christians responded with one heart and one voice. "Brothers, has Jesus indeed proved a Savior to you? Has he given your hearts peace? Are you afraid to die? Besides Jesus, is there any other that can save?" To these questions came the readiest and heartiest of answers from all sides of the room. Then came another pause; the unconverted present were asked to weigh the evidence they had heard and to "choose this day whom they would serve." Any who were willing from henceforth to serve the Lord were asked to stand up and say so, that we might pray for them. The men rose together and had to be asked to wait for one another and let each speak in turn. The first had come with a praying Christian friend, and in a few broken sentences he told how first he hated "the Doctrine," but lately had been thinking more about it, and how that night he had decided to be a Christian. The other two were friends from a country station, brought by a preacher. They had been men of bad character, but of late had been hearing the gospel, and what they had listened to that night had decided them to be Christians.

Then a young lad at the back, who first heard the gospel in the hospital, stood up, and said, "I mean to follow Jesus from now on; pray for me;" and another, for whom much prayer has been made, and who has often been "almost persuaded," but has been kept back by fear of men, stood up, and said, "Brothers, pray for me." A solemn time of prayer followed, one after another pleading in short, touching petitions, broken often with sobs, that God would keep those who to-night had confessed Jesus as their Savior. Once or twice between the prayers some one started a verse of a hymn, such as "Come to Jesus just now," "I'm not ashamed to own my Lord."

When at last we rose from our knees there was hardly a Christian present whose eyes were not full of tears. I Tim. 1, 12, was given as a parting text, and then, with the ringing of another hymn, the meeting closed and the friends slowly dispersed. Please pray that the results of these gatherings may be seen in more earnest consecration and more hearty endeavor to bring souls to Christ.

"In Debt."

The old excuse for not giving for church building, etc., often serve their turn to ease the conscience or stiffen the neck against giving to the cause of missions. On the other hand, I have heard some preachers make the flimsy excuse of others' indebtedness to them for not giving much to missions. How much lighter than vanity will God esteem the statement, "I've contributed $100 to the spread of the gospel because my people were that much behind on my assessed salary!" Oh! brother, how much of the free-will offering and how much of the compulsory was in that contribution?

A man who attempted to raise some money on a subscription paper for a necessary church out West related his experience as follows:

"The first man I went to was so very sorry, that the fact was he was so involved in his business that he couldn't give anything at the present time. Very sorry, indeed, but a man in debt, as he was, owed his first duty to his creditors.

"He was smoking an expensive cigar, and before I left his store he bought of a peddler who came in a pair of expensive Rocky Mountain cuff-buttons.

"The next man I went to was a young clerk in a banking establishment. He read the paper over, acknowledged that the church was very greatly needed, but said that he was owing for his board, was badly in debt otherwise, and did not see how he could give anything.

"That afternoon as I went by the bare-ball grounds I saw this young man pay fifty cents at the entrance to go in, and saw him mount the grand stand where special seats were sold for a quarter of a dollar.

"The third man to whom I presented the paper was a farmer living near the town. He also was sorry, but times were hard, his crops had been a partial failure, the mortgage on his farm was a heavy load, the interest was coming due, and he really couldn't see his way clear to give to the church, although he freely acknowledged it was just what the new town needed.

"A week from that time I saw the same farmer drive in town with his entire family, and go to the circus, afternoon and night, at an expense of at least four dollars.

"The Bible says, 'Judge not (that ye be not judged),' but it also says, 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' And I really could not help thinking that the devil could use that old excuse, 'In debt,' to splendid advantage, especially when he had a selfish man to help him."—Youth's Companion.

Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry. How the heart of the apostle would be stirred, were he living in our day, over the fact that one thousand million of our race are wholly given to some form of idolatry! He stated the measure of the obligation to the heathen world in words that many preachers in our Christian land have failed to comprehend. "I am a debtor both to the Greeks and the Barmatians, both to the wise and the unwise; so, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." Imagine a man under the pressure of such profound convictions standing in a Christian congregation and saying: "Brethren, the Conference has made it my duty to take up a collection for foreign missions. Our Annual Conference will meet in a few weeks, and I must make my report. The stewards will take up a collection." Nothing is said about the preacher and congregation being debtors to the heathen world, nothing about their duty to Jesus Christ who died for their redemption, no appeal in behalf of a world in the darkness of an idolatry that so profoundly moved the heart of Paul in Athens, no obligation suggestive beyond the Annual Conference report. Paul was ready to give himself to this great work "as much as in me is." These words measure the obligation that rests on every man who holds a commission from Jesus Christ. Paul kept back nothing in this work. No wonder Paul and his companions turned the world upside down. Within three centuries they had revolutionized the religion of the Roman Empire. What could the modern Christianity do were it moved by that spirit that moved St. Paul?—Dr. I. G. John, in Missionary Reporter.

Even the best informed and most experienced members of the medical profession are only too painfully aware of the great imperfection of their art, and its inadequacy often to fulfill in a satisfactory manner much that it professes and undertakes to accomplish. The lack of particular internal medicines, for instance, is often as varied as the individuals treated, so that it is often a problem to tell in advance how the remedy used is going to work in any individual case.

It is not so with exterior applications for the relief of pain, however. If there is one thing that has been thoroughly mastered it is the relief of pain, and there is nothing known that does it so effectively as Mansfield's Magic Arnica Liniment. It is as useful for animals as for man, and, indeed, is constantly used by veterinarians and stock raisers all over the country for the relief and cure of painful diseases that can be outwardly treated, as well as for injuries. There is no preparation of greater value to have in case of emergency, and no family should be without a bottle. Mansfield Drug Company, Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

Peculiar

To tell in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Ichabod. It is a remarkable fact that the two tickets in the last campaign most bitterly opposed by the Picayune and Times-Democrat were both elected. "Straws show the way the wind blows."

In our late election a saying of President Lincoln has been brought forcibly to mind: "You can fool some of the people all the time, and you can fool all the people some of the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time." And some people have been very much fooled—indeed, astounded at the tremendous results of the contest.

Within 19 years the McAll Mission has grown from a single room in Paris, with 40 chairs and 2 workers, to 134 stations scattered all over France, and including such important cities as Marseilles, Bordeaux, Lyons, Nice, Rochelle, Nantes, etc., and in Algeria as well; 18,061 sittings, and more than 600 persons engaged in the work. In 1890 upward of 27,000 domiciliary visits were made, and for adults alone 16,111 services were held. The total attendance was 1,237,688. $33,910 was derived from the United States, $19,909 from England, $7,752 from Scotland, and $13,340 from France, Switzerland, etc.

If our new mayor will address himself earnestly to a faithful and impartial execution of the laws that are on the statute book, he will find himself backed by all the Christian people in this city. The Christian believes in obedience to law, because obedience to the powers that be is ordained of God. He also believes that rulers should be a terror to evil-doers in the execution of law, because God says the law was made for the lawless. Let the new mayor inaugurate his term of office by impartial execution of existing laws, and he will win the good-will of every worthy man and woman in town.

There are 955 religious papers in the United States whose combined circulation is about one-eighth of all the newspapers published in the country. The Methodists publish 147 papers, with a circulation of 650,000; the Roman Catholics 127 papers, circulation 750,000; Baptists, 126 papers circulation 500,000; Presbyterians, 53, circulation 508,000; Protestant Episcopal, 47, with a general circulation all over the country. Lutherans are most in Pennsylvania and the West; they have in all 37 newspapers, circulation mostly local. Congregationalism is strongest in New England; its 21 papers circulate about 150,000 copies. The Christians have 14 papers, with a circulation of 500,000 copies; the Jews have 13 papers; Spiritualists, 10; Universalists, 11; Swedenborgians, 9; United Brethren, 7; Unitarians, Disciples and Friends each 6; Mormons, 4; Church of Christ and Salvation Army each 3, and the Shakers and Reformed Episcopalians each 1. The "Evangelical," "Undenominational," and "Unsectarian," together have 227 papers, with a combined circulation of over three-fourths of a million.—Exchange.

The Louisiana State Election.

The long struggle is ended at last. Tuesday, April 19, brought to its close a political contest which began in the Legislature nearly two years ago. The conflict was precipitated by the Louisiana Lottery Company, and has been waged by that company with unremitting earnestness and all sorts of rascality for twenty-three months. Our readers are familiar with the struggle, and we need not repeat the details. Suffice it to say that the anti-lottery cause gained strength every day of the campaign; and it came to the polls on the nineteenth confident of a final victory over the infamous corporation. So it turned out. Mr. Foster has been elected by a large majority, and the Legislature is of the same complexion of politics. The anti-lottery people of Louisiana are receiving the congratulations of all the outside world for their splendid victory, and well do they deserve these congratulations! Never was there a more determined fight, made against such fearful odds. Hundreds of prayers were answered by the victory won. Truly may the Christian people of Louisiana, looking back upon the long conflict, say, "The Lord of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

Louisiana has redeemed herself from the scorn of the world, and erased from her escutcheon the foul blot of the lottery infamy. Glory be to the Lord of Hosts!

The vote for governor stands as follows: Foster, 79,475; McEnery, 46,918; Leonard, 28,386; Breaux, 12,179; Tannehill, 8,502.

Paul's Desire and Fear.

What we learn of Paul in the Acts of the Apostles and in his own Epistles reveals the fact that his life and work were completely dominated by one intense desire and one ever-present fear. From the day that the scales fell from his eyes and he received the Holy Ghost in Damascus to the day that his head rolled off the block in Rome the one all-absorbing desire that flamed in his great soul was, "the furtherance of the gospel." It manifested itself on all occasions. It so ruled his actions as to make him become "all things to all men that he might save some." There were no difficulties so hard, no obstacles so great, no self-denials so burdensome, no sufferings so intense as to quench the ardor and fervency of his zeal to enlarge the sphere of gospel operations. With a devotion never surpassed by mortal man, he concentrated his splendid abilities and spent his long life to the one purpose of "furthering the gospel." With that purpose in mind, he said, "This one thing I do."

On the other hand, there was with him an ever-present fear lest he should do something or say something that would operate as a hindrance to the progress of the gospel. This fear was a great power in his life and work. Indeed, it exercised a tremendous influence upon both. One sentence shows the power of this fear over him: "We suffer all things lest we should hinder the gospel of Christ." What an insight does that give of the character of this wonderful worker! Willing to do anything to further the gospel and willing to suffer everything rather than hinder that gospel! The desire to further the gospel which flamed out in life and speech, and the fear of hindering the gospel always present as a conservative force to prevent the desire from running into the excesses of fanaticism, show this great preacher and worker as the best model for imitation.

As in Paul's life, so in the life of every Christian worker of to-day, these two keep the balances even in all successful work. The master workman of to-day is he who, like Paul, possesses this desire and this fear in just proportion the one to the other. He is the man who will contribute most to the "furtherance of the gospel."

Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University.

We are in receipt of the Register of the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University for the current scholastic year. The sixty-one theological students and candidates enrolled represent twenty-four of the Annual Conferences of the church and twenty Southern colleges and universities. Free scholarships of the value of one hundred dollars each have been held this year by graduates of the following colleges: Randolph-Macon, Va.; Wofford, S. C.; Emory, Ga.; Emory and Henry, Va.; Southern University, Ala.; Centenary, La.; Tulane University, N. O.; Southwestern University, Tex.; Hendrix, Ark.; Central, Mo.; Kentucky Wesleyan and the Academic Department of the Vanderbilt. Among those who have held scholarships this year are Rev. Thomas Carter, A. B., of Tulane University, New Orleans, and Revs. Frank R. Alexander, H. W. Van Hook and Robert H. Wynn, all A. B. graduates of Centenary College. Mr. Van Hook is a member of the class which graduates in June. The theological course embraces studies in New Testament Exegesis, Hebrew, Systematic Theology, Biblical and Ecclesiastical History, Homiletics, Church Polity, Pastoral Theology, Elocution and Vocal Music. Nearly all of the theological students, in addition to their studies in the university, engage actively in preaching at the various missions and suburban churches of Nashville, and many large and influential revivals of religion have occurred in connection with their labors in neglected parts of the city. Tuition and room-rent are free, and board in Wesley Hall costs about ten dollars per month.

Ministers and Salaries.

The following paragraph we commend to our young ministers. We clip it from Dr. Johnson's address to the Senior class of McCormick Seminary, as reported in the Interior:

As you stand here at the threshold of your holy ambassadorship, the one word I would stamp upon your memories and burn into your hearts is this: magnify your office. Not yourselves, not your gifts, not your achievements, but your sacred office. Hold it as so manifestly supreme in your thought that it will loom large before men. You are not going forth to be hired by a corporation or a congregation as a clerk would be, or an architect or a treasurer, or a hod-carrier. You hold your call and commission from heaven. God is your employer, and God pays wages, and pays well. The equivalent you are to get for your toil will come from him, not from some Board of Trustees. The question whether you are getting a fair return in money for your labor is never to be raised. It is inapplicable. You can not make merchandise of preaching the gospel. The work of the ministry is the work of God, and how can it be adjusted to material value? The work of the ministry is the work of saving, and how are you to strike the balances between dollars and souls? Salaries will be given you, but only and solely that you may never have one anxious thought about your present or future temporal interests. If they are not sufficient for that, God will have an account to settle with a penurious church. But never do you cherish the notion, or allow it to be cherished by others, that the salary is your pay as the hired employee of a congregation. Let men understand that money can't buy you! The Lord is your paymaster, as he is your employer, telling you how and what to preach, and paying you your wages.

Tattered Tempers.

We were looking over the advertising columns of one of our exchanges, and saw that a certain article was specially recommended because its use left no "tattered tempers." Surely we thought this must be a good thing, for there are too many "tattered tempers," and anything that will decrease the number will be of great service to humanity. A great many of the unpleasant things done and said in the domestic circle have their origin in "tattered tempers." The business world is afflicted greatly with these "tattered tempers." The church life is often made disagreeable by these same "tattered tempers." Many a poor man is worried every day by his own "tattered temper." Many a woman has her life rendered miserable by her "tattered temper." It seems to be almost a universal scourge.

Just as a piece of cloth is tattered by rubbing the edge, so human tempers are tattered by the "rubs" incident to everyday life. And just as the cloth "frets and frays" first at the edge, so human tempers "fret and fray" a little at a time. The process carried on in the cloth reduces it to "tatters," and fretting indulged in the disposition reduces tempers to "tatters." The injunction of the Psalmist on this point is very wholesome: "Fret not thyself." Evenness of temper is a most admirable condition, but whether it can be obtained outside of the grace of the Holy Spirit's presence is very doubtful. The article advertised may be a good thing, and its use may even up the temper somewhat on that special line; but, like the cloth, the temper has several edges and needs something that will keep all of them even. That something is clearly indicated by this Scripture: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee!" That is the only sure remedy for "tattered tempers."

"Did Not Our Heart Burn Within Us?"

J. B. A. AUBRENS, D. D.

This was the utterance of the two disciples at Emmaus, after Jesus had revealed himself to them by blessing and breaking the bread. It gives ample food for reflection.

Most of us are mistaken as to the effect of our preaching. It operates not directly, but indirectly. It aims at conversion and Christian maturity of the hearers. Divine life results from the gospel sermon as the oak from the acorn. The acorn planted, it depends on the season, soil and weather to cause germination, life and growth. It is, hence, the preacher's sacred duty to present a pure gospel, to explain Scripture with Scripture, avoiding "vain babblings" and confusing anecdotes, setting forth the undiluted Word of God with holy enthusiasm.

This Word of God is quick and powerful, causes heart-burning, elicits holy aspirations, religious longings. Hope and fear in battle array. This, under favorable circumstances, develops into a life which is hid with Christ in God.

It matters little what scriptural theme may be treated. All have generative power, cause ignition, heart-burning. Should the theme be the soul's wreckage and hell, fear will cause unrest. If the goodness of God, his benefactions, neglected gratitude will pierce like a dagger. If life and immortality, the consciousness of fitness for same will make the hearer feel ill at ease. If repentance and conversion, the latent nobility of the soul, reluctant, is aroused. The burning heart admits that it ought, should and could be made whole in Christ. Still burning, the exclamation is begotten: It shall be so! Other themes, by different routes, reach the same end.

When this heart-burning has been produced, repentance and prayer present themselves uninvited. "God, be merciful to me, a sinner!" is the repeated and ejaculatory prayer. Now God proves himself faithful and true, forgiving the penitent's sin and bestowing the pearl of great price.

The clock, wound up, but stopping, requires only that the pendulum be put in motion. Motion given, it proceeds to show time. The grace of God is suited to the human heart, and the human heart to the grace of God. Preaching must put the pendulum of the heart in motion. That accomplished, repentance, faith and regeneration will surely follow.

Another illustration: An invalid takes the prescribed medicine and is restored to health. But we know that medicine, frequently nauseating and poisonous, can not directly bestow health. Lost health is restored when the diseased organs throw off the malady, allowing a resumption of the normal functions. But it was the medicine which caused the necessary reaction. Without it, death might have ensued. The preaching is to the hearer like medicine. Without it the sinner will be—may be—lost. Preaching causes heart-burning, a reaction, which may result in newness of life.

A College President at Quarterly Meetings.

MR. EDITOR: In company with Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E., I had the pleasure of attending quarterly meetings at Percy's Creek and at Woodville, last week. At Percy's Creek our people have a neat church in the valley and a comfortable parsonage on a hill whose picturesque surroundings might charm a poet's eye, and did inspire the last poetic productions of her who was known through this ADVOCATE as "Invalid." Her grave is near the church and the clear, flowing stream that she loved so well.

Bro. Hurst and family live in the parsonage and keep things in comely order thereabout. This is a country station, and proposes to support its preacher notwithstanding hard times. They gave me $600 in endowment notes, and had given a year ago $200.

If all country churches would do as well, Centenary would soon double the endowment; and they will all do something if called on. I find the people everywhere willing to take hold of our plan of endowment. They see its simplicity and how it confides in them. At the close of the Sunday morning's service two little girls applied for membership in the church in so artless and sincere a manner as to bring tears to many eyes.

At Woodville, Centenary's claims were advocated by the presiding elder and myself. They had previously subscribed to the endowment, and besides have Edward McGee College in their midst, which demands and receives help from the community. The Quarterly Conference requested the presiding elder to appeal to other churches in the district to aid in improving the outfit of Edward McGee College.

This is a hard year on church colleges, but they are surviving and, to some extent, thriving. Bro. Johnston is "zealously affected" for Centenary, and puts in a strong plea for her wherever he can.

Mr. Morgan's recent gift of half a million to endow Col. Auchmuty's New York Trade Schools was a noble use of wealth. Men who trade understand the need and use of money to promote mechanical skill. Higher science, classics, morality and Christianity also need to be promoted by money. Liberal-minded men in the South will yet understand this and endow our church colleges. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

NOTES.

The "Saints" have demonstrated what sort of stuff they are made of.

The Times-Democrat has shot several Partisan arrows since the election, but they fell far short of the mark.

The nearer the church approached to absolute obedience of her Lord the nearer she will come to being absolutely irresistible.

When Mr. Morris withdrew his Lottery Amendment, the Picayune said "the mission of the Anti is ended," and we said it had just begun. What of that mission now?

Gideon's army was mightily strengthened by the decrease of its numbers. What an invincible host the Lord would have here below, if all the cowards would desert!

New words are not always the sign of new ideas. Words, "pompous and ponderous," are often mere sound. The good old Anglo-Saxon is the best for a Methodist preacher.

The Ram's Horn says: "When any one finds it easier to give a dollar to the theatre than to give a dime to the church, there is something wrong about that one's religion." It is a difficult matter, though, to make them see it that way.

The man who walks by sight says: "I see it is good for me, and, therefore, God sent it." The man who walks by faith says: "God sent it, and, therefore, it is good for me." The two sentiments are very different, and the difference is very clear.

Again we must warn our obituary writers that some of them are greatly exceeding the limit established by the Publishing Committee. Either shorten, or send the money, or expect no longer obituary to appear. We have on hand now enough obituaries to occupy all our space for six weeks to come.

After all the interminable talk about "success in life," we believe that when the final account is rendered it will come to light that the most successful man will be the man who has been most useful to his fellow-men. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me," is the judgment that will determine the truly successful life.

A man can do all that he ought to do, although he can not do all that he would like to do. It may, indeed, be that a man could have done more than he is now able to do, if he had been more earnest and faithful in the days that are gone. But, with things as they are, whatever it is a man's duty to do he can have power to do. God never gives responsibility without being ready to bestow strength and grace for its discharge.—Sunday-School Times.

One of the Northern Methodist Conferences, in its report of temperance, crystallizes the whole question of the liquor traffic into this short paragraph: The whole question is narrowed down to this: Is it the battle of good against evil; is it whether the home shall be made desolate that the bar room may prosper; is it the cause of the church against the saloon. There is no middle ground, and there can be no compromise.

An exchange has this: That was an exceedingly happy misquotation said to have been made by a little girl in response to her father's request for the "Golden Text": "Keep your soul on top." That is the only way we can "keep the body under." This should be the constant position of the soul. Unfortunately with the majority of people, perhaps, the most of which they can boast is very like the self-congratulations of the old German who had rolled down hill with a log: "Vell, I was on top half der time."

The Bible don't seem to agree with the modern law of heredity which science has so learnedly formulated and so vauntingly published. If there is such a law, it seems not to work uniformly, which we believe is of the essence of law. The Bible reader can easily recall many instances when the vaunted law don't seem to work at all. We mention only one. Ahaz, one of the worst men, was father to Hezekiah, one of the best men, and he in turn was father to Manasseh, who was even worse than Ahaz. A law which works after that manner can hardly be called a law!

But the time has now surely come to inaugurate a new era in the life of the church. What we need to-day is a church that can meet contemporary problems with contemporary methods; a church to which each new need of the age shall suggest some fresh and adequate method of meeting that need. We want a church that can attack the social problems of the present time with something more modern and effective than tracts and soup-houses. We want a church whose home missionaries shall be earnest, scientific students of present economic conditions, and whose foreign missionaries shall take with them, not only Bible and catechisms, but schools, machinery, books, pictures and trades. The best evangelists, either at home or abroad, are the men who are most in touch with the spirit of the present age.—Zion's Herald.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Rev. George Inge is holding a successful service in Columbus, Miss.

Quoth the Picayune: "It was a famous victory." No thanks to the Picayune for it.

We are glad to note that Bro. Campbell, of the Texas Advocate, is "gradually improving."

A dispatch from Rev. B. Carradine, Monday morning, says: "The revival sweeps on; over 100 converted and sanctified during past week."

We have received a new edition of Dr. W. C. Black's "Christian Womanhood." This is the sixth edition, which is evidence of its popularity.

Once in a while all editors have to remind their readers that they do not agree with all the expressions of their correspondents. So we say in regard to some things in this issue.

Rev. J. E. Collins, a local preacher from Marianna district, Alabama Conference, passed through our city last week en route to the Pacific Conference as a recruit for our Western work.

J. R. Pepper, the indefatigable Sunday-school worker of Memphis, has our thanks for his admirable "Fifth Annual Report of the Sunday-school Board of the Memphis Conference."

In the death of Mrs. S. Deacon, at the age of eighty-one years, New Orleans Methodism has lost the last link which bound it to the early days. We trust some one will prepare a suitable memoir.

Robert A. Barnes, of St. Louis, died recently, and bequeathed $900,000 for the founding of a Methodist hospital in that city. This is the largest gift our church has ever received, except the Vanderbilt bequest.

Bro. W. L. Linfield, our pastor at Lake City, Miss., has sent us $6.25, contributed by his people to the Russian Famille Relief Fund. We have turned it over to Henry Ginder, treasurer of the Red Cross Society, in this city.

Rev. J. W. Malone, of North Mississippi Conference, sent us last week $15 contributed by his church for the Russian sufferers. The money was turned over to Henry Ginder, Esq., treasurer of the Red Cross Society, in this city.

The day before the election the Times-Democrat had a fearful exhortation to the people to reneke in unmeasured terms the "Young Returning Board." What a rebuke it was! Thirty thousand votes majority to sustain that Board!

Bro. Medlock, the treasurer of our Church Extension Board, says he has some pressing calls for money. Will the pastors take their collections for church extension and forward same to him as soon as practicable? Do not delay, as the finishing of some churches depend on it.

The Easter number of the St. Louis Christian Advocate contained good reading from several Bishops and editors and preachers of both our church and the Northern Church. It was a choice issue, harring the pictures on the cover. The man who made those pictures ought to quit now.

Is it loyalty to church vows when you work more for outside papers than for your own? We know some who are doing that unloyal thing! One of our exchanges says:

A preacher always hurls himself when he is disloyal to his own church and its institutions and enterprises. Nobody has any respect for a man who is untrue to his vows.

Rev. J. E. Bradley.

The grave of the above-named dear brother is in the cemetery of this place, and marked only by a wooden board which will in a few years decay.

This dear brother was a useful Christian minister, and greatly beloved by the Conference and charges that he served, and it seems to me that his resting-place ought to be marked by something more substantial and enduring than wood.

I write, therefore, to suggest that, at least, one hundred persons, preachers and others, contribute one dollar each toward the erection of a suitable headstone for the grave of this dear brother. Receipts will be promptly acknowledged through the ADVOCATE.

Forward to the undersigned at Lake Charles, La. THOS. J. UPRON.

BROOKHAM'S PILLS cure Stomach-Headache.

We often read in the papers of "multitudinous hegets." To my mind it is a phrase that has no meaning at all. I see no multitude in begetting your property to charitable purposes when you are gone out of the world and have not the possibility of longer enjoying it. What I like are multitudinous donations.—Lord Shaftesbury.

Be Considerate. Don't worry your friends and family with that worn and faded appearance. Get a bottle of Creole Female Tonic. It will cure your diseased organs and change your pallid cheeks to the rosy hue of health.

Many years have gone since a good family doctor originated Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Special Notice to Preachers.

The preachers in charge will confer a favor on the publisher if they will report in full as to collections for new and old subscriptions to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at their approaching District Conference. A representative of this paper expects to be present at same.

The cheapest and best remedy on earth for pain is Salvation Oil. Only 25 cents a bottle.

A Word of Inquiry.

I wish to know the whereabouts of Rev. James M. Turner, a superannuated preacher in the Texas Conference.

I have business of importance with him, and will be very thankful to any one for his postoffice address.

His great-niece,

Mrs. C. A. PIERCE.

L. Grunewald Company, Limited.

We desire our readers to notice the advertisement of the L. Grunewald Company, Limited, which reappears in this week's ADVOCATE. This company is one of the most reliable dealers in first-class Pianos, Organs and other musical instruments in the South. Parties who have dealt for years with this house commend it highly. The celebrated Steinway, Knabe, Fischer, Sohmer, Behr and Mehlin Pianos are sold by the L. Grunewald Company; also superior Organs for church and parlor use. Parties desiring goods in their line should not fail to visit their large emporiums at No. 127 Canal and at Nos. 14-20 Baronne street. A full stock of choice music will also be found at this establishment. Prices and terms for Pianos and Organs are low and reasonable.

Never be economical with politeness. It pays to be courteous, especially to children and servants, who catch your tone and manner, and reveal you to your friends in a way that you hardly dream of as possible. The manner of good society does not denote or imply insincerity, nor need the sincere person be brusque or boorish. That is a gift worth striving for, if it have been denied to that unsatisfactory being, the "natural man." Indeed, the natural man or woman is not always the most agreeable of associates. It is the disciplined, cultivated man or woman whom we enjoy meeting, and are generally the better for living with.—Christian Intelligencer.

Mrs. Anna P. Ball, secretary of Woman's Board of Missions for Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, desires special attention called to the meeting of the district society at Charleston, on Wednesday, May 11, next, at ten A. M. Bro. B. E. Saunders, of Charleston, has engaged to have conveyances at Oakland for delegates and officers. The members of the District Conference are cordially invited to be present at the session of this Woman's Board. Brethren, let us do what we can to encourage these co-laborers in the great field of mission work.

I exhort all concerned to join in making this meeting at Charleston, both of the Woman's Board and of the District Conference, an enthusiastic rally for "spiritual holiness in these lands." Let each one who will need conveyance from Oakland at once notify Bro. B. E. Saunders, at Charleston, Miss.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

Water Valley, Miss.

The Mississippi Holiness Convention will convene in the town of Pontotoc, Pontotoc county, Miss., May 3, and will close on Sunday night, the eighth (D. V.). We are looking forward to the meeting with the greatest interest, by spreading scriptural holiness over these lands, by bringing holy men and women together in conventional work, adding their testimonies to the scriptural teaching by way of confirming the wavering and establishing the weak. We are endeavoring to secure the attendance of the Rev. B. Carradine, of St. Louis, and are expecting the Rev. W. A. Dodge, of Atlanta, Ga., with others, to be with us.

Let all pray for the baptism of "fire" each day from now until the meeting, and fast every Friday in humiliation of soul, so the Spirit may have the right-of-way through our lives and be ready to do the will of God as the angels do it in heaven. May the Lord put it into the heart of very many of our preachers to attend.

J. W. POSTON.

Oatarrhal deafness is relieved by using Johnson's Anodyne Liniment as directed. Try it.

There are in all our lives certain points at which important decisions have to be made, decisions in regard to our homes, in regard to our pursuits, our education, our companionships. Many of these may affect the nature of one's whole life, and some may involve one's destiny for eternity. All are very important, and such decisions ought to be made as in God's sight, not rashly nor lightly, but prayerfully and earnestly seeking always divine aid and the counsel of God's Word and his Holy Spirit.—Sabbath Recorder.

From personal knowledge we recommend our readers needing photographs to go to the artist, E. Simon, No. 183 Canal street. None better in this city.

OBITUARIES.

CAMMACK.—Mrs. LUCRETIA A. CAMMACK, daughter of Seth and Temperance Corley, and wife of J. D. Cammack, died at her home, near Crystal Springs, Miss., July 25, 1891, full of years and full of the "beauty of holiness." She was born in Marion county, Miss., Feb. 5, 1817, and at the age of three years came to Copiah county, where she lived for seventy-one years. April 16, 1843, she was married to J. D. Cammack, who now survives her, and was the mother of thirteen children, sixty-five grandchildren, and twelve great-grandchildren.

At an early age she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and remained a consistent, devoted member until the remainder of her life. Her home was the home and haven of rest for the itinerant minister in the early days, when Methodism in its infancy led its pioneer life on the frontiers of Mississippi, and when houses of worship were "few and far between." Her home was often the place of the prayer meeting. Schooled in the doctrines and method of Methodism in the olden times, and reared under the ministry of a Winans, a John C. Jones, an Owens, or a Nixon, she was full of piety and a Christian pure and simple. The simplicity of her manners, the purity of her motives and the influence of her many modest virtues impressed themselves upon her family, her friends and large circle of acquaintances for lasting good. Her mother love and devotion were tender, unselfish and true, and the best test of her merits was her children, who loved her, and her husband almost idolized her, for she "ordered her house aright," and was a true and faithful wife. Her neighbors loved her for her genial companionship and neighborly offices, and "the poor" revered her for her pity, generous aid and pathetic sympathy. She was indeed, "a mother in Israel," and she filled out her "three score years and ten" with a full, rounded life and a beautiful symmetrical character, and then in the quiet, peaceful shades of the evening of life she leaving behind her in her last talks to her children, as she called them around her bed, unmistakable evidence that her redeemed spirit quitted "this earthly tabernacle" and swept out beyond the stars to a higher mansion to the skies.

"Wrapped her cloak around her,

What more could we wish of a human life than thus to live and thus to die? And to the poor old man, halting to the grave, and tottering on the crumbling verge of a long lifetime, what brighter palm can be stretched to him across the "dim and shadowy land" than that she has gone up to shining and stands, with hand outstretched, at the "pearly gates," beckoning him onward and upward? We shall meet our loved ones again some time, somewhere in the "beautiful light of God."

Crystal Springs, Miss.

BROOKS.—Again death has invaded the home and taken one of our purest and best women, Sister MATTIE E. BROOKS, the wife of W. S. Brooks. She was born Feb. 18, 1852; married to W. S. Brooks, May 8, 1867; died at her home, March 12, 1892. She was sick quite awhile, and her sufferings were intense, but, Christ-like, she murmured not.

She was a model Christian; converted when but a child true to the church, loyal to her husband and devoted to her children; but death has done its work. Oh, how true the fower, with all its beauty and loveliness, is to be cut-to-day is, and to-morrow not! The sun shines to-day; to-morrow, darkness and gloom. But, alas! is there never to return? Must the heart of the husband and children always be broken and grieved because she is not? Nay, verily; God the Father, who has the light, will some day in the near future send his angel to gather up these broken hearts, link by link, and transplant them in a family circle in climes above. Then they will be done, O God, on earth as it is in heaven. May the blessings of God rest on the bereaved husband and children, and make glad their hearts with his presence!

BARK.—Mrs. MARIA BARK (nee Dorsett) was born March 9, 1829, and died Dec. 25, 1891, in Kemper county, Miss. The exact date at which the deceased joined the church is not known, though she became a member of the Methodist Church in early life.

For five or six months before her death she seemed to anticipate an early change from time to eternity. The last time that it was the privilege of the writer to be with her was just on the eve of her departure for Conference. During prayers with her, the presence of God was manifest. She seemed considerably wrought up under the influence of the Spirit. On Christmas Day, the day of the birth of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, while angels were singing, "On earth peace, good-will toward men," she passed away.

SHULTON-LAUREL.—Infant son of H. and L. B. Shulton, died April 8, 1891.

Laurel was a sweet little child, and much loved by his parents and relatives; so it was very hard to give him up. But God saw best and took him to himself, where he is now free from sin and all temptation, safely folded in the loving arms of Jesus, and will, doubtless, be waiting at the beautiful gate for papa and mama, grandma, and all the loved ones. May God save them all! Is the prayer of their pastor, A. D. MILLER.

Barlow, Miss.

GORE.—Bro. N. N. GORE, son of Rev. Thomas A. and Sister Elizabeth Gore, was born Nov. 8, 1848, and died at his home in Calhoun county, Miss., Jan. 6, 1892.

Bro. Gore professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, South, when he was eleven years old, and lived a consistent Christian till death. He was licensed to exhort in 1883, and labored in this capacity until his departure. Bro. Gore was married in early manhood, and became a possessor of a happy home for ten years, when the hand of death laid hold on his companion, leaving him with five little children to mourn her departure. But now he joins her with the happy throng in the praise of God in the beautiful city, and leaves a companion and nine children to weep for him.

Bro. Gore was a devoted husband and a careful father, teaching his children the fear of the Lord; and the fruit of his labor is seen in the pious life of his home. He was afflicted many years before his death, but did not complain, knowing that these light afflictions result in our eternal good.

Our neighborhood has lost a good neighbor, the church a consistent member, the wife a devoted husband and the children an affectionate father. But our loss is his gain; we weep not for him, dear companion and children. We shall see him again in that world of bliss, where we shall greet our fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, children and friends, to part no more.

CLARK.—Entered into life eternal, Feb. 17, 1892, near Greenwood, Texas, the sweet little spirit of ROY CLARK, baby boy of Edward and Olie Clark. Little Roy was born in Jefferson county, Miss., Jan. 25, 1891, making him one year and twenty-three days old, and moved with his parents to Texas some time in January, 1892, where he lived only a few weeks.

Little did we think when he left us, that he never would see his bright, blue, sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks on earth again; but, by the help of God, we will meet him in heaven, where there will be no more parting. Little Roy leaves a mother, father, two brothers and scores of loved ones and friends back in Mississippi to mourn his loss. "A tiny feather from the wing of love" has been called from earth to dwell with Jesus, who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me." So, grieve not, dear mother, as one who has no hope, for your sweet baby has gone to the One who gave him. One who loved him.

DAVIS.—On Dec. 4, 1890, the angel of death visited the home of Bro. Richard S. Davis, and took his infant son, IMMAN COOPER. Imman was born July 14, 1890.

God, who doeth all things well, has taken this little babe to himself. May the parents be sustained in this affliction by God's grace, and follow the little lamb which their heavenly Father has taken to his own bosom!

M. H. MOORE.

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cyrennot P. O. La. Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Wolff's Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Wolff's Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone.—Rev. Jno. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tune. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred songs. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Messiah's Herald.

After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 131, 135, 137, 139, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Westeyan Methodist.

The Indian Mission.

BY REV. W. W. CAMMACK.

According to promise, I will give to the readers of the ADVOCATE a brief account of our new mission among the Choctaw Indians of East Mississippi; and, without giving a history of the origin of this mission, I will simply confine my letter to my memorandum book. We reached Union about the first of January, which is about the center of the majority of the Indian population of East Mississippi. We were kindly taken care of by the good Methodists of the place until we could secure a boarding-place, which we found with Dr. Lewis and his daughter, at Union, Miss. About the time we got moved into our new home it commenced raining, then sleeting and snowing. During this time an Indian, by the name of Johnson, moved in the neighborhood to have his child treated by Dr. Lewis. I at once sought the acquaintance of Johnson, and he and I soon became very intimate. The child, a girl about fourteen years old, gradually grew worse, and in a few days died. To me this was a sad scene and a great disappointment. On the morning the girl died I had started to the Indian's house. I met him and his family in a wagon. After a short conversation he said to me, "Puss Cuss done gone out."

I asked, "Is she dead?" He replied, "Yes; went out about daylight."

He then got out of the wagon, and said, "You want to see him?" I said, "Yes."

He went to the back part of the wagon and raised a bed-quilt, and there lay the corpse on the floor, wrapped in a blanket. I turned to him and tried to offer some words of comfort. I don't know whether he understood me or not. The tears came in his eyes, and he said nothing more, but drove away. I prayed that God would sanctify this affliction to the conversion of that family. This was my first experience.

After the freeze, and as soon as the water courses had fallen sufficiently, I started out to hunt up an Indian by the name of Simpson Tubby. This young man had joined the Methodist Church the year under the ministry of Rev. J. Long. I was told that I could get him as an interpreter. I had all my preparations upon this one thing; and it did not seem for the high waters which cut off all communications for two weeks. I think I would have succeeded in getting him, for he was anxious to go with me, as I learned afterwards. I found him in Winston county, and soon learned that he had freed himself to a good white man for six months. He promised me, however, to go with me after the first of July. At his earnest request, I left an appointment at his father's house for the fourth Sunday in February. I returned home somewhat disappointed, but not discouraged. I then set out to survey the field in general, and find out all I could about their condition, spiritually and otherwise. I am glad to find their condition much better than I had expected. Many of them can read both Choctaw and English.

Most of them can converse very well on common subjects in English. I find that the Baptist and Catholic churches are doing a good work for them. The former occupy most of the territory in the counties of Newton, Jasper and Leake. I make it a point to read, sing and pray with them when I have an opportunity. I am having some encouragement, sympathy and support of my friends and all those interested in the work. I believe the way will open and the work develop as I advance.

I looked forward with great anxiety to my first appointment which I had at Isham Tubby's house in Winston on my first missionary tour. The day having arrived, I started on Friday evening, spent the night in Pulla-Philadelphia, Saturday visited some Indians on the route to my appointment, and reached Watson Morris' house at noon.

Morris is a half-breed, but his wife is full-blood Choctaw. I ate dinner with them. This was my first experience in eating with Indians: I enjoyed the dinner very much. Everything was nice, and they were not expecting me, either. I reached my appointment Sunday morning in due season. I found everything nicely arranged, and the congregation looking and waiting for the preacher. I preached at eleven o'clock from Luke xiii, 3, the subject being repentance. I thought this would be the proper way to begin, as repentance is the first thing anyone must do before they can make any further advance in the Christian life. At the conclusion of the service I called for penitents. Four knelt for prayer. In the afternoon I preached again to the same congregation, the subject being experimental religion. I then asked all who would seek this personal knowledge of forgiveness of sins to give me their hand. Five came forward, and seemed to be in earnest. I conducted this service about as I would to white people in a private house. The congregation was small, consisting of this one family, one other Indian, and about a dozen white persons. At the morning service I called on Simpson Tubby, the young Indian who joined our church last year, to pray. He did so. His prayer was feeling and appropriate. At the evening service I called on him to make a talk. He did so, and his remarks were to the point, and spoken in good English. He attributed all of his reformation to the moral influence of the white man with whom he lived. I would say just here that it is my opinion that if all these Indians could have had such moral influences around them as this one has had, to-day their condition would have been much better.

On my return from this place I came down through the northeastern portion of Neshoba county. Here I found the largest number of Indians yet found in any one community. These are called Bogue Chitto Indians. They are without preaching, and are the least disposed to be religious of any I have found. They are opposed to everything in the way of education and Christianity.

From here I went down in the eastern part of the county, where the Catholics have a church and school established for the Indians. I took care, however, not to meddle with any of the priest's flock. I found several families here called the Phillip Indians, who are not taking any part in the school and church. They want Protestant preaching, and were glad to know that we had sent them a preacher. I went from here home, having made the entire trip on horseback.

A few days after my first appointment I received the following letter from a young Indian who was present, which shows how they appreciate our efforts among them:

Copied from Winston Co. Miss. Mar. 1st 1892

Rev. W. W. Cammack

I will tell myself to write you a few lines to hear if you did get home well. You was complaining of your head when you was with us. I hope you are well of it. I would like to know if you had any talk with Indians at Benard's. I hope you did. I don't see how we can wait till the 4th Sunday. For you said to go with me for every one that was in the house all the people are so happy up with your work I will be glad to see you at any time for you will do good. I do know I love you for you is good. The Lord will help you every where you go. Received your card that night you must write to me as soon as you can. I will be glad to hear from you. I hope you will pray for me in your traveling. I will close for this time goodby. Your,

SIMPSON TUBBY.

I will ask you to send me some books of all kind and some for my brothers and sisters they are going to try to learn.

This is a true copy of the original, and does well for one who has never been to school.

The wonderful growth and advancement of this organization was shown by the large delegations of women assembled in annual convention, April 21, in the town of Monroe. Before this State was organized by Miss Willard, ten years ago, only one single Union existed in all the borders of Louisiana, and now we saw present hundreds of delegates and visitors, all intent upon witnessing the proceedings of the W. C. T. U., assembled in the opera house.

The destruction of the liquor traffic, the temperance crusade, can not be called popular themes, for this cause has brought trials hard for gentle hearts to endure, for it is not easy to bear public rebuke and criticism from those who have heretofore dispensed only words of love and praise.

However, the good people of Monroe really seemed to be as kindly disposed toward us as we were toward ourselves, and truly we met with nothing to molest our self-complacency; but everything to make us comfortable and happy.

Our speakers were all from the South. Mrs. Mary M. Snell, of Mississippi, gave a daily Bible reading every noon. She was heard with fixed attention, and her sweet, eloquent voice uttering words of life constrained all hearts with the love of Christ and humanity, and blinding them anew in slatterly love to each other.

It was a happy thought which caused us to send for Mrs. Snell as our evangelistic leader on this occasion, for she is a woman of extraordinary spiritual power, and is, in this respect, gifted beyond any woman I have ever known. Her voice is sweet, her manner womanly, and she has an easy flow of eloquence that makes the listener forget everything but her earnestness and her subject.

Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, had the Waynesville School of Methods on her hands, for which she desired the Louisiana convention to subscribe. She had no trouble in raising the assessment of $300 for this State. Miss Griffin is a splendid specimen of a class of self-reliant business women created by the late hardships of our Civil War. She, too, is gifted as a speaker, and is always entertaining and instructive, and invariably acceptable to an audience. Her pleasant, genial manner, her excellent good sense, and her inexhaustible fund of wit and humor, cause her to be much sought after as a speaker on public occasions.

Both these ladies are much beloved in private circles, and have many friends wherever they are known.

Miss Belle Kearney, of Mississippi, is interested in the young woman's branch of the W. C. T. U., and will make an organizing tour of Louisiana as soon as the convention is over in Mississippi. She is an eloquent speaker, and wins golden opinions of all classes wherever she goes. It is needless to bespeak for her sympathy and aid while she goes about doing good, for she is always received with a joyful welcome wherever she appears.

The fourth speaker at the convention was Mrs. Mary R. Goodale, whose excellent work for the W. C. T. U. in this State has been so long known and approved. She is now president of the State organization, and, with commendable zeal and earnestness, is already in the field speaking and organizing Unions in hitherto neglected places.

The prayers of the Unions follow her, for she is faithfully remembered, and, doubtless, the fruit of her busy hands will be seen in the success which will attend her efforts, and made visible in the reports of the next annual meeting, which will take place in Lake Charles, next year.

Miss Clara Baer was introduced, and gave a thoughtful, interesting paper on "Physical Culture." She is a Louisiana girl, highly accomplished, and worthy the position she holds as a teacher of her specialty in the Sophie Newcomb College.

Mrs. B. M. Drake.

With a sad heart we learn from the ADVOCATE of the death of this servant of God, eminent for her personal worth and as the widow of her distinguished husband. Early in my ministerial life I became acquainted with this Christian family, as well ordered in all respects as I have ever known in a life of over fifty years. It was presided over chiefly by this Christian matron in the absence of her husband, who gave his life to the work of the Master, leaving the training of the children to the supervision of the wife. She was talented, educated, of a talented family, of whom Dr. Magruder and Prof. Magruder were members. Under the judicious management of Sister Drake, two ministers and all of twelve children were consecrated to God. It was a delight to witness this Christian household in its uniform peaceful and quiet association, where this writer spent many a happy hour in his pastoral visitations. Although a very frail and delicate woman, my friend outlived a vigorous husband some thirty-two years. My heart throbs with ecstasy that soon I shall meet these beloved ones on the other shore, where the saints shall greet each other at Jesus' feet, never to be severed.

Easter.

In one of the best cyclopedias there is this in reference to Easter: "The festival of Easter, commemorating the resurrection of Christ, used to be observed on the fourteenth day of the moon—i. e., near the full moon—the same as the Jewish Passover. But the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, ordered Easter to be celebrated on the Sunday next succeeding the full moon that comes on or next after the vernal equinox—March 21—thus making Easter and the related feasts and fast-days movable holidays."

Webster has this: "A festival of the Christian Church commemorating our Saviour's resurrection, and occurring on Sunday, the third day after Good Friday."

Dr. Clarke objects to the translation of the word Pascha, Paske, or Passover, to Easter; but says, that as the Council of Nice fixed the vernal equinox to the twenty-first of March, the first vernal moon is that whose fourteenth day falls upon the twenty-first day of March, or the fourteenth day after (not the twelfth); hence it appears that the next Sabbath (our Sunday) after the fourteenth of the vernal moon, which is called the Paschal term, is always Easter day; and then, without any objection to the observance of the "Easter of the Christians," but only to the word or name, he adds this: "The earliest Paschal term being the twenty-first of March, the twenty-second of March is the earliest Easter possible; and the eighteenth of April being the latest Paschal term, the seventh day after that, the twenty-fifth of April, is the latest Easter possible," and would always fall on Sunday.

The editor of Keble's "Christian Year," alluding to Easter, says: "The first day of the week, Sunday, has been hallowed from the apostles' times as commemorative of the resurrection, and is, as it were, a weekly Easter."

Keble, in a poem on Easter, writes: "Enthroned in thy sovereign sphere, Thou shedd'st thy light on all the years. Sundays by thee more glorious break, 'An Easter day in every week.'"

Dear Bro. "Gilderoy," I have "followed the hooks," too. Suppose we exchange. "SISTER SADLER."

FROM THE WORK.

R. V. T. Y. Ramsey, Corinth, Miss., April 27: "Last Sunday was another red-letter day for Corinth. I received a class of fifteen into the church, eight of them young men. Have had fifty accessions since Conference. The growth is steady and solid in all our church interests. State Convention of the W. C. T. U. meets here May 5."

Rev. Thos. J. Upton, Lake Charles, La., April 6: "Please say to the readers of the ADVOCATE that Rev. G. S. Inge will be at this place with his tabernacle, and begin a meeting May 22. This change from the fifteenth to the twenty-second has been made on account of illness. I entreat the prayers of all Christians for a gracious outpouring of the Spirit on that occasion."

Rev. H. H. Ahrens, Jonesville, La., April 27: "Foremuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which God hath wrought among them, even so it seems good to us also to write unto you concerning some of the good things God hath done for us on this circuit. One Sunday-school has been organized at Jonesville; number of scholars increasing. Have received five persons into the church. Three young people were gloriously converted and two brethren reclaimed at a recent Sabbath's service. Quarterly Conference will be held at Jonesville. Am making preparations to have a good time."

Rev. J. T. Howell, Pleasant Hill circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We have been in labors abundant recently. Preached three times yesterday; had a good day all around; think we are on rising ground. Have adopted at some of my appointments the old-time plan of preaching Saturday and Sunday, and find that it is profitable for both preacher and people. They come out on Saturday, and get in good trim of mind to 'listen well' on Sunday. Our Sunday-schools are thawing out (we are on the northern circuit of the Conference), those that went into quarters. Have two schools that braved the wintry blasts the entire season. The visit of our presiding elder (Bro. Morehead) recently was a benediction to our church here. He is a noble Roman. May his tribe increase! Come to our District Conference, Mr. Editor."

Rev. D. P. Bradford, P. C., Forest and Morton charge, April 26: "This is my third year on this work, and in some things we have made progress. The three churches that compose this work paid three years ago $350 for ministerial support. This year they are paying $685, and pay the presiding elder and pastor in charge monthly. They owe neither of us a dollar up to date. At Pelahatchie our membership has doubled. Improvements have recently been made in our church at Forest. At Morton we have a large 'aid society' doing good work. There is one thing troubling us—a few of our men are drinking, and how to save them is a 'perplexing problem.' We have no 'poundings,' but continued kindness to the inmates of the parsonage. We have enjoyed a visit, and some good sermons from the assistant editor recently."

Rev. H. M. Ellis, Natchez, Miss., April 26: "The records of Wesley Chapel, Natchez, Miss., for 1892, show: An average attendance at Sunday-school of more than 100; 45 members have been received, 3 have died, and 24 have been variously disposed of, and 11 infants and 2 adults have been baptized. For foreign missions, in cash and subscription, we have 75 per cent. over our assessment. Bible cause collection was $10.75. The Woman's Missionary Society raised at a public meeting $10.50 for clothing a little girl in one of the mission schools, and have made and forwarded the prayer-laden token. The old parsonage has been sold for $800, and, after paying the debt on it with interest, we have $200 toward a new one, for which a Building Committee was elected at the last Quarterly Conference. They are at work, and we hope before long to occupy the parsonage."

Rev. H. B. Vandenburg, Meadville, Miss., April 25: "Not having seen anything from Meadville circuit in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, I thought I would write a few lines, if only to say that by the grace of God we are still praying and struggling to 'let our light shine'—that is, there are a few faithful ones who are persuaded that 'there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few,' and they continue on, believing that in due season 'we shall reap, if we faint not.' But, Mr. Editor, when we look around us and see the indifference, the lukewarmness of those who call themselves followers of him who said he 'came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many,' when we view our churches carrying all this dead weight, is it not a wonder that we exist at all? Our church at Meadville has replaced the small bell, that has for a great while notified its members of the hour of service, with a much larger one. We trust that, when rung, its tones will silence the excuses offered by some, that they failed to hear the bell, and therefore, did not get to service on time. We need more pure, undivided religion on this circuit. We are praying for it."

Rev. Will P. Jones, Roxie, Miss., April 23: "Having read so many letters in the ADVOCATE from the different brethren in the ministry, I thought I would inform you as to how we are moving on the Roxie charge. The bad health of my wife prevented our moving down until last Thursday, though the most of my appointments have been filled from a distance. This charge has no parsonage; but, in order to keep house, we rented one, and found, when we arrived, that, with an outstanding fund of $20 and several interested and energetic people of this town, it had been comfortably furnished from bed-room to kitchen, and, indeed, further, for in the yard was plenty of nice wood all ready for use. When the 10.30 A. M. train came in we were met at the depot by several ladies, who escorted us to the parsonage, where we were received by Sister Wieben. At twelve o'clock dinner was announced, and I assure you we did credit to the many dallies prepared for us by the good ladies. What remained from that dinner was put away in our safe, and our feast lasted nearly a week. The pantry was well stocked, and will not need replenishing for several weeks. We feel thankful that our lot has been cast with such kind-hearted people. Different denominations manifest the deepest interest in our welfare. My congregations have been splendid, and I am constrained to believe that a prosperous year awaits us. We ask your prayers for the advancement of Christ's kingdom among us."

Rev. Wm. Schuble, Mooringsport, La., April 22: "At our last Annual Conference, Mooringsport circuit underwent a remodeling process. The appointment beyond the lakes was belated upon the Arkansas Conference, and we received in return no mean slice of the venerable Caddo circuit; hence this field now embraces four appointments. Mooringsport is a little village bordering on the lake that bears its name. Nature did not forget to touch this spot with grace and beauty. Though so near Arkansas and Texas, we still boast to enjoy the singular rapture of sunset sceneries. The shore is dotted with shade trees planted by God's own hand. Just on the border nestles the village church and the parsonage. Both buildings show signs of past glory; but now, like the village, they are nearly depopulated. Here we have but few members; congregations invariably small. The parsonage has one occupant; and, to be sure, he enjoys the grace of solitude. Brethren, if you need recreation, come up and enjoy it with me. Success at this place can not but be small at best. Taking the parsonage as the golden mile-post, we come to Mt. Zion next. This church is situated on the public road, seven miles south from here, having a lonely and solitary appearance, such as none but a neglected Methodist Church can put on. It has looked over decades of temporal prosperity and spiritual rejoicing; but, lo! itself forsaken to-day. How scribble Isaiah's exhortation: 'Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion!' Our membership here numbers forty-eight. Public worship fairly well attended; a growing Sunday-school. Turning east eight miles, we find among the eighth place a neat house of worship. How easy to get the appropriate name—'Pine Hill!' Truly, it is inspiring to worship in such an attractive edifice. At this point we have thirty-two members, a flourishing Sunday-school, a weekly class meeting, and a Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society. Foreign missionary collection in cash and subscriptions, $15.35. We have good reasons to look forward to a great outpouring of the Spirit upon this community. And now, locking arms with Bro. Whalley at Greenwood, we pass on to Caddo Chapel. The chapel is a credit to that community—the Simpson neighborhood. Only ten miles southwest from Shreveport, it holds out a standing invitation to its city friends. In two years it has made for itself an almost enviable reputation; and when the history of its origin is considered, no excuse will be left why any people (especially Christians) should be without a church. Not yet two years ago some generous men of that neighborhood met to consider the advisability to build a house of worship. They had long since come to the conclusion that Christianity (and that in some shape like Methodism) would be the only means to uplift and highest culture. A heart resigned, enthusiastic, meek. Accordingly Dr. H. S. Denula, Mr. L. B. Phillips, Bro. D. A. Simpson, W. M. O'Jum and S. H. Green began the work. Dr. Denula and Mr. Phillips—neither one professing religion—constituted the Building Committee. They became practical; the real gave expression to the ideal. Unceasingly they labored until it was finished. There was no call on the Board of Church Extension. All was done without the least assistance of any preacher. Their hope was realized. Truly, it was a noble enterprise. Toil and self-denial are well compensated by sweet fellowship. By faith we are brought into a yet sweeter fellowship with Jesus. The chapel also has a Sunday-school, which promises good results. Music and singing are great factors in our worship at this place. Come and see. Quite a number of the ADVOCATE taken; yet, at some places our paper has been supplanted by other religious papers, particularly their own. Brethren, the Cypress Camp Meeting comes in August. Don't fail to be on hand."

SPRING.

BY MRS. A. M. TOMLINSON.

"The voice of Spring" 'tis the voice of Spring!

Hark! over the hills she's coming,
Tripping with light footsteps light,
And a merry carol humming;
She comes with the song of singing birds,
And the music of rippling water,
And her beautiful tresses are flowing free—
Our bright-eyed winsome daughter.

There's a sound of mirth: there's a sound of mirth!

Her rose-red lips are smiling,
And soft is her silvery laughter clear,
The charmed hour beguiling;
Wherever she passeth along the way,
The fresh green leaves are peeping,
From under the green of her lady feet,
The sweet wild flowers are creeping.

O the world grows young, the world grows young

At the sound of her mystic blessing,
As she lays on the hearts of young and old,
Her warm hands soft caressing;
And we welcome her ever with joy untold,
Our beautiful lady young forever,
As dear to our hearts as the sunlight's gold,
When the wintry days are over.

Church Extension.

ANNUAL MEETING OF BOARD.

Having sent last week to all the papers our abstract, we add a few items which may be of interest to the church.

It was well attended—only six of the twenty-seven members being absent—and was the shortest we have ever had—only two days, the result of judicious and faithful work of committees beforehand.

A Special Committee, to which subjects were referred, suggested a free use by the Secretary of the press of the church and placed $500 at his disposal for the purpose, and also urged that our cause should receive more attention at the Annual Conference. Both of these recommendations are eminently wise and opportune.

A Special Committee on Annuitants brought in a concise and clear report, which was adopted and will be printed in full in our annual report, and from which we make this extract: "That donations of money subject to annuities will be accepted in no amount less than one hundred dollars, and in larger amounts only in exact hundreds."

The Secretary felt impelled to say to the Board, "That the difficulty of collecting loans is attributable in some measure to the stringency in money matters is not to be questioned, but that this is the only cause or the chief cause we do not believe. Injudicious, not to say reckless borrowing, the expectation of indulgence, and, in some cases, of cancellation of these claims, and an almost utter obliviousness of the necessity for prompt payment, coupled with a weak sense of obligation to pay at all, as the borrowers are a part of the body of the lenders, has had much to do with it," and the Board concurred heartily and took immediate steps to close up all overdue loans and was very careful in making new ones.

Two other items from the message of the Secretary were heartily endorsed by the Board, as follows:

"The manifest tendency to multiply machinery in the conduct of church extension work I regard with concern as possibly indicative of a proneness to deconnectionalize, and thus destroy the work of our hands. If these independent organizations could be correlated with our General Board and its auxiliaries, so that they would work in unison, they might prove helpful to each other, and the church extension work of the denomination become more efficient and be more fully appreciated."

"Appeals through the newspapers and by other devices for special help in individual cases usually discount systematic giving, and sustain to it about the same relation that street begging does to organized charity. They should be met by kind, but positive and unabated opposition."

Hon. Jas. H. Bowden, of Louisville, felt constrained by press of private business to resign his membership in the Board. His resignation was accepted with regret, and Mr. George M. Rogers, a well-known young and active Methodist of the Clifton charge, this city, was elected in his place.

The Bishops, as a Committee on Nominations, suggested that the election of an assistant secretary be deferred for one year, and the Board acquiesced. The corresponding secretary was authorized to employ such assistance as might be found necessary, and pay for same subject to approval of Committee on Finance.

Rev. F. E. Hoss, D. D., editor of Christian Advocate, Nashville, and Rev. W. B. Palmore, of St. Louis Christian Advocate, looked in upon the Board, and were heartily welcomed. Both were invited to address Board at their convenience, and Bro. Palmore made some very interesting statements of our work among the Cubans at Key West.

Grants were made to eighty-four churches, aggregating in donations $30,000, and in loans $23,000. These, with a few contingent appropriations, in which we hope to have the Board of Missions join us, will make it necessary to raise during the current year fully $50,000 for donations, as the Conference Boards retain one-half of what is collected by the preachers on assessment. If churches meet the installments of loans made them as these mature, we will be able to pay during the year without embarrassment the new loans granted.

After extended and close observation, reaching over nearly ten years in this field of labor, I am thoroughly satisfied that the destiny of the work is in the hands of the preachers in charge—the pastors of the church. If they will follow the directions of the Discipline, and "take up a collection in every congregation annually for church extension," success is inevitable; if they do not, failure is an assured certainty. The most earnest pleading by the Board, the most piquant writing by our best editors, the most dashing campaign of the Conference by Secretaries, the employment of the apparently most apposite expedients will not avail anything like so much as the steady, earnest, systematic canvass of each pastoral charge by the preacher sent to serve it. We do not undervalue the services of Bishops, Board, elders (presiding) and editors, for there is much to be done by each of these, but to the hand to hand work of the pastor we look for the result so much to be desired.

The Woman's Department was in session at same time with our Board; but I will let Miss Helm make her own report, only premising that her work shows gratifying progress.

Long-Face Christians.

We hear a great deal said now-a-days about long-face Christians. These characters (so called) sometimes get more than their share of abuse, while the happy Christians (so called) get more than their share of praise. But let us see if there is not something to be learned from this. There are some professors of Christianity who think all those who oppose sociables and church entertainments, fairs, etc., are too straight-laced in their piety, and too strict with their children, hence they are denominated "long-face Christians." There is a tendency with them to discount true piety and gravity, and to encourage lightness and the gaiety of the world. They would have you laugh always and weep none; but the Bible says, "By sorrow the heart is made better," and that "it is better to visit the house of mourning than the house of revelry." It also says, "Be not conformed to this world."

The Apostle Peter, in speaking of the Saviour, says: "He gave us an example that we should follow his steps;" and the prophet said, "He was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."

It would be well for those so called Christians who take part in "the vain pomp and glory of the world," and never burden their hearts with the salvation of souls, to turn their laughter into weeping and their rejoicing into mourning. They should put on long faces, at least, until they get right with God. Sorrow and heaviness are not incompatible with Christianity, as we find from the experience of the Apostle Paul. He that never feels like weeping over lost sinners, and being burdened with the worth of immortal souls, has need to be born of the Spirit of God. "He that goeth forth weeping bearing precious seed will, doubtless, come again, bringing his sheaves with him."

While it is the privilege and duty of the Christian to be always rejoicing, wearing a happy face, let him beware of a spirit of lightness and worldly conformity which tends to destroy the life and spirituality of the soul.

Call for a State Prohibition Party Convention.

A State Convention of the Prohibition party of Mississippi is hereby called to meet in the House of Representatives in Jackson at eleven A. M., Tuesday, May 17, 1892, to elect delegates to the National Convention of the Prohibition party, which meets in Cincinnati, June 29, 1892. Also to nominate candidates for presidential electors, and to transact such other business as the interests of the party in this State may demand.

Each county will be entitled to double the number of voters in the convention that it has Representatives in the Lower House of the Legislature.

All citizens of Mississippi, without regard to their past political opinions and affiliations, who are opposed to the continued legalization of the liquor traffic in State and Nation, and who desire to secure those moral, political and financial reforms in government of which our country stands so much in need, are cordially invited and earnestly urged to attend.

The Preacher in Politics.

There is in our part of the country a decided, if not well-defined, opposition to the preacher in politics. The why of this has never been apparent to me. To admit that he is such a person that he may be an instructor in righteousness for to qualify his hearers for citizenship in the New Earth, and then to deny his right to be an instructor in righteousness to fit his hearers for citizenship in this present evil world, is the wisdom of folly. These two offices stand or fall together. If one is right, so is the other; if one is wrong, so is the other. If it is right to preach righteousness, it is right to work righteousness. The idea that the ohnroh exists for the sole purpose of saving the souls of men, and that it has nothing to do directly with making them better citizens, or guiding them to decisions that in the most important way affect the national life, is to me not only erroneous, but pernicious. The preacher is the direct descendant of the old prophet who spoke for God in all matters bearing upon the extension of the kingdom of righteousness, whether it was the encouragement of the good or the antagonism of the evil. It is a grievous mistake that is frequently made, that religion is only to fit us for the life to come. In the volume of the Book it is written that the appearance of the grace of God to men was for the purpose of teaching us that, denying ungodliness, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world.

Now, no country can rightly be called Christian whose politics are given up wholly to denying righteousness. If the kingdoms of this world are ever to become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, it will be when they are claimed and held for him by the children of the kingdom.

By virtue of his position in the community, his education, his devotion to every form of good, his constant contact with every form of human suffering and want brought on by vice, his consecration to the uplifting of the race, the preacher is, of all men, most entitled to warn against all unrighteous ways, and to counsel and to lead in all great State or national reforms. Pity the future of any country when the preachers, the watchmen upon the towers, fall in their duty to the trusting citizens sleeping within. There are numerous wrongs in our State and national life that must be rectified. Let our ministry lift up their voices against those vices that have the permission and protection of the State. I have often wondered why it was that the entrance of the devil in politics was hailed with such delight, and the church with wide-mouthed horror. I have for a long time held that the pulpit should use its opportunity for instruction in the whole field of morals—social questions, temperance, labor, the condition of women, the nature of government, responsibility to law; for these are all moral questions. Paint and mahogany no more constitute the pulpit than standing erect and wearing pants constitute a man. It is the life of earnest men, the example set before men, the place for the unfolding of every subject pertaining to the advancement of human interest. When the pulpit shows a zeal for the present as well as the future welfare of the world, then will men be drawn to it as they are to a felt want. The preacher is, of all men, best suited for the championing of all reforms, political or social, for he is, of all men, the furthest removed from selfish aims and ends. The words are: "Prepare ye the way of the people; cast up the highway; gather out the stone; lift up a standard for the people." JUNIOR.

Indian Mission.

MR. EDITOR: Enclosed find a letter from Bro. W. W. Cammack (our missionary to the Indians in Mississippi) to myself, and also one from an Indian to Bro. Cammack. If you have space, please publish them, so that the people may have an idea of how he is progressing with his work, and what the prospects are. He wrote me some time ago that he was very much encouraged in his work, and that the way was opening and brightening before him. Bro. Cammack's letter was not written for the Advocate, but I hope he will excuse me for having it published, as I think it will do good. The following are the letters and card. Please publish them in full, if convenient, and I hope that the call for books in the Indian's letter will strike a responsive cord in the heart of some good brother or sister.

Brethren, sisters, shall we allow the poor Indians to beg for books, and also for the Bread of Life, and us not respond? Oh, that God may open our hearts and pocketbooks to respond to every call from these destitute people!

We need about $150 yet to pay Bro. Cammack's salary for this year, and then we need some so much to buy books to put in his hands to distribute among them, and then we ought, by all means, to put that Indian in a good school, and educate him to preach and teach.

Brethren, can we not get four men that will pay $25 each for the purpose of keeping him in school for one year? I suppose that will pay his board and tuition for ten months in a good country school, and probably he could learn as much in a good country school for the first year as anywhere.

Brethren, you that have the means, please let me hear from you. Who will be the first to respond to this $25 proposition? Please let me have the four at once, and let's put him in a good school. However, if any desire to help in this good work, and do not feel able to give so much, please give what you can, and it will be thankfully received. State in your letter to me how you want it used. Send, as before, to me at Barlow, Copiah county, Miss. I received $1 from a lover of missions, Oak Ridge, Miss., last. Well, I am waiting.

A. D. MILLER.

Barlow, Miss.

Philadelphia, Miss., April 7, 1892.

Rev. A. D. Miller—

Dear Brother: I received your letter some time ago, and ought to have answered before this. I have moved to Philadelphia, and have selected the hardest field that I could have selected among the Choctaws of East Mississippi. But it is the most destitute field I have yet found, and for this reason, if no other, I think it is the place where I should work at present. I have found about four or five hundred Indians within twenty miles of this place who are without preaching. The most of these are the Bogue Chitto Indians, and they are the worst Indians in Mississippi, and the least disposed to be religious. The only Indian we have in our church here, however, is a Bogue Chitto, and I may be able to reach them through him, or some of them, at least. This is the Indian about whom you asked me in your last letter. He is at work with a good Methodist brother about thirty miles north of here. I have met him twice. I believe he has been converted, and I believe he wants to preach, although he did not tell me so, but has told others so. I will give you a copy of a letter and also a postal which I received from him after my first appointment at his father's, which will give you some idea of him, and how they appreciate our efforts among them. I will give it just as he wrote it:

MR. EDITOR: For the encouragement of all the brethren of the Mississippi Conference and of the entire church within our bounds, I herewith offer for publication a paragraph from a private letter recently received from one of my dearest and most highly appreciated friends:

Anthony, Fla., April 20, 1892.

Rev. G. A. Powell—

My Dear Friend and Brother: Last week I received from Bro. W. M. Thornton, treasurer Joint Board of Finance of our (Mississippi) Conference, $37.50 as my apportionment of the first quarter's distribution of the Conference fund under the new plan. From the complaint made about the number of collections by different brethren, I did not know but the plan would be discouraged. If it proves successful, surely it will be a great benefit, and will lighten the cares and burdens of many suffering and needy claimants.

May God bless the Joint Board who devised this "quarterly installment plan!" May great blessings rest upon the dear old Mississippi Conference which adopted the plan, and upon all who have contributed to it to make it a success!

Sincerely and gratefully, your friend and sister,

E. M. MONTGOMERY.

Brethren, no exhortation or application is needed to supplement or complement the foregoing endorsement of this wisely devised plan. Thank God for the success achieved in the very incipency of the movement.

Let us swell the figures for the next distribution.

"The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with all. Amen."

CLARENCE A. POWELL.

Brandon District Conference.

The twenty-sixth session of the Brandon district (Mississippi) Conference, M. E. Church, South, was held at Carthage, April 15-17, 1892. Our new presiding elder, Rev. C. McDonald, after having held religious services, called the Conference to order promptly at ten A. M., April 15, and presided with commendable dignity and efficiency throughout the entire session.

The recent floods and continued unsettled weather operated against a full attendance of pastors and delegates, as Carthage is thirty miles from the railroad, and in the extreme northern part of the district; but, notwithstanding these and some other minor drawbacks, an almost average number was present, and the Conference, from the beginning of the Sunday-school Conference, on the fourteenth, to the close of preaching services, on Sunday night, the seventeenth, was enjoyable, interesting, profitable and successful.

The people of Carthage and vicinity feel that the meeting was a spiritual treat and great blessing to them, and the brave-hearted brethren, who faced bad weather and worse roads, felt happy to see that their efforts were appreciated. The preaching was earnest and powerful, and much above the average at our District Conferences.

The delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: W. M. Thornton, Irvin Miller, J. A. Turner and A. J. Brown. Alternates: W. J. Bell and L. M. Cox. Pelahatchie was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Conference during its session:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Brandon District Conference that the treasurer of the missionary society of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the M. E. Church, South, be required to include in his report the amount of money paid to each charge that receives aid from the domestic mission fund, and that said report be published in the Minutes of the Annual Conference.

Resolved, That we recognize in the ADVOCATE a religious paper of which we feel proud, and its weekly visits are a blessing to our households and to our membership generally.

Resolved, That we regret exceedingly that our people are not patronizing the ADVOCATE as they should, and we pledge ourselves to do all we can to increase its circulation.

Resolved, That we believe it to be the duty of every Methodist family to take a copy of our church paper, and we hope there will be a great improvement in the future on this line.

BOOKS.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE UNMASKED. By Rev. W. T. Hogg, A. W. Hall, Syracuse, N. Y. Price, 10 cents.

This is just what its name is. The so-called Christian science is exposed and shown to be an arrant humbug.

HYGIENIC TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D. M. L. Holbrook & Co., New York. For sale by Geo. F. Wharton, New Orleans, Pa. 25.

The author of this little book is professor of hygiene in the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women, and editor of the Herald of Health, and he has given a very readable treatise in which there are many valuable suggestions. His remedies are wholly hygienic, and accessible to all. The book is addressed to the patient, and we believe almost any ordinary case will be greatly benefited, if not cured, by following his remedies.

CLERICAL POLITICS IN THE M. E. CHURCH. By Prof. L. T. Townsend, D. D. McDonald, Gill & Co., Boston. Price, 25 cents.

This little book contains the addresses of Prof. Townsend before the Boston Preachers' Meeting. They created a flutter when made, and still continue before the public in the present form. The professor raised a storm which has not ceased yet. He says some sharp things and lays bare some queer things. He has been belabored by some of his brethren, but still sticks to his positions. It is a rare reading.

PERIODICALS.

—AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST has a fine list of good articles for its readers. It is fully illustrated and costs only fifteen cents, or $1.50 a year. Orange Judd Company, New York City.

—ST. NICHOLAS, for May, from beginning to end is bright with pictures and entertaining with articles of special merit. Our young people will enjoy this number. We know. Century Company, New York. Price, $3.

—THE MECHANICAL NEWS is published twice a month by James Leffel & Co., New York, for $1.50 a year. It is devoted almost entirely to mechanicals, and is, we judge, a reliable journal in all matters pertaining thereto.

—HISTORIA is capital. Wat Tyler, Simon Kenton, Napoleon Bonaparte, The Mexican War, General Marion, Josephus and the Trojan War, all have a part in this, the May issue. This is an illustrated monthly for young people, and is good. Historia Company, Chicago. Price, $1.

—THE CENTURY, for May, among other good things, has A Gray Jacket, by Nelson Page; Characteristica, by Dr. Weir Mitchell; Homesteads of the Blue Grass, by James Lane Allen; Architecture of the Columbian Exposition, and Christopher Columbus, by the eminent Spaniard, Emilio Castelar. SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—May 8, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LA PRADRE.

Delight in God's House.

Psalms lxxxiv, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Blessed are they that dwell in thy house."—Verse 4.

This Psalm, remarkable for its devotional spirit as well as for its great beauty, is evidently the outburst of a heart that has been denied the privilege of worship in the sanctuary. We know nothing of its authorship, but it is probable that it is the composition of one of the Levites, written during the time of the captivity.

The desire to "appear before God to worship in his holy temple" is strong in all devout hearts, and is entirely consistent with the words of our Lord to the woman at Jacob's well, in Samaria. Wherever the real worshiper may be, he can find God; yet he craves to go where "prayer is wont to be made;" to the place where his fellow-worshippers assemble and public worship is held.

Vers. 1, 2. "Amiable"—that is, lovely and beloved, for both thoughts are suggested; amiable in particular to him. He was hungry for the service of the temple. The desire, expressed by the words "longeth, . . . fainteth, . . . orieth out," had become the all-absorbing desire of his whole nature. He yearned for the holy services of the temple of "the living God;" for some special manifestation of his presence and power.

Vers. 3. Israel in captivity—the temple desolate, its altars the nesting-places of birds—the voice of the exile refusing to "sing the Lord's songs in strange land"—what a pathetic picture!

Vers. 4. Happy, fortunate, because undisturbed, always in close communion with God, praise would be unceasing.

Vers. 5, 6, 7. He who delights in God's house, who worships there "in spirit and in truth," draws all his comfort, all the inspiration of his life from God. His strength is in him. Happy such a man! The sources of his power and his joy are inexhaustible, infinite. Such a man will love "the ways to Zion;" they will be "his heart;" he will "be glad when they say unto him, 'Let us go up to the house of the Lord.'" However waste and dreary the places through which he may be called to pass, even "valleys of weeping," he carries with him the freshness of God's salvation; his heart overflows. "All nature smiles when the heart is glad."

"Prisons would palace prove,
If Jesus would dwell with me there."

Blessings are poured out all along the way of him who is journeying Godward. "From strength to strength" he goes; and he is kept up to the end, appearing at length before God.

Vers. 8, 9. The Psalmist would also go "up to the house of the Lord," earnestly he beseeches God's special favor that he may have this privilege restored to him. God is his "shield," his protection; spiritual refreshment is needed, as well as protection. To "look upon the face" to give token that the request is granted; it is an indication of special favor.

Vers. 10. Time is reckoned by experience, as well as by hours and days. One day filled with spiritual delights is worth more than a thousand and days of separation from them. Places are enjoyable as they give satisfaction. The "tents of wickedness" furnish no comfort to him whose "heart orieth out for the living God." He chooses "rather to sit on the threshold of the house of God" and hear the psalms of praise, and catch the odor of the incense, and feel the holy associations of the place even permitted to go no further than the threshold.

Vers. 11. God is the fountain of all life and light; the source of all spiritual warmth. To man he is all and more than all, that the sun and nature. He is protection also—"a shield." And all good things, whether grace by the way, or glory at the end, or such comforts and pleasures of earth as may be good for the upright, will be surely bestowed.

Vers. 12. "Lord of hosts" is power, of authority, able to deliver, "mighty to save." "Riches" and "glory" and "honor" are all in him, and he is able to do all. Public opinion, sustaining to-day, condemns to-morrow. Only God is sure—"a very present help." Trust brings communion and communion is heaven. "Blessed indeed is he who, trusting, rests in God."

"History Repeats Itself."
Hood's Sarsaparilla in the remarkable cures it is continually accomplishing. If you will give this medicine a fair trial, it will do you good.

Mt. Pleasant Auxiliary.

As I have been requested to write something of our society to the ADVOCATE, I will state briefly a few facts relative thereto. Through the efforts of our loved and efficient pastor, Bro. Breland, our society was organized in June, 1891, and to his encouragement and aid our success is largely due. We began with thirteen members, but afterwards the number reached twenty-two. Some of these, however, did not prove faithful, and unavoidable circumstances caused others to withdraw. But our membership is still larger than at first. About one-half of our members are boys and young men, and we appreciate their interest (and their dime) as much as that we hold our meetings on church days, we gladly allow them to be present. They aid us largely in singing; but the remainder of the work is done by the girls. We try always to have something for each one to do at our meetings, hoping in this way to keep all interested. The president and vice-president were, of necessity, absent during part of the Winter; but the members carried on the work bravely and well. Up to date we have raised about fifteen dollars. True, this is no great sum; yet we feel that our work has not been in vain, and we have the pleasing consciousness that in some degree we are "holding up the hands" of those consecrated women who are telling the "sweet old story" in far-off heathen lands; that in some degree we are helping to take the world for Christ.

LILLY MOORE, Pres.

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers can be applied when at home, and is uniformly successful in coloring a brown or black. Hence its great popularity.

A Nice Christian or a Good Christian.

The Word of God contains all that we need to know and neither more nor less than we ought to know. Therefore we need to study it every part and seek the assistance of the Spirit to understand and apply its every truth. Those truths are meant to make us holier, happier and more useful to others here upon earth. To this end Christ prays that his disciples should remain in the world, he kept from the evil, and sanctified through the truth. His word is the truth.

The disciples of Christ are in the world for the purpose of increasing the holiness and happiness of its people. This they can not do by withdrawing themselves from their fellow-men to the desert, the convent or the monastery. And in fact what else are those Christians doing who are indifferent to, and indolent towards the poor and the needy, the sick and afflicted in body and soul. One might as well be a hermit, a monk or a nun, as to live without doing good to those who need it. Indeed those who withdraw themselves from mankind are more worthy of respect than those who do not exercise themselves daily in the Christian graces and virtues which will be helpful to those around them.

It is true they are to be kept from the evil that is in the world, but for what purpose? That of selfish enjoyment, or that of helpful activity? Are not Christians kept from sin, that they may help God rescue others from the power and consequences of sin? Daniel was kept from evil in the lion's den, not only because he had done a part of it. So Christians are kept from sin that they may the better help those who are in sin. Needing not to labor for themselves, they can do the more for others. Are they not kept from sickness, that they may visit the sick; from hunger, that they may rescue the hungry; from ignorance of God's truth, that they may lead him to others?

A man says, Come and see my nice horse. He takes hold of the bridle and the horse steps off nicely with him. He is really a beautiful animal. He is asked, Why do you not ride him? Why do you not hitch him to a buggy and drive him? He replies, Oh, he would rear and plunge, balk or run away. To which it is answered, Then your nice horse is not a good horse.

There are nice Christians and there are good Christians. There are Christians who are seen regularly at the preaching services and the prayer-meetings, but they are never seen feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, teaching the ignorant, or warning the ungodly. They may be seen, however, at the theater, the card party or the dance. They are not living for the good of others, but for the enjoyment of self.

Good Roads.

THEY ARE WORTH ALL THE MONEY THEY COST.

Two thousand years ago the Romans constructed great highways throughout their empire, and some of these have borne the traffic of all these centuries, thus evidencing their perfect construction. The Romans always constructed their highways on a direct line, unless prevented from so doing by some insurmountable obstacle. They built them on a solid foundation and paved them with great blocks of basalt or lava. But their roads cost vast sums of money and required much time and labor for their construction. In this country good roads need not consist of paved highways, constructed to bear the weight of the traffic of twenty centuries. A good macadamized road, of one built in accordance with Telford's plan, is sufficient for all purposes, with the exception, of course, of streets in large cities. Such streets require paving. The essential point of difference between the systems of road making advocated by Telford and Macadam, is whether or not there should be a rough pavement beneath the layer of broken stones. It is now generally conceded that there should be. Our turnpikes are constructed on this plan, and when built, and kept in good repair, form excellent highways. In road building it is always necessary to make a survey of the proposed route to obtain (1) good drainage, (2) easy gradients, (3) the shortest route between places of importance. Good drainage is always essential to good roads, and its absence very often causes the destruction of roads which otherwise might have remained serviceable for years. The importance of easy gradients is already seen. They generally lessen the heavy draught of heavy loads, and thereby save both time and labor.

Good public roads offer an inducement for the building of railroads, inasmuch as they provide a means for transferring the products of the farm for shipment.

Then, too, persons seeking homes choose them where there is easy access to churches and schools. Distance is not always considered so much as the condition of the public roads.

In many country districts the roads become almost impassable during certain portions of the year, and the inhabitants are obliged to remain at home, seeing or hearing little of the nothing of the important events of the outside world. Business must stop and traffic cease until the condition of the weather be such as to permit the roads to dry sufficiently to allow a horse to pass over them without sinking to his knees in mud. This should never be in such a country as ours, especially in the more thickly populated portions.

Probably the only practicable way to obtain good roads is by a special road tax, to be imposed upon each taxpayer, and its payment or an equivalent amount of labor required. Such a mode would not increase the taxes sufficiently to cause discontent. In many states this system is in use, and would be sufficient to insure good public roads if it was fully carried out. Necessary laws must be enacted and enforced to make any system efficient.

Good roads can not be obtained without the expenditure of much time and trouble; but let the subject receive the heartiest consideration of everyone, and it will not be many years until every State has them.

Nothing would do more for the advancement and development of the country. There would travel be a pleasure, business would flourish and great would be the result in many ways.—Commercial Gazette.

"Why don't girls marry?" There are as many reasons as to the question, "Why don't the men propose?" But one explanation is that society is like a crowded picture with here and there a bit of bright color, or a gleam of sunlight, bringing one object or another into relief, but leaving the rest in confusion.

So, as a rule, the girls who are distinguished among the many marry. Those who are colorless or unnoticed are left. Nothing, it is generally agreed, so distinguishes a woman as fine hair, and in order to insure it Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer may be confidently relied upon as the best known preparation of the present day to restore the color and strengthen the roots of the hair and cause it to grow. It is as excellent as a dressing as a tonic and thoroughly eradicates dandruff and all diseases of the scalp. Mansfield Drug Co., Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food digested, and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that flat, tired, all-gone feeling. I have fast so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAOR, Watertown, Mass.

Notice.

There is a question of the greatest importance to the Methodists of this city. It is a question of methods as to how we can reach with the gospel the unevangelized thousands around us. All the Methodists of the city are urgently exhorted to attend a meeting to arrange for the organization of mission work. This meeting will be held Friday, May 13, at eight P. M., in Felicity Street Church, corner of Felicity and Chestnut streets.

C. W. CARTER, P. E.

Millsaps College.

The Board of Trustees of this institution met last week and transacted important business. The most important work was the election of a part of the faculty of the new college. We understand from the dispatches that the Board had the wisdom to elect our particular friend, Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., of the North Mississippi Conference, and vice-president of Whitworth College, to the presidency of Millsaps. We regard this as a capital selection. Dr. Murrah is eminently qualified in every respect for the position. He has learning and piety and experience as a teacher. He is regarded by excellent critics as one of the ablest preachers in the Southwest, and is one of the most popular men in Mississippi. He is a man who is not afraid of work, and always brings to it an unusual amount of energy and determination and carries it on with zeal and earnestness. In regard to this selection of president we say, Well done!

Prof. W. L. Weber, a graduate of Wofford College, South Carolina, and at present professor in the Southwestern University of Texas, was elected to the chair of English. Prof. N. A. Patillo, a graduate of the Southern University of Alabama, and at present at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, was elected to the chair of Mathematics. We do not know these gentlemen; but if the choice of these is as good as the choice for president, the Board has done singularly well. Other professors will be elected at a future meeting of the Board.

The college-buildings are rapidly nearing completion, and the institution will be opened for the reception of students next Fall. Everything seems to be moving on to a successful inauguration of another Methodist college for the Christian education of Methodist boys. Amen!

A writer in the Interior says that Chicago contains 900,000 nominal Protestants. There are for their accommodation 290 churches and 60 chapels. If these were crowded to their utmost capacity, they would not hold more than 2,000,000 people. So that there are more than a half-million nominal Protestants in that city who are without church accommodation. This is another item showing that the greatest work of the church is in our great cities. We need to wake up in this city.

A Leaf of Church History.

The man who persistently ransacks the past can bring to light some curious things. These ought not to surprise us though, for the past is simply a huge "old lumber room," wherein is stored in "disordered array" everything of every kind that has transpired since "first primeval light threw its newborn beams across the throbbing bosom of chaos." Rummaging among old plunder is a very fascinating process. The antiquary, if not a fascinating man, is most certainly a fascinated man, and he does bring up some interesting things.

We have a preacher in this city who at times displays marked symptoms of being under the power of this fascination for looking up old things. Often has it thrown its spell over him and led him back to explore the hidden mazes and tread the dim labyrinths of the long ago. In a recent excursion among the musty and yellow records of our church history, in this city, this preacher of antiquarian proclivities stumbled upon a leaf of church history, which at this time of year may well come as a reminder and a warning to every man and woman who goes to church on these sunshiny, sleep-producing days!

It is an historic fact, so well attested that no doubt can be entertained as to its genuineness, and the authenticity of the record is beyond all question. It is on the records of one of our city churches that many years ago, when the membership was more alive to the purity of the church than at present, and the preachers more prone to administer discipline than the present generation of preachers seems to be, a member was reported to the preacher in charge as having acted in such a manner as to have scandalized the church and preacher, and brought upon the whole church community the contempt of not a few, and made it the laughing stock of all the young people attending the service. Such rumors and reports, could not be neglected without damage to the cause of God, and so the preacher, having "an eye single to the glory of God and the good of the church," and moved by that wholesome principle which says, "a stitch in time saves nine," and actuated by that righteous dictum of law that "no guilty party should escape," promptly appointed a committee of investigation. This committee, thus suddenly brought into existence and burdened with so grave a responsibility, went "carefully and prayerfully" into the serious work of investigating the damaging reports about the brother's character and conduct. This committee, after a "most careful and painstaking inquiry" into the whole matter, reports and rumors and gossip, reported to the presiding judge (preacher in charge) that they had performed the "onerous duty imposed upon them" in a most impartial manner, and that from the best evidence they could obtain they had arrived at the painful conclusion that a trial was absolutely necessary to "stop the mouths of the gain-sayers" and to maintain "the peace and dignity" of the church. Accordingly they presented the charge and specifications. The charge was, "sleeping in church during divine service," and the specifications narrated the when and how this great crime was done. "A jury of his peers" was chosen; "witnesses summoned," the "accused cited," and the "day set for trial."

"Now, when this was noised abroad," there was a stir among the brethren and a flutter among the sisters as to "whereunto this thing would grow." Some of the older brethren, who had on several occasions "taken a nap on the sly" during divine service, shook their heads ominously at the possibility of being called to account for that grievous offense before a church court. Some of the elder sisters who had more than once caught themselves nodding behind their fans while the preacher was "delivering his discourse," put on "the look of agonized anxiety" at the prospect of some day being called before the ecclesiastical judiciary to answer for such disgraceful misdemeanor. And what a "feast of fat things and wines on the lees" the whole affair was to the church gossip! Rarely had they ever had such a turn of good fortune in their favor, and they made the best possible use of it. The character and conduct of the members was for days bandied about in a sort of "huttle-door and shuttle-cock" fashion to the great scandal of many grieved souls.

At last the day of trial came. The judge was on his "bench," the jury empaneled, the witnesses in their place and the accused in the "box." The prosecutor opened the momentous case in a most impressive manner. The judge carried himself in a way worthy of the ecclesiastical ermine, deciding points of law with great firmness and clearness; at all points giving the accused "the benefits of any doubts" that arose during the trial. The witnesses almost to a man gave testimony most damaging to the accused and fixing upon him the certainty of guilt. But the prosecutor, like many prosecutors before and since, ambitious to achieve a name and fame by one stroke of masterful policy, and thus rivet conviction beyond any peradventure upon the harassed prisoner, sought to introduce a witness to prove that the accused had snored, and that snoring was prima-facie evidence of sleep! He had reserved this testimony to the last, that by its introduction at the last moment he might overwhelm all opposition and smother all sympathy for the accused in this brilliant denouement. But the judge was not to be caught napping, and promptly ruled that such evidence was inadmissible. Though snoring may be prima-facie evidence of sleep, it is an unconscious act and cannot be alleged in proof against the accused, for two reasons: First, a man is not allowed to criminate himself. Second, a man cannot be held responsible for what he does in his sleep. Though this "clinching testimony" was ruled out, the jury found enough in the testimony of the other witnesses to bring in a verdict of "guilty, as charged in the charge and specifications," but owing to extenuating circumstances, the nature of which the records do not show, recommended the guilty brother to "the mercy of the court." The judge, having often sung and prayed,

That mercy I to others show That mercy show to me, upon the promise of amendment by the guilty brother, dismissed him with the injunction, "Go and sin no more."

Thus ended a church trial, the like of which has been seen very rarely. And as the season for dull sermons and sleepy hours is upon us, we give our readers this little bit of local church history as a reminder that a man has been tried and found guilty of the misdemeanor of sleeping during church service, and as a warning to all sleepy-headed church goers.

The church is called to mourn the death of our oldest foreign missionary, Dr. J. W. Lambuth. He died in Japan, April 28. His dying message to the church was: "I die at my post. Send more men." Read Dr. Walter Lambuth's letter on this page.

The Blessed Virgin.—No. 1.

The worship of "Mary, the mother of Jesus," in the Roman and Greek churches in no small measure rivals the worship due to the Lord Jesus Christ. This worship, looked at in the light and judged by the teachings of the Holy Scriptures, we can but regard as heresy and idolatry; the Holy Scriptures saying no more of the Blessed Virgin than that she was a holy and highly honored woman in being the divinely chosen mother of the humanity of our blessed Lord. There is but little space, devoted to her in the four inspired biographies, and after the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, in which it is recorded that when the disciples assembled Mary, the mother of Jesus, was present, in the remaining twenty-seven chapters her name is never once mentioned. These chapters contain the history of the planting of the church in Judea, in Samaria, in Asia Minor, in Europe and in the Islands of the Mediterranean Sea. They contain also the sermons of Peter, Stephen and Paul delivered at various times and places, and also a history of the first council held at Jerusalem, and the decrees of the apostles; but in this not one word about Mary, or any mention of her name.

In the Epistles of the Apostles, Paul, James, Peter, John and Jude, to the various churches of the then existing Christendom, the Virgin's name is not once mentioned, and there is not the slightest intimation that she had any spiritual power to do anything for the souls of men more than any other holy woman. Now, if the Blessed Virgin is what the Roman Church affirms, this is a most wonderful and unaccountable omission. And, to say the least of this, no Romanist ought to regard Protestants as blameworthy for failing to address prayers to the Virgin, or to ask her intercessions, seeing that there is not a shadow of scriptural authority for doing so. Diligent students, and learned, in the writing of the Fathers for five centuries find nothing to justify, much less to teach, that prayers should be offered to the Virgin, or that men should seek the favor of God through her intercessions. In ten thousand Roman Churches her images have been set up, many of them gorgeously arrayed, and before these images millions of devotees in reverent supplication kneel and invoke her supposed all-powerful aid. The most august titles have been applied to her, and she assumed to possess attributes and powers which only a divine being can possess. So general, so common is this, that Romanism looks to the unbiased spectator more like Mariolatry than Scriptural Christianity.

These theories, exhibitions and idolatrous acts are not confined to the ignorant and superstitious masses; but their standard theologians, their most eminent church dignitaries, up to the infallible Pope with his triple crown, and the general councils with their learning and ecclesiastical pomp, all teach and practice the worship of Mary.

No wonder the Church of Rome fulminates against the Bible societies seeking to put the Word of God in the hands of all men. No wonder she prohibits, without special permit, the reading of the Bible by the millions of her adherents. No wonder that so many millions of the Romanist families have not a copy of God's Word in their houses. It would never do! The worship of Mary, the supremacy of the Pope, and purgatory would fade away before the revealed light, like mists before the rising sun.

God's revealed Word in their native tongue, is the urgent and imperative need of the millions in the communion of the Roman Church. But the ecclesiastical powers that be over them will not permit it. Said one of their Bishops to a Protestant minister who protested against their denial of the Scriptures to the people: "We don't want nor need the Bible; the church has and holds the truth and teaches it to her children." This he considered enough, and better than the masses reading the Word for themselves.

Let us, as Protestants, as lovers and readers of God's Word, do all we can to circulate the Bible among all men.

J. B. WALKER.

The W. C. T. U. of Louisiana had a very successful annual meeting at Monroe recently. The attendance was good, the audiences large, the meetings enthusiastic, the hospitality of the Parlor City unbounded and the result generally satisfactory. We notice that Mrs. Merrick, who has been president for a number of years, has been succeeded by Mrs. Mary Read Goodale. We think this is an admirable selection. Mrs. Goodale is well known all over the State, and has done more for the Union than any other one, and well deserves the place to which she has been called.

Bro. Roy, of Lower Coast Mission, reported a meeting which resulted in twenty-nine accessions. Congregations increasing. Sunday-school in good condition. The Agent of Centenary College at Carondelet Street Church.

Rev. Robt. Harry, the stirring agent of Centenary, preached last Sunday morning a very edifying and instructive sermon at Carondelet Church in this city. His subject was, "Jesus Feeding the Multitudes." Under this subject, which was discussed in a broad and thoughtful manner, he very deftly brought before the audience the claims of the college. No need to send the boys away to get an education. They can get it here. So well did he present his case that at the close $1,000 were subscribed to the endowment fund. Good for Carondelet!

Our Touhouplous Street Mission.

This mission continues to grow in influence and importance under the managing care and supervision of Bro. Harrison. The Sunday-school contains from 60 to 75 scholars, and 6 faithful teachers are leading the young to the knowledge of God. There are four services every week, and the attendance at each encourages the workers to continue. Here is the nucleus of what will one day be a fine congregation of Christians. Any help offered Bro. Harrison will be gratefully received; and you could not help a worthier cause.

Dr. J. W. Lambuth Dead.

MR. EDITOR: My dear father has been called to his reward. Died upon the field while in action, as he had always desired. This morning a cablegram came:

Hiro, Japan, April 28, 1892.
Father dead. Dying message: "fall at my post. Send more men."

This is all I know. And yet not all. He is with his Master whom he loved so well. He died pursuing, with the flush of victory upon his brow: O Bro. Carter, I want to be more like my father—he loved men's souls. He was a soul-winner.

Yours in the gospel of peace,
WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

NOTES.

It is wonderful how many people there are in the church who give us many suggestions and so few dollars to carry on church work!

"If Christians would spend half as much time and money to save the world as they do to see it," wouldn't the work of evangelization go forward with a rush?

"Do you preach extempore, or do you take notes?"

"Well, sah, that was once a time I took notes, but I found it safest down in this deestrick to insist on habn' de cash down!"

Among the questions to be discussed and settled at the General Conference of the M. E. Church, now in session at Omaha, the Methodist Review names the status of the Bishops and the modification of the episcopacy; pastoral limitation; eligibility of women; twonesses; division of the Missionary Society; consolidation of benevolences; modification of the work of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Educational Society, etc.

The Texas Advocate pays us a compliment when, speaking of our recent election, it says:

"We congratulate the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE on this grand consummation, which it royally helped to achieve. It may have lost several subscribers from those who believe that preachers and religious papers should use only moral suasion on men and institutions that admit to no moral law, but these feeble notes are unaltered in the swelling chorus of almost universal joy. 'Twas a famous victory!"

A correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate makes the same remark exactly that a lay brother made in our office the other day. His remark was this:

"If we, as a church, oppose opening the Exposition on the Sabbath, it is our duty to do the same at camp meetings. Let us be consistent!"

This would be as "true as gospel" if a camp meeting was the same thing as an Exposition. But as they are decidedly different, the application is not apply.

The call is for deeds. Creeds, ceremonies, and psalms, and hymns are well enough, but in themselves are ineffectual to cast the devil out of us, as the loaves of superstitious savages. Christ went about doing good. He was a peripatetic and personal benefactor. Our faith must have justification in our deeds. Our church must be something more than a religious club, with admission and membership restricted to our sect. Our church-houses, exempt from taxation, must be something more than Sunday parlors for well-dressed congregations. A church should be a place where work should make men good by doing good. — Western Christian Advocate.

One trouble about our people "Methodists" is, that they do not read the church paper. Many of the men take it out of the office, and it to their places of business, and the families never see it. And what more, it is no uncommon thing to find a preacher that does not know what is going on in the church, or, not in his own Conference, because he does not snap and enterprize enough to read his own Conference organ. A presiding elder remarked to us the other day, "Our people and preachers are reading the paper; if they would, they would like it." — Alabama Advocate.

"All of which we steadfastly certify to."

The Central Christian Advocate, of the M. E. Church, published in St. Louis, speaking of our late election, says:

Louisiana has perhaps never had more spirited election—certainly not one in which the moral element was so prominent a feature. The colored people, to their lasting credit, cast heavy vote for the Protestants. They were unwilling to follow the former hope of electing a Republican candidate, considering the overthrow of the lot of far greater moment than mere expression of their political preference. Their independence and unusual number of parishes or parishes that took part in the contest, proved to give a new character to the politics of the State. As the campaign pre-eminently a moral and educational one, it is Quixotic to believe that effect for good will be felt long after the lottery has breathed its last. That Louisiana, which has earned an unenviable reputation for lawlessness, negro persecution and political corruption of the worst type, is now being upon a new and creditable

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Columbus District Conference.

NOTICES.

Rev. G. S. Inge is to begin a meeting at Lake Charles, La., May 22.

The gift of the Holy Ghost is the result of obedience to God. If you don't believe this, read Acts v. 32.

And when a man is full of the Holy Ghost he speaks the word of God with boldness. If you don't believe this, read Acts iv. 31.

Rev. I. W. Cooper, D. D., will preach the commencement sermon at the Port Gibson Female College, June 12.

The Watkins and Kansas City road has been finished from Lake Charles to Alexandria, and the trains are running.

Rev. F. S. Parker writes that the time of holding the Holiness Meeting at New Iberia has been changed to May 19-26.

Bishop Keener left early this week to attend the annual meeting of the college of Bishops in Nashville, which met on Tuesday last.

Bro. Frank Parker was with Bro. McVoy at Natchitoches the larger part of the past week, helping forward the good work in that city.

Rev. E. H. Moninger, of the Mississippi Conference, will preach the sermon to the Epworth League of Whitworth College, Sunday night, June 5.

Judging from The Meteor, we should say that Crystal Springs is thriving on berries, peas, turnips and radishes. Thirteen carloads were shipped in five days.

The editor, being a member of the Board of Missions, left to-day to attend the annual meeting. The Board convenes in Nashville to-morrow, Friday, May 6.

The Manual of Montegale Assembly, for 1892, has been received, and, looking over the program, we judge that a rich treat is in store for the visitors this Summer.

The great river is again on a boom. The danger line has been passed all along, and grave apprehensions are entertained that we shall have an exceedingly high water.

We were gratified to receive a call, last week, from President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College. He is already making preparations for his coming commencement.

Rev. W. H. LaPrade, our Carondelet pastor, spent last week in Shreveport helping Bro. Pierce in a protracted meeting. He reports the meeting as having accomplished much good.

Rev. George Needham gave our recent District Conference a fine notice in his paper, the Rocky Mountain Methodist. Bro. Needham enjoyed his visit among us, and we enjoyed it, too.

The Democrat-Star, of Scranton, Miss., has the temerity to say: "At the recent election in Louisiana the lottery drew a blank!" And they were the blankest looking set you ever saw, too.

Peter and John did not wait to get the lame man into the temple before they did him good. They did him good first, and then he went joyfully with them into the house of the Lord. Do you see the point?

We have received from the publisher, J. J. Hood, Philadelphia, two samples of excellent programs for Children's Day: "Fair as a Lily," and "Children of the Gospels." These are good, and come at five cents apiece, or fifty cents a dozen.

Missionary Hand-book No. 9 has been received. This is a history of our mission in Japan. The Board of Missions, through its secretary, Dr. John, is doing the church good service in publishing these hand-books of our mission work for the information of the people.

A man may be sincere in his belief when he takes morphine for quinine; but his sincerity will not prevent the poisonous drug from doing its deadly work. Sincerity does not change laws nor the nature of things. A man may be sincere in believing there is no hell and go to hell, too.

This, from the Southern Churchman, is too good to skip:

A good answer was made by an old Christian, who, when he was asked God's business was, said, "To serve God; but I pound iron to pay expenses;" and there is in this answer the key to the best results possible to each one of us, whatever our conditions or surroundings.

Bro. Van Valkenburgh informs us that the interest in Children's Day seems to be increasing each year. While in former years but few programmes have been ordered until a week before the time, this year 3,600 have already been ordered. Brethren should order at once to be in time for the third Sunday.

A snook thief, not having the fear of the waste-basket before his eyes, entered our office some time between last Saturday night and Monday morning and rummaged our drawers and capsize our papers and "played the mischief" generally, and then carried off all our valuables—a few two-cent postage stamps. We feel sorry for the fellow, for an inexcusable Nemesis is on his track with the fury of a blood-hound.

Rev. B. F. Jones and family, of Port Gibson, passed through Jackson a few days ago, returning from Crystal Springs, where they had spent about ten days.

Dr. C. G. Andrews, Dr. J. J. Wheat and Bro. W. B. Lewis gave us a much appreciated visit last week. They were in attendance on the meeting of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College.

Bishop Hendrix won the Delta to him while on his recent tour of District Conferences there. His presence was not only a feast to his hearers, but an inspiration to every loyal Methodist throughout that section.

We spent a week very pleasantly in attendance upon the Winona District Conference at Greenwood, Miss., and the Greenville District Conference at Friar's Point. It was the most delightful week we have spent this year.

We publish in this issue one of the two letters from Bro. W. W. Cammack, our missionary to the Choctaw Indians. Our readers will be glad to hear from Bro. Cammack, and will, no doubt, feel a greater interest in his work from reading after him.

The General Assembly of Kentucky has passed a bill making an appropriation to the World's Fair, but providing that its department shall be closed on Sunday, and that no whiskey shall be sold within its precincts. What a glorious thing it would have been had all the States made similar provisions!

The Pacific Methodist Advocate, of April 21, reports that since their last Conference there have been 980 conversions and 1204 accessions to the Southern Methodist Church over there. These figures are complete only as to three districts to the Pacific Conference. Two districts in this Conference and seven-eighths of the other three Conferences are still un canvassed. Such news should thrill the heart of the church.

We have received at the branch office recently quite a number of letters from the brethren of the Mississippi Conference asking for Sunday-school literature for needy Sunday-schools from the Children's Day Fund. In order to prevent delay in filling these orders, we will call attention to the fact that Bro. W. A. Gunning, Natchez, Miss., is the treasurer of that fund now, and all orders for supplies should be sent direct to him.

In reading an Arkansas paper, a few days ago, we came across this pertinent paragraph:

Find a prosperous farmer in Arkansas, and you will find one who keeps his corn-crib and smoke-house at home, and not "out West." Sometimes these prudent farmers fail to realize profits; but they never let expenses outrun receipts.

This is true the world over. This is what all Mississippians need to learn, and there is no better time to begin than the year 1892.

Bro. Bachman, colporteur of the North Mississippi Conference, has kindly presented us with a copy of "The Hand-Book of Southern Methodism," by Dr. P. A. Peterson, of the Virginia Conference. This book is published by authority of the last General Conference, and contains the history, polity and doctrines of Southern Methodism in a nutshell. It should be in the hands of every Methodist. Bro. Bachman is prepared to supply the trade at Publishing House prices.

Free Night School.

One of the W. H. M. S. projects is the establishment of a night school for the benefit of the working class. The school-room is pleasantly situated on Callopo street, near St. Charles Avenue, in the chapel of the church. The school is entirely free, books and writing material being furnished by the teachers. School is held on Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights, opening at 7 o'clock, and closing about 9 o'clock.

Girls and boys and young men and women who have not the advantages of any day school are earnestly invited to attend. Any particular line of study which pupils may desire will be taught them. Friends of the cause who may read this will greatly favor us if they will show this to anyone likely to take advantage of the benefits of the school.

KATE H. SCOTT.

Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference.

Auxiliaries will please send the names of their delegates to the annual meeting to be held in Vicksburg, in June, without delay, to Mrs. W. B. Lewis, 402 East Grove street, Vicksburg, Miss. Mrs. W. B. LEWIS.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally found a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expense. Hemp also cures sleep, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1623 Race street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

The District Conference for Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference, as already announced, will meet at Shuqualak, Miss., May 12-15. Preachers in charge will please notice "The Duty of the District Conference," set forth in the Discipline, and be prepared to make report on the topics prescribed in the order of business for the District Conference. The session will open at 9 o'clock A. M., Thursday. Rev. Amos Kendall will preach the opening sermon. Thursday will be taken up with the work of a Sunday-school Conference, with the following programme:

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

The good people of Mississippi join those of Louisiana in singing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Two District Conferences have been held with good interest, viz.: Winona, at Greenwood, and Greenville, at Friar's Point. Four others are to be in session the second week in May. This is crowding matters, especially for the connectional workers, but we will (D. V.) reach several of them in spite of shortness of time.

From the number of orders already received for programmes, we expect Children's Day to be more generally observed this year than heretofore. A few pastoral charges have not ordered yet. Brethren, let us hear from you directly. Give the children and youth the privilege of this joyous day. The programmes cost you nothing but to observe the day lawfully and religiously. G. W. BACHMAN.

Millsaps College.

The Board of Trustees of Millsaps College met on April 27, and was in session two days. The chief item of business was the election of a faculty. The election resulted as follows: President, Dr. W. B. Murrah; chair of Mathematics, N. A. Patillo; chair of English, W. L. Weber. The chair of Ancient Languages will be filled at the next meeting. The rates of tuition will be fixed by the Executive Committee. W. C. BLACK.

Rev. J. E. Bradley.

MR. EDITOR: Please say that as the children of our beloved Bro. Bradley prefer putting the headstone over their father's grave themselves, therefore no money need be sent, as requested in last week's ADVOCATE.

Hargrove, president of the Conference society, and Mrs. McElroy, district secretary, are expected to have charge of the meeting. HOME LIFE.

A TALE OF TWO BUCKETS.

Two buckets in an ancient well got talking once together. And after sundry wise remarks—no doubt about the weather—"Look here," quoth one, "this life we lead I don't exactly like; 'Twas my word, I'm half inclined to venture on a strike; For—do you mind?—however full we both come up the well, We go down empty—always shall, for aught that I can tell."

"That's true," the other said; "but, then—the way it looks to me—However empty we go down, we come up full, you see."

"Wise little bucket! If we each could look at life that way, Would dwarf its life and magnify its blessings day by day, The world would be a happier place, since we should all decide Only the buckets full to count, and let the empty slide."

—The Churchman.

Christian Expediency.

The worldling is self-centered. "I, my, mine," are often upon his lips. He prizes much of "personal liberty." He is willing to fight for his rights on all occasions.

The Christian is like Christ, who "pleased not himself." He lives not for self alone. He strives to build up self, to bless others, to glorify God. Compared with this "personal liberty," his "rights" are scarcely worthy of mention. So he thinks and feels and acts.

The Christian faces three classes of things; good, bad, and doubtful. Concerning the first two classes, his duty is plain. What of the third? Shall he clamor for his "rights?" Shall he prate about "personal liberty?" Not so did Christ! Not so will he! He will settle these doubtful things, not on the low ground of "personal liberty," but on the high ground of "Christian expediency." He will weigh them, not in the scales of selfish knowledge, but of unselfish love. "Knowledge puffeth up, love buildeth up."

The best argument concerning doubtful amusements and habits Paul gives us in I Cor. vii. by that simple logic ninety-nine out of a hundred of all our difficulties concerning doubtful amusements vanish. Paul's argument was as follows:

1. The eating of meat offered to idols is not, in and of itself, wrong to him who knows the nothingness of an idol.

2. Yet such an example might lead others to stumble.

3. Consequently some brother of little knowledge and experience might perish.

4. To cause the ruin of the weakest one for whom Christ died would be sin against Christ.

5. For himself, it meant made his brother to stumble, he would eat no flesh forevermore; for his personal gratification was not worthy to be compared to the safety of his brother's soul.

Is not Paul's logic inexorable? If, because of it, Paul discarded "meat," how would he discard tobacco, intoxicants, cards, billiards, theater-going, dancing, and other tendencies of today? What if some of these may be indulged in, by some in exceptional circumstances, without personal harm? It is justifiable on the ground of personal liberty, are they expedient? The true Christian is lifted above this ground of perpetual debate: Is it right? Is it wrong?—may I say I not? He asks rather, Will this help me, benefit my fellows, and glorify God? The Christian will shun much that the worldling loves, simply because he has better things to enjoy. I commend to all young Christians Dr. Bushnell's sermon on "Free to amusements, and too free to want them." This is found on page 374 of "Sermons on Living Subjects," and is probably in your pastor's library. Borrow it, read it, then return it.

Suffer one illustration in closing. If you are in this perpetual debate, you perhaps, yes, probably, are on too low ground. The worm has a right to crawl, it knows no better; but the eagle is built to fly. May the eagle crawl? It surely is free to, but too free to want to. Flying is better. Leave crawling to the worldling; the Christian may soar! he will.—Rev. Henry Lea, in Epworth Herald.

The Girl Who Brags.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the April Ladies' Home Journal, depreciates the tendency of American girls to the habit of bragging. Only last week, she writes, I asked a young bachelor—who is comfortably situated in life—why he did not marry. "Well, I will tell you," he replied. "I want a home, which, of course, means a wife; but I am discouraged about making the venture. I admired a young lady greatly, and was beginning to think seriously of paying her court. She seemed to be my ideal. She was a model daughter, progressive minded, intelligent, industrious. She was always neatly but simply dressed, and her cheerfulness was like sunny day. Recently I met her on the street just as she was emerging from a milliner's establishment.

"See my new hat!" she said brightly, as I walked along by her side. "Isn't it pretty?"

"I had not noticed the new hat," I replied. "I saw a simple open work straw hat which resembled a few flowers and a bow of ribbon."

"Yes, very pretty and becoming," I replied. "I have a finer one being made," she continued. "This is only a hack affair. I paid only twenty dollars for it. It is stylish, though, for the price, I think."

"My heart sank at her light way of estimating cost. I have no sisters, and my mother possesses a knack of trimming her own bonnets, so I had never known what ladies' hats cost. If that simple bit of straw and ribbon cost twenty dollars, what would be the price of the finer hat being made?" Thirty dollars at least. I realized at once my inability to properly support a girl who paid fifty dollars for two hats in one fleeting season. What a fortune it would require to furnish all her wardrobe at that rate! Yet she is so simply dressed to all appearances; nothing at all showy about her. I suppose all girls in her station pay as much for their clothes, and so I think I will leave marriage for richer men. The average young man can not stand that sort of thing, I assure you."

Now, I happened to know who this young woman was, and I happened to know that she was not an extravagant girl. If she had paid twenty dollars for a hat it was an unusual expenditure for her, and would trouble her conscience and purse for many a day, and cause her much self-denial in other directions.

But she possessed the foolish idea so prevalent in this age of great fortunes, that men admire women who use money lavishly, and who pay large prices for their garments.

The Discovery of Christ.

It is a high day in any man's life—and always a quickening of the divine pulse—when the race—when, with Andrew, his divine possibilities utter their prophecies in the declaration, "I have found the Christ." But every true conversion is only the beginning of the soul's discovery of the Savior. Conversion is the springtime of character. The heat and the storm, the strikes with the elements that strengthen and destroy, are yet to come. Conversion is the point from whence we follow on to know the Lord. The work of Christ within and upon the redeemed soul is unending. The study of Christ is exhaustless; we never graduate from the school of our divine teacher. Logic has penetrated no more soul-dwelling shroud than a statement of Christian doctrine which presumes to compass the whole truth as it is in Jesus. Paul and John never claimed to possess such spiritual knowledge; they were always disciples; to them the following of Christ was a journey of enlarging and unceasing discovery. Nearly thirty years after his conversion, after all these years of intense and herculean toil and thought, Paul's most passionate desire was that he might know the Christ. One of the women of Browning's poetry went through the days with her "Eyes upturned, As if life were one long and sweet surprise."

Such the Christ-life ever is to the disciple who walks with expectant eyes upon his Master. Christ is ever new to the Christian whose vision of the Lord is not obscured by the shadow of his own selfishness. The grace of the Lord is ever mighty to arms of faith; his beauty grows ever more resplendent to the pure in heart; his salvation is an ever-deepening reality to the obedient. The discovery and revelation of Christ is the business of life; is the worth of life; is an unending occupation.—Rev. G. D. Herron.

A Mother's Privileges.

If you allow your duties to run you like a machine, you will soon break down in body and mind, with no chance to recuperate. It is the constant succession that wears your patience and strength, especially if you have a large family.

If you are pressed for funds, the closest economy is necessary and right; if not, a jacket or a shawl is of little value compared to your health and happiness. Every woman has tastes, wishes and preferences. She should require them to be respected. If you should choose to omit a small duty for a pleasure that is more valuable to you, take the liberty to do so. You own your family a bright face and well-informed mind, as well as buttons and patches. Just as you accustom them in this respect will their demands be. So many mothers are draining their lives away in little steps and stitches!

If you have a distaste for any special work, there is some way out of it without neglecting or hurting anybody. Teach a servant to do it, or exchange with a friend who likes it. For several years one of my friends did my plain sewing, while I did fancy work for her. Each set a price on her work and kept an account of it, but no money was paid; we only balanced accounts occasionally. If you claim your privileges they will be granted you, and vice versa.—Selected.

Angels' Work.

I wonder if you have seen that pathetic little story of the poor third mother who took her three little children into a parlor-car by mistake, and was rudely driven into another car in a way that brought smiles to some faces, but a great pity into the tender heart of one of the passengers, a little boy. He showed his sympathy in true boyish fashion by taking some of his own fruit and luncheon to the abashed little group in the common car.

So sweet and gentle was the ministry of the bright-faced, beautiful boy, that one of the children, watching his retreating form, asked, "Was he an angel, mama?"

"No, dear; but he was doing an angel's work, bless him!" answered the mother.

And it is this answer that rings in my ears so persistently that I pass it on to you: "Doing an angel's work."

There is not a little bit of angel's work for each one of us, every day, no matter how commonplace the day may be? Perhaps you are not quite sure just what an angel's work is, but a little searching of the Scripture will make it clear. And having found what the work is, suppose we each one, for just one week, watch diligently for such pieces of it as may lie in our path?—Selected.

"ONWARD TO THE LORD."—Just as the plowman takes furrow by furrow, one ended before another is begun, so our duties come to us, not in battalions, but singly. Our life's plan, if we read it aright, is beneficently designed. We are not abandoned to blind chance. Confusion and entanglement can come only by our choosing to refuse guidance, and to shape our lot for ourselves. So it will seem to us when we have come to the end of it, and can look back—a divinely-ordered whole, which even our failures can not mar, for God only asks of us our best and bravest; and if we give him these, we need not grieve overmuch if some of the furrows refuse to run straight. The failure may be success after all, so far as our discipline is concerned. . . . Our very failures may be an answer to our doubts—evidence of a time when we shall neither fail nor fall, when the acre will be freed from weeds, and ready for a fair harvest. For in the midst of our saddest blunders we have visions of higher things, unfulfilled aspirations, cravings for growth, and these will be satisfied, everyone of them. We who have tasted the bitter fruit of the tree of knowledge are meant to inherit the tree of life; and somewhere else the task dropped here may be taken up and made good.—Sunday at Home.

THE WINTER IS PAST.—To the soul that has reached God there is no longer any Winter; but there is a season composed of the other three joined in one, which is, as it were, immortalized by the death of Winter. For, before reaching the inner Winter, the soul had passed through all the seasons of the spiritual life; but, afterward, it re-enters upon a perpetual Spring, Summer, and Autumn. The mildness of Spring does not prevent the fervor of Summer; nor the fruitfulness of Autumn; the beauty of Spring, nor the abundance of Autumn; and the fruits of Autumn interpose no obstacle to the enjoyment of Spring, nor to the ardor of Summer. Oh, blessed land! Happy they who are able to possess it! It is promised to all, and he who possesses it, and to whom it belongs by right of his eternal generation and the purchase of his blood, earnestly invites us all to proceed thither. He furnishes us with all the means of doing so; he draws us by his urgent solicitations. Why do we not make haste?—Madame Guyon.

A man is really bound in prudence to do what upon the whole appears, according to the best of his judgment, to be for his happiness, as what he certainly knows to be so.—Bishop Butler.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

A YEAR WITH DOLLY.

BY EUDORA S. RUMSTAD.

JANUARY.
My darling Dolly is one week old; Her forehead is fair and creamy, Her cheeks are pink and her hair is gold. And her eyes are dark and dreamy. She's lovely and sweet as you can be; She's Santa Claus's own little daughter, But she came to me on the Christmas tree— How glad I am that he brought her!

I never am lonely since she came, And the only trouble with me is That I haven't been able to find a name One-half as pretty as she is. Mama's in favor of "Isabel;" And papa says "Betsey or Polly;" And I've thought and thought and maybewell, I guess I shall call her Dolly.

—St. Nicholas.

MR. EDITOR: I thought I would write a few lines to the dear old Advocate. My papa takes the Advocate. I like to read it very much. I am going to ask a question: How wide was Noah's ark, and how long was it? Your friend, DANNIE WOODWARD.

MR. EDITOR: I have written to your paper before, and as that one did not reach the waste-basket, I thought I would try again. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My papa is the minister. Mr. Muller is our superintendent. We all love him, very much. I go to public school; study arithmetic, grammar, history, geography, spelling and reading. I will close by asking the cousins a question: Where is the longest verse in the Bible found?
MATTIE E. ANDREWS.
New Orleans, La.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written a letter to the little cousins in the Advocate. We have Sunday-school and Juvenile Missionary Society in the Sunday-school. Bro. J. A. Parker is our preacher; Bro. Sheppard is our elder. The next quarterly meeting will be held here, and we will get to hear Bro. Sheppard. We like him very much. I will answer Charles M. Morris' question: "Snail-dishes" is found in Exodus xxv, 28. I will ask a question: "Who had his thumbs and great toes cut off?" Yours truly, VELMA DAWSON.

MR. EDITOR: It has been some time since I have written to the Advocate. You were kind enough to publish my first letter, and that encourages me to write again. My papa is a Methodist preacher in the North Mississippi Conference. We were sent by Bishop Hendrix to the Chapel Hill circuit. We moved during that hard freeze in the Winter. I am not going to school now, but am studying at home. I will answer Frank Henderson's question: Jacob had twelve sons, and loved Joseph the most. I will ask one: Who built the ivory house? I will close, hoping to see this in print. Your little friend, EULA ROOK, Sweetman, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written to your nice paper, and I thought I would write you a few lines to-night. My nuncia takes the Advocate, and I like to read it very much, especially the children's column. It has a great many good things in it. I think the editor is very kind to give us a column. We should strive to make it interesting. Rev. W. C. Black is our preacher this year. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My teacher's name is Mrs. Black. I will ask a question: Who was Moses' father? I will close with best wishes to the Advocate. I remain, as ever,
Your unknown friend,
ELLA WOMACK, Jackson, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: I wrote to you not long ago. I am afraid you will throw this one in the waste-basket, but will write again and see if you will publish it. My papa is a farmer and takes the dear old Advocate, and mama says she can't see how she could well do without it. She has been reading it a long time; ever since Dr. Parker was the editor. I want to tell you about Aunt Bette Baker's family. She has six little girls, and not a single boy. She is all the sister mama has living. Mama has no father, mother or brother in the world. I have one little brother, and I love him more than I can tell. I will try to answer Frank Henderson's question: Jacob had twelve sons, and loved Joseph and Benjamin the best, for they were the sons of his old age. I will ask a question of anyone who wishes to answer: What are the three sweetest words on earth? Mr. Editor, you can answer it, too, if you wish. Please print this, so I can send it to Aunt Bette.

Jack.

Jack was cross, and nothing pleased him. After giving him the choicest morsels for his breakfast, and providing for all his wants with tender care, while he did nothing but fret and complain, his mother finally said:

"Jack, I want you now to go right up to your room and put on every garment wrong-side out."

Jack stared. He thought his mother must be out of her wits.

"I mean it, Jack," she repeated. And she did mean it. Jack had to mind. He had to turn his stockings even; and when his mother came to him, there he stood—a forlorn and funny-looking boy, all limbs and seams and ravelings—before the glass, wondering what his mother meant, but not quite clear in his conscience.

"Now, this," said his mother, turning him around, "is what you have been doing all day; you have been determined to make the worst of everything. In other words, you would turn everything wrong-side out. Do you really like your things this way so much, Jack?"

"No, mama, I don't like it," Jack, shame-faced.

"Can't I turn them right?"

"You may, if you will remember this: there is a right and a wrong side to whatever happens—I mean a pleasant part and a part you do not like as well; and you must do as you please to like your clothes, wear them right-side out. Do not be so foolish any more, little man, as to persist in turning things wrong-side out!"

Phrenological Journal.

GIRLS AND THE GUM.—How cunningly she wads it up! How quickly she turns it over! Spits it from port to starboard. Then chews it more and more.

Who taught the little girl the way to work her busy chin? Who showed her how to twist her jaws, such wild grimaces in?

Who taught her deft, prehensile tongue, the lasso's work to do? To corral the elusive gum. And chew and chew and chew?

Ah, me, she learned the art at school, Matriculation day: And hadn't learned a great deal more, What time she came away.

Cheaper Aluminum.

DISCOVERY OF A NEW PROCESS FOR ITS MANUFACTURE.

A corporation, chartered under the laws of Colorado and known as the American Aluminum Company has been formed in Philadelphia, says the Ledger, of that city, with the view of introducing this metal at a price far below the market value. It is claimed that they have discovered a process whereby aluminum can be sold at a price less than quarter what the present quotations are. Edward C. Broadwell, who discovered the new process, was seen by a Ledger reporter and seemed confident of his success. In speaking of his discovery, he said that the two possible ways of preparing aluminum was by electrical and chemical energy.

"The chemical method," said Mr. Broadwell, "will probably never meet with success from an economical standpoint, owing to the fact that aluminum has never been found free in nature. The chemical method is the advantage of chemical affinities, and substances found in an elemental state necessarily have weak affinities. The electrical current furnishes us with a medium whereby this metal can be extracted from its ores at any point desired as well as with great rapidity. The advantage we claim lies chiefly in two points: First, we claim to be able to make one pound of commercially pure aluminum with the expenditure of but one electrical horse-power. Previous to this improvement twenty-two electrical horse-power has been necessary to accomplish the same purpose. Secondly, we are able to take clay of ordinary fair quality and remove from it efficiently and cheaply all iron silicate."

"Of the two above improvements it appears that the mode of application of the electric current has gone the furthest toward the cheapening of this process. I have been working on this process since 1885, and have tried experimentally every patented invention and scientific suggestion that came under my observation. What at present has been perfected I discovered last summer, and my claims are based on a combination of chemical and electric methods. We expect to put aluminum on the market at a price cheaper than copper. It is a metal that can replace copper in almost every instance, and it can be produced at thirty-five cents a pound it will be cheaper than copper at ten cents a pound, because it is three and one-half times lighter, and consequently there is three and one-half times more in bulk. Our competition will come chiefly from Pittsburgh, Pa., and Lockport, N. Y., but at close pushing we can sell this metal at a profit for fifteen cents a pound."—Delta.

Hieroglyphic Inscriptions.

Among the latest discoveries at Mycenae, terra-cottas of the earliest period and style have been reported, together with two tablets of Egyptian hieroglyphs bearing hieroglyphic inscriptions. Although these inscriptions have not as yet been wholly read, Prof. E. Brugsch, of Berlin, has recognized in the legend the name of a Pharaoh Amenophis, who was almost certainly Amenophis III., inasmuch as his cartouches has already been found elsewhere on antiquities of the Mycenaean age. The reign of this ruler of Egypt having occurred about 1430 B. C., these hieroglyphic inscriptions determine approximately the date of early Mycenaean culture—it might have been somewhat later, but it could not have been earlier than about B. C. 1400. This intercourse and relations between Egypt and Greece at the Mycenaean epoch are demonstrated, and Egypt is proved to have exerted a direct influence on Mycenaean art. The revelation is significant, Mycenaean art being the earliest effort, the very beginning of Greek art, and hitherto acknowledged to be pre-historic. In other words, the lions that guarded the gateway at Mycenae were contemporary with the Recumbent Lion of Amenophis III. And this was subsequent to the masterpieces of Assyrian and architecture executed by Thutmose III., along with other works of the eighteenth dynasty; between two and three centuries later than the Egyptian sphinxes at Tanis; five hundred years later than the statue of Sesostris III., of the thirteenth dynasty; sixteen hundred years later than the statue of Khufu of the fourth dynasty. The life-like statues of Amenophis and his wife Neferiti, the Cross-legged Scribe, the Shalika of Beled, the Panels of Hout, and quite likely two thousand years posterior to the statue of Sesostris and Nesa, as well as the relief of Seneferu, in the peninsula of Sinai, of the thirteenth dynasty. Greek art was an infant in the old age of Egyptian skill.—Independent.

A SIMPLE RELIEF FOR LUNG TROUBLES.—It has long been known that pine-needle pillows would alleviate persons afflicted with lung troubles, and a Florida editor relates an incident in support of the fact as follows: During a visit to the home of a most estimable lady living on Indian river, this editor was told of a discovery that had been made which may prove a boon to sufferers from lung or bronchial troubles. This lady having heard that there was peculiar virtue in a pillow made from pine straw, and having none of that material at hand, made one from fine soft pine shavings, and had the pleasure of noting immediate benefit. Soon all the members of the household had pine shavings pillows, and it was noticed that all coughs, asthma or bronchial troubles abated at once after sleeping a few nights on these pillows. An invalid suffering from lung trouble derived much benefit from sleeping upon a mattress made from pine shavings. The material is cheap, and makes a very pleasant and comfortable mattress, the odor of the pine permeating the entire room and absorbing or dispelling all unpleasant odors.—Christian at Work.

Plans have been prepared for the construction of a railroad to run by means of a cable up the front of the Catskills, the gradient being 1,700 feet in a mile and a quarter. With such a steep incline it will, of course, be necessary to take every precaution in the way of brakes and safety appliances to ensure freedom from accident in case of a fracture of the cable; but the engineers are confident that the scheme is a feasible one. There is no doubt that it will be a paying one, the present means of access to the Catskills being anything but satisfactory.

The age of aluminum is slowly creeping upon us. At last the metal is becoming cheaper, and a boat ten feet by five constructed of it has just been launched in Germany, propelled by a naphtha motor. More driblet and light far than steel and possessed of vastly greater tonnage strength; it only remains for the discovery of more ready methods in extracting the metal, which is omnipresent in the earth's crust, to revolutionize industry again.

I do wish that that people did but know the infinite rest there is in leaving off the six days of the month in anchoring the business ships of our daily life to the Saturday draw to a cove, leaving them to ride peacefully upon the Bow or Abb until Monday morning comes again.—Anna Warner.

Scrofula is, in the main, a disease of early life. Home knowledge is all astray about it. You cannot tell whether your child has it or not; your doctor will know.

We do not prescribe. We are chemists. We make the remedy, Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil. Your doctor must tell you when to use it.

A book on CAREFUL LIVING tells what scrofula is. Shall we send it? Free.

Scott & Bowne, Chemists, 135 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

Within the last month the immense business of King's Royal Germetuer Co. has been more than doubled and large orders are pouring in from all directions. On February 20th L. L. Lyons & Co., of New Orleans, gave them a cash order for seven thousand and two hundred bottles to be delivered at once.

It means:

- 1 That when such men as General Longstreet, General Turner, Governor Hubbard, Colonel Avery, Rev. W. G. E. Cunningham, Rev. J. B. Hawthorne and Rev. Sam Jones try a medicine and give it their unqualified indorsement the people believe them.
- 2 That Germetuer has done all that its most ardent friends have declared that it would do.
- 3 That it has mastered La Grippe, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, Insomnia, Kidney Troubles, Asthma, Summer Complaints and Catarrh wherever it has been tried.
- 4 That the discovery of Germetuer is the most valuable contribution that this century has made to medical science.

As a spring medicine it has no equal; it invigorates the stomach, aids digestion, tones up the system, and low drugs health and happiness. In this respect no other remedy can compare with it.

Germetuer is not a nauseous compound, but as pleasant to take as a glass of lemonade; the patient loves it and looks forward with pleasure to the time of taking it.

OBITUARIES.

SMITH-MR. SAMUEL W. SMITH was born in one county, N. C., in 1816, and died at his home in Holmes county, Miss., March 6, 1892. His boyhood and young manhood were spent in Florida. He was twice married; first, to Miss Mary Dulaney; and, second, to her sister, Miss Mary Dulaney, Dec. 4, 1879.

Bro. Smith was a faithful and devoted member of the M. E. Church, South, during the greater part of his long life. In the social and business relations of life he was distinguished for politeness, courtesy, honor and the most exact honesty. His word in any matter was his bond, and could be relied upon. He was loved, honored and respected by all who knew him. He commanded the affection and respect of all with whom he came into contact, and yet, it is said, he was familiar with no man. He scorned all that was little or low, and hated all of all kinds. Bro. Smith was a true man of God and the fast friend of his kind. He had made a fine property, and was a cheerful giver to every good cause. The widow, the orphan, the deaf and dumb, the poor found in him a friend and helper in every time of need. The preacher, the cause of missions and every enterprise of the church found an active friend and a generous supporter in this man of God. In all these things he took special pains to avoid ostentation to keep his left hand from knowing what his right hand did. He rarely ever contributed anything in a public collection, but took the preacher to one side and gave as much as the largest contributors.

Bro. Smith was a great sufferer; but in all his afflictions he regarded himself as the yoke-fellow of Christ in affliction. In this way he was sanctified, or made perfect, through suffering, and was our blessed Lord.

Bro. Smith was ready for the end when it came. Confidently, trustfully and cheerfully he passed down into the last river in full view of the reward that awaited him on the other side.

GILKEROY.

Pickens, Miss.

DANIEL-MRS. ELA DANIEL, daughter of B. A. Epperson and Mary Wilkins, was born April 1, 1852, in St. Landry parish, La. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in childhood; was baptised and enjoyed religion almost constantly during the latter years of her life. She was married to J. M. Daniel, Jan. 20, 1881, and to them three sweet children were born, whom she loved with all the devotion of an affectionate nature; but she realized the responsibility of motherhood, and strove to bring up her little ones in the way of the Lord. She had the most wonderful control over them that I have ever seen exercised by a mother, and, as a mother, she was ever ready to visit from house to house, I have often wished that all mothers had the same control over their children. It would be so much better for all parties concerned—parents, children and visitors.

Though she died young, she had not lived in vain; her good work lives in her children. She was a faithful and devoted wife, and through the trials and sorrows of life (and she had her share) she was patient and strong, bearing her burden cheerfully, and in the fear of God, she suffered through a long illness, at times suffering agonies, but was patient and submissive through it all; and when she came to die she was ready, being at peace with God and with men. She left ample testimony behind that she had gone home to heaven. May the blessings of God rest upon the husband and children and the other loved ones who are left behind to await the Master's call, and may we also be ready for the Master's call.

ROBT. HARRY.

SLATON.—In the death of Mrs. MARY J. SLATON, the church at Ruston and the community at large have sustained a heavy loss.

Mrs. Slaton was a Mays. Born in Georgia, and reared under the Methodism of that State, she developed into Christian life before she was twelve years old. Soon after reaching the period of womanhood, she was married to Henry C. Slaton, and with him came to Louisiana, where she raised a family of children—all of whom are following in the footsteps of their mother.

Born Dec. 10, 1825, and married Feb. 6, 1840, her years were devoted to the care of home. In this sphere she honored her sex. When, from physical infirmity, her husband was no longer able to grapple the cares of commerce, Mrs. Slaton applied her hands to the wheel of commerce, and at the time of her death, Jan. 24, 1892, she was the head of a prosperous mercantile house at Ruston, La., the affairs of which she kept well in the channel of propriety.

Her life and her death were such as become the children of the King. Her husband died about eleven years before her, and her children can well think of the blessed reunion of two loving, consecrated hearts on Jan. 24, 1892. May her children follow her as she followed Christ!

PEAVY.—JOHN W. PEAVY, Jr., son of Rev. J. W. and Sarah A. Peavy, was born in Monroe county, Miss., Dec. 12, 1837, and died near his father's home, in Lowndes county, Miss., Jan. 18, 1892. His death was tragical. He was waylaid and killed by negroes for his money.

The subject of this notice was a model young man; therefore, he never suspected any danger to his life. He was born of pious parents—his father a Methodist preacher of ability and usefulness and his mother a godly woman. He was taught and "knew" the Scriptures from his youth up. Dedicated to God in baptism by Rev. George Shuler, he came into the church when quite young, of which he was a consistent member. He illustrated Christianity in young manhood. No young man in this country had a better opportunity, and none ever availed himself of it better than he. His Christian character is a priceless legacy to his father, sister and step-mother, who were devoted to him. In a pastorate of sixteen years we have never seen such a sorrow before! The bereaved ones could not have borne this trouble had it not been for the grace of God, and the assurance that he was prepared for heaven. The gospel preached so long and so well by his father has sustained him and his family. The wound is being healed, but the scar will remain.

In the untimely death of our young brother his father's home has sustained the greatest loss, the community a valuable citizen, and the Methodist Church one of its best members. We expect to meet him in heaven. J. A. BOWEN.

GOODMAN.—MRS. CAROLINE GOODMAN was born in St. Stephens, Ala., Jan. 29, 1818; died at her home, in Wayne county, Miss., March 10, 1892.

Since 1870 she has lived a constant attendant upon all church services of every kind in the community, though her membership has been with the St. Francis street M. E. Church, South, in Mobile—the church of her husband, D. W. Goodman, at the time of his death. For unostentatious charity in its broadest sense Sister Goodman was noted. As a steward of the church she attended, I can say no demand had to be made upon her; she gave without solicitation, anticipating the needs of the church, and in the spirit, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." The preacher was ever welcome to her hospitality, and his wants at the parsonage looked after without his knowledge of the giver. Naturally diffident, she possessed the happy faculty that enabled her to make the recipient of her bounty feel that he was being honored in the receipt of her offerings. Her children were devoted to her, and, as an evidence of her influence over them, they are all members of the church.

It can be said of her, "She hath done what she could." A. TROTTER.

GARRETT.—We regret to chronicle the death of little RAYMOND, the son of Mr. A. M. and Mrs. M. E. Garrett. He was born Aug. 2, 1889; died March 13, 1892. Raymond was a bright and sweet child. His earthly pilgrimage was short. God is gathering up his jewels. He says, "For of such is the kingdom of heaven." So he now breathes a pure atmosphere in climes high above.

Little Raymond is missed at home by father, mother, brothers and sisters, and earth is robbed, but heaven is made richer. May God bless the loved ones who remain, heal their wounded spirits and bring them to that home where all may meet to sing the praises of God! Then we will better understand why little Raymond was so soon taken. O God, help us to bow and say: "Thy will be done. Blessed be the name of the Lord!" W. R. CARAWAY.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Hammett, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is a full choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone.—Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc. This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tune. The balance of the book consists of the robust and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Memphis Herald. After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 151, 155, 157, 158, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Westeyan Methodist.

TO THE METHODISTS OF MISSISSIPPI.

In assuming the trust imposed by the recent action of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, I turn with confidence to you. Your earnest co-operation will be a source of inspiration and a guarantee of success. Surely a great opportunity has come to us as a church. Providence has opened the way to supply a long felt want. The outlook is auspicious and the prospect brightens every day. We claim no monopoly, but recognize an imperative obligation to do our part in the educational work of our great State.

Arrangements are now being perfected to open the institution for the reception of students in the coming Fall. The main building is rapidly approaching completion. It will be an admirable structure, well fitted in its appointments for college work. Several buildings in proximity to this will be in readiness for the accommodation of boarders by the opening of the first session. The organization of the faculty of instruction will be completed in due time. As soon as practicable a prospectus will be issued, giving all necessary information. In the meantime be assured the policy of Millsaps College will be to bring its advantages within reach of the humblest, and as far as our resources will warrant, meet the demands of the most aspiring.

For the gratifying progress that has been made toward the realization of our hopes respecting this great enterprise we owe lasting gratitude to those who have been most intimately connected with the work. The members of the Board of Trustees have displayed the most unselfish devotion in promoting the interests of the college. Bishop Galloway from the inception of the enterprise has labored with consuming zeal. Major Millsaps, the philanthropic founder of the institution, despite the exactions of business cares, has given himself to the work with untiring assiduity. Surely our people throughout the State will respond generously to the efforts of these noble men whose names we will gratefully enshrine in our church annals.

Let us seize our opportunity and prove ourselves worthy of our high calling to advance the interests of Christian education. Let us not be found "dawdling at daylight."

W. B. MURKIN, President.

The Indian Mission.

BY REV. W. W. CAMMACK, appointed Missionary to the Choctaw Indians by the Mississippi Conference, December, 1891.

(Concluded.)

I have observed that these Indians make consistent members of the church to which they belong. There is a great outward reformation, at least. They are gradually giving up their old customs and habits, and are conforming to the customs of the white people. I will here relate a story told me, and is said to have occurred in this (Newton) county, which shows how careful they are to do the right thing when once they know what is right.

An Indian went into a store to settle an account. After settling, he said to the merchant, "I want a paper" (meaning a receipt). The merchant said, "You have no money for a paper; you can't read." But the Indian insisted that he must have a paper, stating his reason. Said he: "After while I die and go to heaven. Spec so. I come to the gate. The keeper ask me, 'You paid all your debts?' I say, 'Yes.' He say, 'Where your paper?' Now, you see, if I have no paper, I will have to go all the way to hell to prove that I paid my debts. This put me to heap trouble."

The merchant turned to the book-keeper, and said, "Give that Indian a paper." The fourth Sunday in March I had preached on the north side of Pearl river, at Wiley's house, near where I first preached. We had moved our appointment to Wiley's house for convenience; but Pearl river got up, and I could not cross without swimming. This was a great disappointment to me, and I guess it was to some, judging from a postal which I received from one of them, written several days before I was to have been there. It reads as follows:

Cooperwood, Miss, Mar 17th, 1892.
Rev. W. W. Cammack—
I do hope you will come and be with us one more time, we feel like we need you all time, we are waiting for you.
SIMPSON TURNER.

After finding out that I could not get to my appointment, I went out among the Tonohy Indians, living four miles north of Union, and drummed up a congregation for Sunday. I met this engagement, and preached at Allen Tonohy's house at three o'clock Sunday evening. I read and commented on the third chapter of John. I asked one of them (Henry) to assist me by reading the Choctaw as I read the English. He did so, and did very well for about eight or nine verses. He then took the "sunks," and would not read any more. I saw that it was useless to insist on his reading more, so I read the remainder of the chapter by myself; then gave a short discourse from the sixteenth verse. I do not know what effect it had upon them. They gave close attention. The men sat on chairs, and on the bed; the women sat on the floor, while the children played across the room.

The following week I made a trip out among the Philip Indians, near the Catholic school, intending to make an appointment among them for Sunday; but I soon found out from their leader that it would be useless, for the Catholics have captured all their children, and have them in school. The old ones, however, were anxious to have preaching, and insisted that I make an appointment six miles east of there, among the Talschulak Indians, and promised if I would do so, they would attend. I agreed to this, and fixed the time for the first Sunday in May.

I went from this place to Philadelphia, Miss., and, in company with Rev. J. C. Long, visited an Indian in the county jail. He has been put there for killing another Indian. I found that the sheriff and jailer had given him some books, and that he was learning to read. I gave him a Choctaw spelling, of which he seemed to be very proud. I talked with him about his spiritual condition, and was glad to find that he gave some evidence of a changed life.

While in Philadelphia I made arrangements to move my family there, and make this my headquarters. At present this will be nearer the Indians among whom I have decided to work, namely: the "Bogue Chitties." This is the hardest and most difficult field I could have selected anywhere among the Choctaws in East Mississippi. They are the worst Indians and the least disposed to be religious, and for this reason, if for no other, they are the ones who need the gospel most. There are four or five hundred within twenty miles of this place without preaching.

This closes the labors of the first quarter, or first three months; and, reviewing it from a human standpoint, I can see no visible result; yet a beginning had to be made, and I trust and pray that this beginning, though small, may be the foundation for great and lasting results in the near future.

The first Sunday in April I went out to the Catholic Indian School, but was too late to witness any of their exercises, as the morning service was over. I went back about three miles, where lives an Indian by the name of "Morris Bob." This is the first Indian dwelling I have found in a public place. They generally live in an out-of-the-way place. He gave me some coffee and biscuit, which was relished very much. I gave him some Choctaw books, of which he seemed very proud. When I started away, he said to me: "When will you preach near by? I want to hear him mighty bad."

I had arranged to spend the second Sunday on the north side of Pearl river, but the river was overflowing again, and I could not cross. I then decided to go out among the Indians west of Philadelphia. I was directed to an Indian by the name of "Captain Jim." I reached his house about twelve o'clock. He lives by the public road. This is the second one found in a public place. He was not at home, but I learned that he was about three miles away at his son's. I went on there. They gave me some coffee, bread and biscuit. The bread was the old-fashion "corn dodger," baked in an oven. It was very sweet, and reminded me of boyhood days. I found several Indians at this house. They were very shy of me at first, but I soon drew them out in a free conversation. One by the name of Columbus did most of the talking. He speaks good English, and expressed his opinion freely about things generally. He told me plainly that they did not want preaching, and then gave me his reasons. He first admitted that he believed it was good and right to those who wanted it; "but," said he, "we don't want it. Long time ago, after the wars with Indians, they commenced having preaching for Indians, and got them together; and then carried them off West, and deceived us. Several years after this they had preaching again, and got Indians together, and told us there was money for us off yonder somewhere, and if we would sign a paper, or go, we could get it. Some went; some sign paper; some get money, and some get none. We were deceived the second time, and we will never forget it. It is too late now for you to preach to us, though you may want nothing but what is right. You can't make these Indians believe it. They are scared; they think you want to get them off to the West."

I listened to this sad story with unusual interest and with feelings of deep regret to think that this race of human beings, once so happy in this country, had been despoiled, cheated, deceived, and driven here and yonder, until now they have but little confidence in that which they believe may possibly be good and right when presented by white men. It is also a sad fact that the most of the bad habits of which this people are guilty were learned from white men, such as cursing, drinking and adultery. This, I think, places us under a double moral obligation to them. The only chance now for us to redeem ourselves and to clear our skirts of their blood is to educate the children and give them a pure gospel, unmingled with government aid, lands, money, or anything of the kind. May the Spirit of God press these thoughts home to our consciences until we are willing to use every effort and means necessary to show to them that we are willing, as far as possible, to undo the wrongs others have done them!

"The Greater Responsibility."

In a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE there is an article under the above caption from the pen of Rev. S. S. Keener. I can not determine what object Bro. Keener had in view when he wrote the article. He certainly does not wish the sisters of the church to loan the Parent Board their $100,000, does he? Has it not been the wise and settled policy of the Woman's Board never to appropriate a dollar until the money is in hand? In this particular they have set an example to the Parent Board by which that body has not profited. Only a few years ago our Parent Board was deeply in debt, and a Week of Prayer and Self-Denial was arranged, and for three consecutive years our people were asked and urged to make special effort to pay the debt. My information was that the debt was reduced to about $20,000. Now the brethren are in debt again, and the work of the Parent Board is very much crippled. Will not some one rise up and explain how the Board has fallen back to where it was six years ago? Does not our church teach that it is wrong to contract debts without any probability of paying them? Are not our young preachers asked at the very door of the Conference if they are in debt so as to embarrass them? Our Bishops very properly caution our young preachers against debt; and this advice, it seems to me, applies with equal force to our missionary work. Can the Parent Board of Missions hope to escape all censure when they overstep more than once the liberality of the church? I am no apologist for the selfishness and stinginess of those who refuse to contribute to the cause of Christ as God has prospered them, for I believe our church should raise, at least, half a million dollars every year for foreign missions; but I think Bro. Keener is trying to use the wrong means to right what he considers to be a wrong. He suggests as one probable cause of this debt that part of the money which rightfully belongs to the Parent Board has gone into the hands of the Woman's Board. I do not think the facts will justify any such conclusion.

Fourteen years ago the Woman's Missionary Society was organized. At that time our church, as a whole, paid $65,000 for foreign missions in one year. In 1891 the Parent Board collected over $250,000 for their work, and the Woman's Board $75,000 for theirs, making $325,000—just six times as much. So far as I know, the most enthusiastic and liberal givers to the regular collection which the pastors take up for foreign missions are those engaged or in hearty sympathy with "woman's work for woman." Our women have created, or helped to create, a better missionary spirit among our people, and it is to be doubted whether we would have three Missionary Secretaries to-day if our women had not been actively engaged in this work. As a rule, the most liberal churches among us have the liveliest Woman's Missionary Societies.

Bro. Keener seems to think that it is a terrible thing for the Woman's Board of Missions to have a surplus on hand. Their appropriations from April 15, 1890, to April 15, 1891, were $65,000. Their resources are very little in advance of their appropriations. With the promise of more missionaries, and appropriations to be made for the ensuing year, where will the surplus be? Our wise and good women simply collect the money before they appropriate a dollar! Is not the healthy financial condition of the Woman's Board encouraging? And is not the unhealthy, depressed condition of the Parent Board discouraging? It does seem that if the feeble women of the church who collect their money in nickels and dimes principally, and can support thirty missionaries and manage to have money enough on hand to meet any exigency that may arise, that the great Southern Methodist Church ought to support forty-six missionaries and keep out of debt.

Bro. Keener is mistaken when he says the money is taken from one pocket and put in the other. It goes from both pockets into the Master's cause. He thinks he has made a fine point when he says it is far better to be hindered by a large debt than to be receiving interest from an idle surplus that should be saving souls. Is it a wise policy to be continually borrowing money to carry on this great work of the church? It takes as much money to pay the interest on the debt of the Parent Board as the North Mississippi Conference pays to foreign missions. Instead of the money they give saving souls, it is helping to keep up what seems to be a poor policy of the Board. Suppose the "surplus" does draw interest, it is all subject to check; and is it not better to draw interest than for it all to be paid out, and depend upon uncertainties to meet future demands? It is a poor financier, indeed, who makes no provision for accidents or emergencies. The work our women are doing is a grand work. The opening fields are increasing, and a divine Providence is directing the workers. Woman's spiritual activities are exercised, and her own experience of God's great love grows richer day by day. All honor to the results achieved by the women and children!

T. W. LEWIS.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. White Davis, Monterey, La., April 30: "On account of the water rising rapidly, I have not been able to get to some of my appointments. But little has been done during this month, only in the way of organizing a Sunday-school and prayer meeting. There is some prospect of an overflow, and, if it comes, these people will be pretty nearly ruined, financially. Pray for us, brethren."

Rev. Ben P. Jacob, P. C., Eunice Springs, Miss., May 2: "We had an interesting and profitable service yesterday at Forest Hill. In the evening we completed the organization of an Epworth League at Mt. Olivet Church, with thirteen charter members. This league has good material in it, and I hope to see much good result from its labors. We are looking forward with interest to our District Conference at Batesville, expecting the presence of the Lord; also to the reopening of our church at Pisgah, May 28 and 29. Will have Sunday-school gathering in the morning and Quarterly Conference in the evening, on the twenty-eighth, and dedication of church on Sunday. We invite the assistant editor to be present."

L. L. C., Vidalia, May 1: "The water is from bank to bank. The little town of Vidalia is looking beautiful, with its green trees and beautiful flowers. Sunday, May 1, Rev. H. H. Ahrens held service in the Methodist Church; two accessions. Singing in the evening, church at night. The white-winged dove of peace is once more in our midst. The political struggle is past. Friend and foe met in the church. We all knelt to one God. We thank the Giver of all that is pure that our lives have been spared; that the white banner of peace is floating above our native home—beautiful Louisiana."

Rev. Jno. B. Kent, P. C., Lake Charles mission, La., May 2: "Our new church in the northern part of this city was opened for worship yesterday, and a society and Sunday-school organized. Our building is small, but is neat, well constructed, and an honor to Methodism in these parts. We expect to have the presiding elder dedicate it the first Sunday in June. A church was badly needed here. Numbers of laboring men who could not go to the upland church can easily attend this one. I only have one other appointment; where I preach once a month. Have a good Sunday-school there, and the work is moving on."

Rev. R. H. Barr, P. C., Westville, Miss., May 2: "I am glad to inform you that we have built a nice parsonage on this charge, at a cost of $300, in the town of Westville, and thankful to say that over two-thirds of it has been paid. We have the balance in subscription on good men, which is to be paid this Fall. The circuit is well up with the assessment at date, far beyond what it was at this time last year; so you see that we are on the up grade. There is some of the best people on this work that I have ever met. They are always ready to take hold and do their duty in that of church work. Pray for our success the present year in the work of the Lord."

Rev. J. F. Evans: "Slater Louisiana, mother-in-law of Rev. R. A. Burroughs, died at Durant, Friday night, April 29. The funeral services were held in the Methodist Church, Sunday, at ten o'clock. A very large concourse of people was in attendance, and followed this faithful Christian woman to her final resting place. Truly, a woman of mercy, love, prayer and kindness has fallen. The thoughtful people of Durant showed great kindness, and anticipated the wants of the family. How pleasant to a bereaved family to know that they are in the midst of sympathetic hearts and hands, ever ready to administer to their wants! May the Lord abundantly reward this people!"

Rev. D. W. Bahh, Hebron circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "I send you my postal quarterly report. Our second quarterly meeting is over. We think it was a time of some profit. Dr. Wier, our presiding elder, was promptly on hand in the spirit of his mission; did his work well. Our people like him very much. We now have a Sunday-school at each church, with a growing interest. We have programs for Children's Day. We have preached one sermon at each place, especially to the children, which is one of our methods of pastoral instruction to them. Our congregations are improving in numbers, so that we think some success may be assured in the taking of our collections soon. The ADVOCATE is pretty well circulated here; but I fear some are going on time, or rather behind. We hope to have a revival on this work. Success to the ADVOCATE."

Rev. W. D. McCallough, P. C., Indianola, Miss., May 3: "Our second Quarterly Conference has come and gone. Our beloved presiding elder was with us in the spirit and power of the Lord. He preached two powerful sermons to appreciative audiences. We were edified and delighted. He is efficient, proficient and sufficient; he covers all the ground; he is the right man in the right place at the right time. We thank God for such a man. We are advancing on most lines; but, oh! how deeply we feel the need of a general, thorough revival of spiritual religion! We expect Bros. Luter and O'Brien to be with us a few days following the third Sunday. We are praying for the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, the revival of the church, and conversion of souls. Pray for us, brethren; pray for us. Our good women have had our church and parsonage enclosed, and we have a comfortable home. Long live the ADVOCATE, and may the Lord give it success against gambling halls and dram-shops!"

Rev. J. A. Bowen, Aberdeen, Miss., May 3: "The ten days' meeting held for us, March 18-28, 1892, by Bros. Inge, Whitehurst and Saunders, abides. People are still joining our church every week, and some church members are being developed who never did so before. Our communion services are the largest and best I ever saw. Christian liberality is growing so much that finances are better up than this time last year. Our men's prayer meeting every Monday night is now two years old, and continues in power and usefulness. The Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference convenes here the last of June. We are praying for and expecting this meeting to be the greatest blessing Aberdeen ever enjoyed. The good-women of this charge are doing all in their power to make the occasion one of success and power. While we are so highly favored, there remains much to be done for the town, which is hard and difficult. Pray for us, and come to see us."

Rev. J. C. Ellis, Hillsboro, Miss., May 6: "I suppose we have not had any of the storms that many of the brethren are blessed with; but suppose you might call it a perpetual breeze, as we find on our parsonage memorandum book, from various persons, dating from the time we were domiciled in the parsonage up to date, for us and the next preacher, whoever he may be, viz: cups, saucers, plates, broom, towels, pitcher, dipper, water bucket, chickens, tablespoons, counterpane, pillow-cases, goblets, table cloths and napkins, besides some eatables and presents. If the ratio of the above continues until Annual Conference, some of the brethren that were anxiously glad to be delivered from Hillsboro charge will be anxiously glad to hear their names called out for Hillsboro charge. But I will forbear, as I may overestimate this people. However, I do feel encouraged. We are now holding our second Church Conference, of which we find none on record, and had but little encouragement to establish our church system; but am happy to say, in conclusion, that the future prospects are beginning to dawn brighter and brighter. Pray for us."

Rev. J. R. Rye, Daisy, La., April 30: "After my return from District Conference, where I spent several days pleasantly with friends and dear brethren, I was accompanied by the Rev. N. B. Norwood. After we arrived at my domicile, we commenced a protracted meeting, notwithstanding the people were enthused over the present election. Some thought it would be a failure, but the preaching went on, and God was in it, and God never fails, though men frequently fail; and I am persuaded it is because they trust too much to self. Brethren, let us get old self out of the way, and let God come in, and then the work will prosper, and not till then. Man is nothing by himself. We held service every night until the Sunday following. Bro. Norwood did the preaching, and God greatly blessed the effort. We had twenty-nine accessions to the church, and two infants baptized. The meeting helped the election wonderfully. It was said that it was the quietest election that was ever held in this country. Well, in reference to our church-building at Grand Prairie or Daisy: The carpenter work is about completed, except making the seats, and I am about half done painting it. I have just come in from work, and feel very tired. I would have been done painting, but, unfortunately for me, while painting one morning, my scaffold gave way, and the next thing I knew I was on the ground calling for help. After some excitement I found that I had sprained my instep very badly, which disabled me from work for a week, but am getting better now. Brethren, pray for us. Blessed be God! we are gaining ground. Twenty-nine accessions this meeting, and two previous to this. Total since Quarterly Conference, thirty-one. Pray for us."

AM OLD AND BLIND.

[The following beautiful poem, continually quoted as Milton's, was written a few years since by a Quaker lady of Philadelphia, Elizabeth Lloyd, now Mrs. Howell. It is indeed worthy of Milton.]

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten with God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind:
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong, Father Supreme, to thee.

O merciful One!
When men are farthest, then thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy charity I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning toward me; and its holy light Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my hinder knee
I recognize thy purpose, clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimm'd that I may see Thyself—thyself alone.

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost dead; there
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapp'd in the radiance of thy smiles land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When Heaven is opening to my sightless eyes,
When ains from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being flows with rapture—waves of thought Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine,
Within my bosom looms unsparingly fire
Lit by no skill of mine.

Editorial Correspondence.

[This paper has been necessarily delayed.—
ASSISTANT EDITOR.]

On the morning of April 13 we left Morton, Miss., in company with Bro. D. P. Bradford, for Carthage, the seat of the Brandon District Conference. We had a span of stout ponies with a well-made buggy, and it was well we had. The frequent hard rains had made the roads almost impassable in places, but all went well until we reached the Tuscaloosa swamp. There we had our tug of war. Ralls and small trees had been thrown across a road recently opened, and these had been slightly covered with earth. We went hump, hump, continuously, except when, for some reason, the ralls had been removed or not laid (which seemed to be about every fifty yards); then, without warning, the buggy would lunge forward, and plunge down into mud up to the hubs. This continued for over two miles. In due time, however, we reached Walnut Grove, where, through the forethought of Bros. McDonald and Miller, provision had been made for dinner, both for the delegates and their teams. In due time we reached Carthage. It is a delightful village of about five hundred inhabitants, situated on Pearl river. It has as beautiful a church as we have ever seen in an inland town, built from one of our church extension plans. Thursday was spent in a Sunday-school Conference. Important subjects had been selected, and the discussions showed much interest on the part of the participants. It will result in much good to the entire district. On Friday the Conference was called to order by the presiding elder, and the reports from the brethren showed an advance all over the district. Under the wise leadership of Presiding Elder Johnston, continued by the law-abiding McDonald, this district is rapidly coming to the front. On Friday night we had the pleasure of listening to an address by Bro. Cammack, our missionary to the Choctaw Indians. His letter on his work appeared in our last, and is concluded in our present edition. It will be read with interest by all. The Conference raised a voluntary contribution of over $8 to buy books for his work, showing the interest manifested by his own district in this long-neglected mission.

Sunday we spent in Morton, and Wednesday, in company with Bro. Watkins, agent of Millsaps College, we started to the Winona District Conference, to convene in Greenwood. All along the line of the Yazoo Division of the Illinois Central railroad effects of the hard rains and overflows were visible. Crops were destroyed, fences gone, creeks out of their banks, and slimy trestles showed that the railroads had suffered with the others. At Greenwood the Yazoo river was out of its first banks, but confined within its second. The greater part of the year the citizens of this delightful town can and do walk down into the Yazoo river in the dust, and need not come within ten feet of the water; yet they are in the Yazoo river.

The District Conference was presided over by Bishop Hendrix. His questions elicited answers which gave a clear insight into the spiritual interests of the charges, as well as temporal. Never did he lose sight of that most important subject. His sermons were powerful, being full of the Holy Spirit. The Conference closed with a praise meeting conducted by the Bishop himself. It will long be remembered.

From Greenwood we went to Friar's Point, the place of meeting for the Greenville District Conference. Bishop Hendrix again presided. We listened with great interest to the reports from the works. A great change is being wrought throughout this Delta country. Our preachers are strong, courageous, consecrated men, not afraid of work, nor of hardships, nor of discouragements. That whole country is being taken for Methodism. Churches are being built and repaired, the membership increased, and a higher type of Christianity than ever before is prevailing. The presence of our Bishop, full of the Holy Ghost, has electrified the preachers and sent a thrill throughout the entire Delta. The influence of this Conference will long be felt. We would like to say more, but time and space forbid. Suffice it to say, these three District Conferences, crowding upon each other in such rapid succession, hurrying us from place to place, were filled with pleasure and profit.

Some Further Reasons.

"Easter is derived from a Saxon word, the name given to a festival which commemorates the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

—Kebble's Christian Year.

The foregoing quotation headed a communication in a recent number of the ADVOCATE. It can only confirm my opposition to the effort so long insidiously and now openly made to engraft "Easter" fol-de-rois into the service of the M. E. Church, South. The Jesuitism of Kebble was never more apparent than in that brief quotation. It is true that "Easter is derived from a Saxon word," but why suppress the fact that the latter word was Easter, Eoster, or Ostara, the name of an idol, who was to the heathen Saxon what Venus was to the Greeks and Romans, and Astarte to the Eastern world, and the mode of worship just as licentious and indecent!

John Kebble is spoken of in the Schaff Herzog "Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge" as "a saintly divine and poet of the Church of England." Of his "Christian Year" more than 375,000 copies have been sold—about ninety-six editions having appeared in his life time. Three of his hymns appear in our own hymn book. Yet, according to Dr. Schaff, "Mr. Kebble adopted very high views on the sacraments and the apostolical constitution of the church. He held to the doctrine of the apostolical succession, the high sacramental view of the Lord's Supper, the usefulness of the confessional, which he regretted that circumstances did not justify him in introducing into his own church. At Oxford he was a close and intimate friend of Newman, Pusey, and Harrell Froude, who had once been his pupil. With him and several others the notion started of issuing brief and pointed tracts promulgating High-Church principles, and raising the standard of piety in the church. The result was the so-called tracts for the times, which reached the number of ninety, created a profound impression in England, and the studies spent in the preparation of which, or the stimulus of them, led to the defection to the Roman Catholic communion of Newman and others." Kebble himself wrote eight of the series, . . . the first (No. 4) being on the apostolical succession. On July 14, 1833, he preached a sermon in Oxford on "National Apostasy," the occasion of which was the suppression of ten Irish bishoprics, and which Cardinal Newman heard with the deepest interest, and has characterized as the starting point for the Romeward tendency. Mr. Kebble saw Dr. Newman's famous tract (No. 90) before it was published, and approved it."

And this is the manner of man oftened as authority for our incorporation of the name of a heathen goddess into our Methodist vocabulary and for Methodists falling into line with the Protestant Episcopalians and the Church of Rome! It is a notorious fact that in those chronicles most given to Easter observances worldliness prevails and there is a bold denial of vital experimental religion. Easter-observance is close akin to Mariolatry, and that is a long way from the worship of the true and living God. Irreligion and corruption appear to move with equal pace with Easter observances. The observance of "times and seasons" is inimical to Christianity.

The policy of the Roman Church in our day is not typified by the fox and stake, as in former times; but it might be represented by the fox or the serpent, since the shrewdness of the Jesuits shapes the policy of the Pope. Consequently, Rome is not proceeding by force, but by insinuation. The plan seems to be to get Protestant Churches to adopt Roman names and Roman usages. Little by little the work is to go on. And after Easter, what next?

It is time some one was speaking out on this subject. The forebodings which oppressed Bishop Linus Parker, and forced from him the declaration that there must be either a reformation or a revolution in our Methodism, were well founded. With our great central organ throwing its influence in favor of Easter, and either suppressing or delaying the protests sent for publication; with Conference organs publishing special Easter editions; our "senior" Missionary Secretary assuming the right to align our church with the devotees of Eostre; operative performances in our city churches; a general hue and cry against those who preach sanctification, as taught by Wesley and Watson, and as laid down in the very text-books our illecebrates are required to read, and as set forth in our hymns; a wholesale and indiscriminate denunciation of evangelists; while some Bishops, presiding elders, preachers and other church members do not hesitate to travel to and fro on the Sunday trains, as in inclination or convenience or cheapness may allure them. We are multiplying machinery at the expense of spirituality, and instead of putting on the whole armor of God and arming ourselves with the sword of the Spirit, we are resorting to all sorts of makeshifts, until it does seem that "Iahabod" must soon be written over our portals.

A good woman has said of me that I am only butting my head against a stone wall in penning these protests; a highly esteemed friend thinks I am riding a hobby; another sends me by mail a gospel Easter card; and a Methodist Sunday-school superintendent, at whose house dancing and progressive euchre parties are said to be permitted, laughs at my folly; but I love the Methodist Church, our doctrines and polity, and I see danger ahead of us and an urgent need for the reformation or revolution spoken of by Bishop Parker. Not Easter follies, not more machinery, but the endowment with power from on high, is the need of the church to day. O for a mighty pentecostal baptism! T. L. MELLE.

Whose Servant?

Whose servant am I? This is a question that everyone should ask himself. Am I a servant of the Heavenly King, or am I a servant of the god of this world? Christ said: "No man can serve two masters. Ye can not serve God and mammon." We can not be both Christian and sinner at the same time. The Lord said, "Verily he that committeth sin is a servant of sin;" and John says, "He that committeth sin is of the devil." And, again, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he can not sin because he is born of God." Not that it is impossible for the Christian to commit sin, but there is that within him which causes him to hate sin, and he can not afford to bring reproach upon the cause of his heavenly Master. He knows he is the child of a great King, and, therefore, can not wilfully transgress his holy commandments. We say of an honest man that he can not steal, and of a truthful man that he can not lie; yet we know this is so only in a moral point of view. So it is with "whosoever is born of God." Although in his power, he will not do that which he abhors and against his will. Now the lowest standard of Bible Christianity is deliverance from sin. This is why our Savior was to be called Jesus, "because he shall save his people from their sins." The meaning of the word "salvation" is deliverance from not only the guilt, but from the power and dominion of sin. When we were servants of sin, we were free from righteousness; "but now, being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." E. B. Easter Sunday.

Having read in our church papers the advice given of the subject of celebrating Easter, I have indulged in some thought on the subject, though only a woman who jumps at conclusions, while our learned brethren argue. I have nothing to say against honest persons, with capacity and discretion, giving that which is salutary; and I believe all honest hearts are willing to receive and be guided by it. In matters of religion—a subject of more importance than all things combined—it seems to me those of the household of faith should soar above family quarrels, though they may not all think and see alike.

In this connection I wish to give a little of our experience on Easter Sunday. The Little Workers of Brookhaven decided to hold a public meeting on that night. Perhaps the readers of the ADVOCATE have read of their earnest labors here. They have sent off to Bro. Holt, our missionary treasurer, thirty-seven dollars already. On Saturday afternoon this faithful little band came to the church with evergreens and flowers to adorn the temple of our God. They arranged their flowers according to their own taste and pleasure, and I, for one, Mr.

Editor, felt no desire to stop them in their loving service. On Sunday morning Mr. Weems preached on the resurrection to a full house. We have had good services all the year, and had twenty-four added to our number; but on Easter Sunday the Lord came in power, and visited us with a pentecostal shower. Now the question arises in my mind, Would the Lord honor our sacrifices if they were offensive to him? At night the children opened their service by singing, "All for Jesus," after which our dear little president, Alice Woodward, read an appropriate selection from the Scriptures, and called on a little boy, Meredith Wood, to pray. He knelt humbly and reverently in the presence of that large congregation, and led them in earnest prayer. The secretary read a short history of their work, and told how earnestly they were striving to lead a purer and holier life. Then followed recitations by the children, great and small—all done in an earnest, devotional manner. Many eyes were full of tears as these children taught them how earnestly they work for Jesus. Appropriate songs were sung, and the hearts of young and old were filled with love and joy as the children led them through the service. The Lord met with us at every service on that day; in the Sunday-school as well, where teachers and children contributed $12.50 on our missionary debt. Our college president, Bro. L. T. Fitzhugh, is our superintendent, full of zeal and love for Christ and his cause.

Who can show evil in celebrating Easter when the smile of the Father is upon it? Mrs. S. G. WEEMS.

A Happy Reunion.

Yesterday (April 26) was a day of great social and religious enjoyment at the Caseyville parsonage. For the first time in nearly seven years my father, Rev. H. P. Lewis, had his entire family, children and grandchildren, together. It had been raining for several days up to the twenty-fifth, when the clouds dispersed, rain ceased, and the sun came out in his beauty and splendor.

About ten o'clock the neighbors began to come in, one, two and three at a time, each one with a basket or box well filled with nice, good things—cakes of various kinds, pies, oysters, jam, jellies, pickles, fresh meat, chicken pies, etc. Old men and boys, young men and maidens, old women and children, came from various directions until the house was well filled with people who wore bright and cheerful faces.

At noon a large table was spread, the contents of baskets and boxes suitably arranged thereon, and everyone, old and young, seemed to enjoy what was set before them. The children had a happy time romping and playing; the young people enjoyed themselves, furnishing music, vocal and instrumental, to the company; while the old people had a pleasant time generally. Our father and mother, with their nine children—six sons and three daughters—their three grandchildren, all in good health, with good minds and, I trust, good hearts, were as cheerful and happy as they could well be.

About three o'clock P. M. we all assembled for prayers. The twentieth chapter of St. John was read, a few verses of "How firm a foundation" were sung, when all knelt in humble prayer to God, after which the company dispersed.

"When shall we all meet again?
When shall we all meet again?
Oft shall glowing hope aspire,
Oft shall weared love retire,
Oft shall death and sorrow reign,
Ere we all shall meet again."

One of the nine,
Mrs. BETTIE L. JAGERS.

Christian Character.

Christian is the force of a man's personality as modified and developed by the work of the Holy Spirit. Christianity does not seek to destroy the natural and moral qualities of man, but to elevate, strengthen and sanctify them. But the individual man, under the Christian system, is taught "of the Holy Spirit" the way of life, and under his own responsibility the influence of the Holy Spirit must be voluntarily accepted as the inspiring and controlling principle of the qualities which belong to him by nature. If this be not the case, the man remains a "natural man," and his character is his natural character. But the beginning of a new moral course of life, through the work of the Holy Spirit, is regeneration, and in regeneration the true foundation of the Christian character is laid. But this regeneration, though it requires active faith on the part of man, is, nevertheless, a work of God, and, therefore, character is necessarily a divine work, "lest any man should boast." (Eph. ii, 9.)

Of course, all the practical forms of goodness, the cardinal virtues, so called (II. Peter i, 5-7), and the special Christian virtue, or charity, are elements of this Christian character. It manifests itself in the "fruits of the Spirit," which always in turn resort upon the character, bringing it constantly into nearer identity with the "inner" or "spiritual" man (Eph. iii, 16; iv, 23). It fixes the moral worth of the individual, as well as his fitness for the kingdom of God, in which the entire character, the whole man, is preeminently required. (Matt. vi, 24; xli, 23). Christianity demands the whole heart, for "out of the heart are the issues of life," and the ruling disposition of a man's heart forms the essence of his character. With Paul, character is the man. The holy character is the "new man;" the corrupt character the "old man." But though the Spirit works this Christian character in man, it leaves free play for the special gifts and endowments of the individual. Although "in Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek," there is room in Christ's kingdom for diversities springing from temperament, race or nationality. The Word of God is regarded in the Christian system as the rule of life and standard of appeal for the Christian character.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

We, your Committee on Sunday-schools, beg leave to make the following report:

We have gathered the following facts from the reports of our pastors: 1. That there is not more than one-half as many Sunday-school scholars as there are church members. 2. That about nine-tenths of the teachers in the Sabbath-schools are good women, while the male members take little or no interest at all. 3. That a large majority of the country schools suspend during the winter months. 4. That very few schools observed Children's Day last year.

Now, in view of the above discouraging features of these reports, it is all important that we, as pastors and Sunday-school workers, should investigate the cause of these things, and try, if possible, to remedy them. We would, therefore, recommend: 1. That the pastors preach a special sermon to the parents in their several charges on the importance of giving their children the benefit of the great advantages offered them through the Sunday-school, and that each school appoint one or more committees whose duty it shall be to visit from house to house and urge the parents not only to send their children to Sunday-school, but to go themselves, so that it might be truthfully said the Sunday-school is the church of God studying his Word. 2. We would recommend that the pastors and superintendents form classes of young men with the view of preparing them to teach in Sunday-school, so that the time may come when this labor of love and great means of grace may be shared and enjoyed by the male membership. 3. We recommend that the pastors use every effort to have their houses of worship made sufficiently comfortable to accommodate the schools during the winter months, and that in literature they subscribe for, at least, twelve months, and thereby avoid the apparent necessity of closing during the winter. 4. In view of the fact that the Sunday-school agent has left us absolutely without excuse for observing Children's Day, in that he is prepared to furnish the programmes to all the schools free of charge, we urge the pastors to see to it that each school is provided with the programme, and that due observance is given to this day.

In conclusion, we think it a question of vital importance that each superintendent insist on every member of his school having a copy of the Bible and taking it with him each Sunday.

Respectfully submitted,

J. B. STREETER, Chairman.

Buried Talents.

Yonder is a man in public life. He is a lawyer or politician. He has his talent; at least, we presume so, since he is a professed Christian; but he has turned his profession into a mere opportunity to gain wealth or advance his own ambitious plans for life. He has not traded with his Lord's money. He shows it to nobody. It is not even suspected by those who know most of him, that he has a "talent" from the Lord. What has become of it? It is the same story. He has "digged in the earth," and hid the Lord's money there. It is buried beneath his worldly life and affairs.

There are many professors whose social position gives them abundant opportunity for trading with their heavenly gift and bringing large returns to the Lord; but, alas! they have converted their sphere of social life into a mere earth-pit, and there they have "hid their Lord's money." Look at them. Is it not an earth-pit? Is there any sign that to them their social position and privileges are anything more than an opportunity for the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life"? Do they ever say to themselves: "This is my opportunity for traffic in spiritual things; let me make the best of my talent, while I may"? Have they ever, of purpose, sought to win over to the Lord's side anyone of the hundreds of people over whom they have special influence by reason of their social standing? How are they using this precious talent given of God?

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."—Verse 2.

As the fifty-first Psalm is regarded by the Christian world as the typical prayer of penitence, so this Psalm which we study to-day is the model song of praise. It is not, as so many recent praise-songs are, tainted with the spirit of boasting—a sort of self-praise under cover of devotion—but is exultant without presumption; and in its highest strains there is a tone of sweet humility. There is, too, an intelligent understanding of God's favors bestowed, as well as of his nature as being intrinsically worthy of praise, that indicates a habit of thought, and not merely a transient movement of the emotions.

Ver. 7. All—every part and power—of his being had received blessing from God, as the next four verses set forth; so "all that is within him" is called upon to join in praise.

Ver. 2-5. An array of benefits. He forgives sin, heals disease, redeems life, crowns with mercy, satisfies longings. Bless the Lord! All wants are met. Pardon saves from punishment; healing brings back health to the soul that was sickened by sin; forfeited life is redeemed by the purchase of blood; undeserved kindness crowns the pardoned, restored soul like a garland of flowers; all food for soul-nourishment is given in gracious plenty; renewed, like the eagle after the molting season is over, the soul in its strength and gladness soars heavenward in its aspirations, strong of pinion, clear of vision. Yes, "bless the Lord . . . forget not all his benefits."

Ver. 6, 7. This goodness on God's part is not a new thing in his dealings with men. "His ways" were made known to Moses; in his day, for oppressed Israel, he "executed righteousness and judgment." All along their history the children of Israel had witnessed his acts, as he provided for their deliverance, fed them in the wilderness, brought them to the land of promise, drove out their enemies before them and established them in their possessions.

Ver. 8. "Merciful"—full of compassion—loves to forgive. "Slow to anger"—patient, postponing punishment and longing to bless.

Ver. 9. He will cease to chide when we repent. He is angry with the sinner as such, but his anger ceases when we turn to him. He is not implacable.

Ver. 10-12. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" is the law of sin and death; but God has not "executed sentence speedily." He is full of mercy. His mercy is beyond our understanding—Infinite, immeasurable. How far is "the east from the west"! The idea is that of absolute separation. Forgiveness is absolute; the pardoned transgression is forever gone, so far as the attitude of God toward us is concerned.

Ver. 13, 14. Childhood is weak, untrained, ignorant, impulsive; rash judgment. A good father sees in his children much of error; but he is not harsh, nor out of sympathy with them. He pities them in their weakness; he is patient, painstaking, gentle. If he knows that they love and reverence him, he will be full of forbearance. God is our Father. He pities us, even when, for our welfare, he afflicts us. Jesus taught us to call him "Our Father." He is kind to his children. He knows our limitations. He knows how we blunder, and is patient. All along he tries to teach us, to train us in the right. And even when we sin—as we need not and ought not, for his grace is sufficient for us—even when we sin, "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Ver. 15-18. Short lived, easily destroyed. The hot wind of the East sometimes destroys vegetation for the time; scorching, withering as it goes, it works death to the tender grass. So man, frail, easily swept away. No strength is in him. But God's "mercy endures forever;" his righteousness is eternal. He will not fall those who trust him. Children's children shall find him "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." They who "do his commandments" will find him always the same kind, patient, loving Father, solicitous for the good of his people.

Ver. 19-22. God is universal ruler. All angels and men, all his works have received of his goodness. Let all praise him. All are upheld and cheered and guided by him. He is the fountain of all good to all. Let all give him glory—and especially thou, "O my soul;" thou, whom he hath forgiven, and healed, and redeemed, and crowned, and sanctified, call upon him with praise and thanksgiving; take thou "the cup of salvation" and call upon the name of the Lord.

The Work in Mexico.

I have received in the last two days seven dollars for the church in Mexico City. Five dollars of this money was sent me from Crystal Springs by Mrs. Middleton, to whom it was given by a good sister for the Lord's cause. Today I had a visit from Bro. P. Howard, of the Adams circuit. He gave me two dollars for this church—one for himself and one for his wife. The gift was accompanied by many good words expressive of interest and sympathy in this noble enterprise. Would that more of our people felt as he does on the all-important subject of foreign work.

My weekly letters from Mexico carry me back in interest and sympathy daily. They write me how they miss us and pray for us each day. I am just in receipt of a beautiful letter from Mrs. Roldan, our teacher in Mexico City, and, as many of the friends of the ADVOCATE's home are interested in her work, I will translate a portion of her letter. After writing of the trials and persecutions of "holy week"—the week preceding Easter—she says:

"He who will persevere unto the end shall have the crown of life." Oh! how beautiful and consoling are these words! When we meditate on them all obstacles, difficulties and persecutions have no dominion over us, and we have strength to resist and are encouraged to exercise good among ourselves, always following the teachings, so precious, of our immaculate Master, "Love one another." You ought to rejoice that you are instrumental in providing, so that the holy word is circulated in the tender hearts of our children, since they are anxious for the divine Word, hungering for the heavenly bread and thirsting for the water of eternal life. With what pleasure and eagerness they listen to me, many of them from Catholic families, and I have confidence that this is seed sown in good ground, and, though late, will bear fruit. This is my experience, as I am going to give you, of one of them. She came to-day to our society, a young lady. When she was a small child she came to our school, and there received the beautiful light of the gospel. She went on growing, and with her faith in her only Savior. Some years passed, and she asked to be a member of the church, and was received. Through her efforts her father was converted, then her mother and brothers and many among her friends, and you can not imagine what rejoicing it causes me to see her now conducting her family and other children to the Sunday school. These children are (says the Psalmist) "as a tree planted by the river of waters that give it fruit in season."

My heart rebounds with gladness and tears of joy fill my eyes to see, day after day, so many souls saved and made precious jewels for the Savior's crown; since not only this child, but many others, too numerous to mention, in whom the holy word has found a lodgment. Blessed be the Giver of every good and perfect gift! Follow these children as they learn their tasks. Your treasure is in heaven. Courage! In your career animate and encourage the Christians, as you did us, and we feel sure they will struggle with boldness in the grand and triumphant army of Christ. The children's society here progresses well, spiritually and materially, and each day shows greater interest in the missionary work. In order to increase the funds of the society we have adopted this plan: All the largest children in the school will remain at school every day during the season till sundown, doing some work to sell for the society. The very smallest children wish to stay and work; so all are occupied. The smallest who can not sew, yet know how to read, learn their verses and teach them to others who can scarcely speak plainly. We have exemplified "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." All do what they can and give what they can. One poor little child who has many sisters said to me: "I can not give anything—not one cent—because they never give us anything in my home. But you told me that our friend, Senora Weems, had the goodness to leave a piece of cloth for the poor children to work on. Let me have a little piece and help in the work." So she was at work; but, being the eldest of the children, the mother needed her and took her from school to work. Still the poor child met me at Sunday school and gave me her dues for the society.

The first child, Maria, is a good child, sympathetic and intelligent. She is the comfort of her poor mother in her affliction. She has learned almost all the Psalms and many of the Gospels, and when her mother is troubled (for many times they have nothing to eat all day—not even the bread for breakfast) she encourages her mother to find strength in the promise she reads from the Bible. The poor mother is a great Romanist, but says her daughter's counsels and the words she repeats give her poor heart rest. She watches the conduct of her daughter as she leaves her to attend punctually to the services of our church. Such praise this poor little creature takes to be the Sunday-school! She lives two miles from the church. What do you think? This child does not eat and goes until four or five in the evening, contented and satisfied to come and do something for her Savior. If at any time her mother gives her a cent to buy her a piece of bread at mid-day, she comes with an eloquent face, and says: "I never have anything for the society, so I give you this cent. That is so little, but it will show my willing heart."

I receive many such letters, and translate this that our friends may see how earnest and anxious are the poor people of priest-ridden Mexico. Pray for them and help them.

Sick Headache? BEECHAM'S PILLS will relieve.

Woman's Missionary Society, Greenville District.

The third annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, convened in the Methodist Church at Friar's Point, April 20, 1892, at three P. M., and was presided over by Mrs. G. H. Lipscomb, district secretary. Opened by singing Hymn No. 668, and prayer by Rev. W. S. Shipman, followed by Scripture reading from 1 Peter 1, by Mrs. G. H. Lipscomb. Mrs. T. B. Clifford was elected secretary. The president gave her report as district secretary for the past year, and then called for reports from the different auxiliaries. The following are the societies and delegates heard from: Greenville, Mrs. D. C. Montgomery; Bolivar, no report; New Salem, no report; Jonestown, Mrs. D. P. Wise; Hood, no report; Rosedale, no report; Clarkdale, Mrs. John Clark, Jr.; Hollandale, Mrs. T. B. Clifford; Lula, no delegate, but written report received; "Lilies of the Valley" of Greenville, Mrs. D. C. Montgomery; "Swamp Lilies" of Greenville, Mrs. D. C. Montgomery; "Little Lights" of Jonestown, Garnett Wise; "Gunsollon Juveniles," no report; "Addie Gordon Helpers" of Hollandale, Maudie Crouch; "The Lilies of the Valley" of Clarkdale, Lillie Kimerer. The reports showed that there were many willing hearts and hands at work to send the gospel to those in distant lands. A paper was read by Mrs. D. P. Wise, of Jonestown, on "How to Conduct Monthly Meetings." It contained many suggestions, and evidenced the fact that her heart was in the work. Several of the other delegates also stated as to how their societies were conducted. Our district secretary then gave us many words of instruction and encouragement, by which we trust all who heard will profit during the coming year.

Statistics obtained from reports showed that there are 5 auxiliaries with 97 members, and 48 subscribers to the Woman's Missionary Advocate; also 5 juvenile societies with 114 members, and 40 subscribers to The Little Worker. Besides these, there is a society of young ladies at Greenville, consisting of 10 members, with 2 subscribers to the Woman's Missionary Advocate.

On Thursday morning, April 21, 1892, a mass meeting was held. It opened by an address of welcome by little Ethel Cooper, of Friar's Point, to the visiting juveniles; also one by Mrs. Emma Johnston to the visiting auxiliaries. Their kind words reached our hearts, and we at once felt at home in their midst. Mrs. D. C. Montgomery, of Greenville, read an interesting paper, furnishing us with many facts and figures relative to the work in foreign lands. As she stated, the doors have been opened to us, and we have but to press forward and accomplish the great work. "The Duty and Privilege of Giving to the Cause of Missions" was the subject of the paper written and read by Mrs. T. B. Clifford, of Hollandale. This is a very important subject, and one that we would wish to impress upon the hearts and consciences of all. Garnett Wise, of the "Little Lights" of Jonestown; Lillie Kimerer, of the "Lilies of the Valley" of Clarkdale, and little Maudie Crouch, of the "Addie Gordon Helpers" of Hollandale, each recited appropriate pieces, which were instructive and entertaining. Then followed the annual address of the district secretary, delivered with precision and earnestness, and teeming with rich words of counsel and advice. She is truly a leader, and none know her but to love her. She loves the work, and is well qualified. She proposed that the ladies of Friar's Point form a society, and thirteen of them responded and were organized, thus adding one new auxiliary to our district. Our meeting was in every way a success. It was spiritual, profitable, helpful. Many new friendships were formed which will strengthen us through all the years. We can see our responsibility and duty more clearly than ever before, and are resolved, by the grace of God, to do all in our power to let the old, old story of Jesus and his love.

Spiritual Exercise.

The powers of the mind, like the muscles of the body, become strong and adapted to certain lines of action by use. It is not easy for one whose daily thoughts are concentrated upon business pursuits to go into deep lines of spiritual contemplation. The easy thing to do is to suffer the mind to flow on in the well-worn channels; it is like turning water-courses upward to set the current toward the higher and the heavenly. What then? Must the stream of true life sink away from sight in the meadows and lowlands, or shall it be so richly fed from the springs of God's eternal heights, that it shall make even meadows and lowlands fertile? The Savior said we must strive to enter into life eternal. He assures us that the kingdom of heaven, "which is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost," is never found in the natural course of things, but "the violent take it by force." We need a great deal more of the athletic in our religion. While we cry "Halt!" in the rush for place and power and wealth in worldly things, we cry in spiritual things, "Awake, put on thy strength!" If the pressure of earthly care makes the spiritual sense dull of apprehension, let us somehow or other, by whatever effort it may cost, "enter into our closet and shut the door," and get an audience with God, which will be heard by him and by ourselves as well. If the appetite for spiritual food is languid, let us insist upon taking the pure milk of the Word until the healthy hunger of the soul returns. We are careful to use means to strengthen our bodies when weak; why not use like wisdom in the treatment of the spirit? There are certain exercises of the soul which have great effect to brace its weakness and bring us up to good spiritual health. They are recommended by the Great Physician. One is this: "Love your enemies; do good to them which hate you; and pray for them that despitefully use you." This is the sort of exercise we would rather see used by others than ourselves. It is not easy doing, as we know if we have tried it in downright practical earnest. But it does mightily strengthen the spiritual muscles. We do not believe in the old ascetic doctrine of self-inflicted discipline. But we do believe there are forms of self-denial in many ways which are good for spiritual exercise, and we are in danger of hearing the Master say, "Come unto me and rest," more clearly than we hear the same voice saying, "If any man will follow me, let him take up his cross daily and come after me." Strong meat, says St. Paul, is for those who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. O, how the world needs Christians of this sort who can and do eat "strong meat," and have clear discernment because of the sturdy use of their spiritual senses.—New York Christian Advocate.

Defeat and Victory.

That which to a Christian may seem a sad repulse or defeat may be God's plan for a victory.

Paul was to see Rome, but when he entered that city a prisoner, it looked as if the promise was a mockery. Yet he soon found that coming to Rome was productive of grand results, and even in Caesar's household there were those who became "saints."

Bunyan was imprisoned, and thus was prevented from preaching, but the best work he ever did for Christ was while he was in Bedford Jail. He might have evangelized for awhile, but no work he could have done in preaching would have had the world-wide influence that has come from the "Pilgrim's Progress."

When Judson was rebuffed in British India, it seemed as if the door of usefulness might be closed; but forced, as it were, to go to Burmah, he lighted a golden lamp, which has guided thousands to eternal life.

Well is it if we, conscious of our own inability to judge what may be best, are willing to accept divine appointments, and believe that what we know not now will hereafter be proved best for ourselves and the cause of God.—Exchange.

The pretty story of Cinderella, scientists now assert, is to be found slightly varied in all lands, and they contend that it is mythological Cinderella representing the dawn, and the fairy prince the morning sun, while the sisters are the envious clouds and her step-mother the night. One of the few points of difference is that sometimes it is Cinderella and in others the Prince who has the "beautiful golden hair."

Whether in man or woman fine hair is a great auxiliary of personal attractiveness, and certainly too much care can not be taken to avoid losing, or trouble avoided to restore it. The surest remedy known for impoverished hair or the renewal of its decayed or decaying color is Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which has merits not possessed by any other preparation. It restores color without being a dye, and stimulates growth, but has no metallic irritant. If dropped on anything, it causes no stain, for it contains no oil and it is a delightful dressing used as such by ladies, who are noted for the beauty of their hair. In the leading cities. What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces eight, lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a formidable enemy that consumes the world or canceration, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it. How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cure it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

"About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much advertised as an expectorant, and continued using it until I had taken about six bottles. Instead of giving me relief, it only made me worse. I tried several other remedies, but all in vain, and I don't think I had three whole nights' rest during my illness. I began to think that had laid hold of me, and my hopes of recovery were all gone. I was a mere skeleton, but a friend of mine, who had been some time away, called to see me. He recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and kindly sending me a bottle, I took it, but with little hopes of recovery. I am thankful, however, to say that it cured me, and I am today enjoying the best of health."—J. Wilcox Payne, Monrovia, Liberia.

Notice.

There is a question of the greatest importance to the Methodists of this city. It is a question of methods as to how we can reach with the gospel the unevangelized thousands around us. All the Methodists of the city are urgently exhorted to attend a meeting to arrange, for the organization of mission work. This meeting will be held Friday, May 13, at eight P. M., in Felicity Street Church, corner of Felicity and Chestnut streets.

C. W. CARTER, P. E.

Bishop Keener's Golden Wedding.

On the nineteenth instant our senior Bishop and his noble wife will have been married fifty years. We unite with the million and a quarter of Southern Methodists in extending cordial congratulations to the venerable couple whose vow and covenant between them made have been surely kept and performed, and whose lives have been so abundantly blessed of God. No man in the history of American Methodism has given the church more faithful service, has shown sturdier courage in the discharge of duty, has been more self-denying in spirit or more loyal to the doctrines and polity of our Zion than John C. Keener. And for his great success and honored achievements he is largely due to the saintly woman who has walked like a good angel by his side for a jubilee of years. Blessings be upon them on their golden wedding day!

The following congratulatory note from his colleagues was presented to Bishop J. C. Keener at a meeting of the college of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

"Learning that our beloved and honored senior colleague, Bishop John C. Keener, and his dearest faithful companion, will, on the nineteenth instant, reach the fiftieth year of their wedded life, we hereby tender them our heartfelt Christian congratulations, and gratefully recognize the gracious providence which so long preserved their useful life, and in richly blessing them has bountifully blessed the church and the world. In perfect love and peace they have lived together, their steps ordered of the Lord, establishing a model home, which has been a fountain of divine influence, and rearing their children wisely, all of whom are zealous Christians, and three sons able ministers of the gospel. Their labors have been abundant, their spirit of service and sacrifice complete, and their zeal has known no abatement. We wish them many years of happiness and like usefulness, and pray that at eventide it may be light, and that an eternal jubilee may be theirs in our Father's house. (The paper was signed by A. W. Wilson, Chas. B. Galloway, R. K. Hargrove, J. C. Granbery, W. W. Duncan, E. R. Hendrix, Jos. S. Key, O. P. Fitzgerald.)

Bishop Keener responded in a graceful and appropriate speech.

The parable of the Good Samaritan shows that the gospel has annihilated geography and made every needy man the neighbor of every one who can supply that need!

Louisiana State Sunday-School Convention.

The sixth Annual Convention was held in the First Presbyterian Church, of New Orleans, of which Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., is pastor.

The opening session was held, at one P. M., on the third instant, and the closing session, at eight P. M., on the fifth instant—two sessions each day for three days.

The preparation of a program, and the work of securing a representation from the various evangelical denominational schools throughout the State for the convention, is the untiring and never-to-be-discouraged work of the Executive Committee, and their indefatigable coadjutor, the president of the association, R. H. Browne, Esq., of New Orleans. During the past two years much valuable statistical information has been obtained concerning the educable children of our State. The association is indebted to our State superintendent of public education for cheerful co-operation in materially aiding the committee in this work. This information, together with the obtainable reports of the number of children and young persons under any religious instruction, including Jewish and Roman Catholic, has thrown a flood of light upon the appallingly neglected condition of the rising generation of our State. Truly, the Pauline call to the church at Ephesus is applicable at this time to the church of Christ in our midst: "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

This is the main object of a State Sunday-school Association: to discover the neglected ones among the young and provoke consecrated workers everywhere to carry the Bible with its gracious message of salvation to these for whom Christ came. Sunday-school workers who attend these annual conventions, and having such knowledge imparted to them, go back to their labors enthused and stimulated to nobler endeavor.

The State Sunday-school Association does not and never was intended to interfere with the denominational work of any church. Its motto is to aid and arouse workers everywhere to co-operate for the evangelization of the young, to accelerate the work, not retard it. At the convention just held instruction was given to teachers that could be obtained nowhere else. The International Executive Committee sent down to us two princely Sunday-school workers, namely: Mr. Wm. Reynolds, of Peoria, Ill., the international organizer, and Prof. H. M. Hamill, superintendent of normal work for the State of Illinois. Under the spell of their tried and approved methods in Sunday-school management and teaching, no superintendent, officer, or teacher was not the better equipped for special work. What others have done and are doing in other sections of our land under like difficulties, and with as great obstacles to overcome, could not but stimulate to more and better work for Jesus the Christ in our State.

The Bible as our text-book, and the International Lessons for our system, were presented to all present in such a manner as to incite to closer study, deeper reverence and fuller confidence in the power of the Word of Life to interest the young. It is the purpose of the Executive Committee to send out a State organizer to explain the workings of the State Association and promote parish organization wherever practicable; drawing together Christian workers of the various denominational names for conference and co-operation in reaching every neglected child or young person in our State through the Sunday-school.

This is emphatically the day when Christians of every name are called to unite their intelligence, their experience, their zeal, their faith, their love for the salvation of the children from the delusions of the emissaries of the devil banded together for their ruin.

As Christians, let us meet together in these State Sunday-school Conventions, Parish Sunday-school Conventions, Township Sunday-school Conventions. Let us speak often one to another, clasp hands one with another, pray one with another, work one with another, elbow touching elbow, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart—employing the best methods we can devise under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit for reaching the young and teaching them Bible truths.

Let our motto be, "One in Christ, for the accomplishment of his divine will." "And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness;" "teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in our hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever we do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." E. P. MACKIE.

Why Do We Have These Things?

I am in a quandary or dilemma. I am troubled and perplexed on every side, and I want some one to advise me what to do. Mine eyes are filled with interrogation points and weighty questions press heavily upon me. May some ecclesiastical Solon tell me why such things be such?

First. Why don't men study our Discipline, and see what it does say about certain subjects before they attribute to it certain things not found therein, or deny that it teaches others, which are in it as clear and plain as daylight?

I have met several preachers who did not know the Discipline prescribed a form of worship. Others who ignored the apostolic benediction therein given. They had a fanciful sort of an after-service prayer, which, no doubt, was a huge improvement on Paul's style. Now here comes two brethren, "away up in the pictures," writing about perfection, and both say the word is not in the Discipline. They are evidently not "groaning after it," and will not be "made perfect in this life," at least, in disciplinary knowledge, unless you know, you see—a change takes place. I have for a long time been under the impression that this little book is intended as a kind of guide, compass and chart for our church. If it is not, let Solon, or Solomon, or Socrates—anybody wise enough—tell me its place and its use.

Second. What are the standards for? My Webster says a standard is "that which is established by sovereign power as a rule or measure by which others are to be adjusted." The founders and formers of our Methodist Zion wrote the books we call "Standards." There is a remarkable uniformity and harmony in the system of divinity they teach. The fundamental principles are alike in all of these, the great leading doctrines are the same in all. Shades of Wesley, Watson, Whedon, Pope and Summers! arise and rebuke, with your arguments a priori, a posteriori and a fortiori this untoward generation. Speak ex cathedra and ex libro on the dead, old doctrines of Methodism. For many of your children are drifting away from the moorings out on a starless, fathomless ocean, God only knows whither. Here is one denying original sin, and another writes a book to prove that human depravity does not form the basis which necessitates regeneration. Now it is in order for some other wiseacre to tell us that we need not be regenerated at all; then our candlestick shall be removed and our star grow dim. Somewhere it reads this way, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." I do not wonder that the author of this book falls into the greater absurdity of making mere matter a moral agent; that sin is entailed on Adam's posterity as a physical bias. To crown it all, our author's reviewer says in a dozen years this theory will be universally received by the Church, South.

Hopeful prophet! Read ecclesiastical history and find out that this theory is so old men have forgotten it, and the discoverer thereof has only exhumed a fossil which you have mistaken for a gem. In all earnestness, I ask the questions: What constitutes a Methodist, and what do the majority of our preachers and the mass of our members believe, hold and teach? What is there in man to regenerate, if it is not the fallen, depraved nature? Justification relieves me of actual transgression; now upon what does the life-giving Spirit work? Let this latter-day theology answer.

Prayers offered to the Virgin seem to the Protestant mind as unreasonable as they are unscriptural. God is infinite and almighty; and as there can not be two almighty beings (for it involves a contradiction), God only is almighty in power, infinite in presence and in knowledge. The Blessed Virgin and all other creatures must be finite. If she is finite, she can not be everywhere present at the same time and see and know all things with one all-comprehending and exhaustive glance as God does. Perhaps, more than fifty millions of people, in a hundred languages, on all the zones that belt the globe, from the frozen poles to the burning line, pray to her every day. A vast deal more business than comes before all the thousands of clerks in all the departments at Washington! How does the Virgin hear all these tens and scores of thousands of prayers? Will it be said, God is everywhere present, and the Blessed Virgin is ever in the presence of God. Very true, and so are all of us ever in the presence of God; but the wisest and most cultivated of us know but a minute fraction of the boundless sum of possible knowledge. The question, How does the Virgin know who are praying to her, and what they are praying? remains unanswered, and recurs. How does she know? Is it replied? God tells her. Then it appears from this that God hears our prayers before the Virgin, and as he only can answer them and pardon our sins, it does not appear to us to be important whether the good Virgin hears our prayers at all, as she can not answer them. But if God hears our prayers first, and then tells the Virgin that some one, or more, in London, Paris, Rome, New York, Mexico, or Rio, have prayed and asked a particular thing to be done, does she pray it back to God? All these millions of prayers! And what for, as God already perfectly knows it? Will it be said, When we go to the king or governor to ask a favor, we refer him to important persons whose statements and influence may help us to receive the favor we seek. Very true, and very proper, because the king is a finite creature and can not personally know the circumstances and claims of fifty millions of people. We have to post him as to the justice and merit of our claims; but, in the case under consideration the Divine Governor knows our merits and claims infinitely better than any of our referees. It does not appear to us that we gain anything by the Blessed Virgin's repetition of the prayers which "Our Father" has already heard.

Will it be said that the Blessed Virgin has a merit and an influence that will greatly assist us in securing the object of pleas? We answer, This dependence on the Virgin's merit and influence is to discount Christ's all-atoning merit and to attempt to supplement its deficiency with the additional merit of the Blessed Virgin. We are told that Christ ever liveth to make intercession for us, and that he is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God through him. Christ assures us if we ask anything in his name, "I will do it." Again, he declares, "That no man cometh unto the Father but by me;" not by the Blessed Virgin, the apostles or saints. But do not the prayers of the righteous avail much? And do we not ask the prayers of God's people? Certainly, but not their prayers addressed to the Blessed Virgin, nor any other creature, however eminent for holiness, but their faithful prayers addressed to God through our Lord Jesus Christ, pleading the merit of his shed blood, who died, the just for the unjust. This is scriptural and something different from praying to any creature, however holy or exalted.

God is not reluctant to answer and to bless. He is slow to wrath, but swift to mercy. The Lord's hand is not shortened that it can not save; neither his ear heavy that he can not hear. We are exhorted to look unto Jesus, to "behold the Lamb of God;" not any creatures. So the apostle says, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross."

The redeemed and rejoicing heavenly host ascribe to Christ the exclusive glory of their salvation. "Unto him, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood; out of every kindred and tongue, and people and nation."

J. B. WALKER.

Centuries ago three hundred soldiers held the Pass of Thermopylae against thousands until all of them were slain but one, and he was held in such contempt by his people he committed suicide. At first glance this seems passing strange. But go back to the fireside and you find the explanation. From babyhood the Greek was taught that his first duty was to his country—to die for it if need be. Scores of instances are on record where soldiers have courted death rather than return home without their comrades. We need this same loyalty and courage spiritualized in the church to-day. We must begin where the Greeks did—at the fireside, in the Sabbath-school, in the Epworth League. The one follows in the wake of the other.

The constitution of the Epworth League meets the demand of the youth of the church admirably, supplying them with social, intellectual and spiritual enjoyment and development. The spirit of this constitution properly carried out will, within five years, produce a company of young Christian soldiers as impregnable as the phalanx of the old Greeks, as determined as the three hundred at the Pass of Thermopylae.

The program for the commencement at Whitworth College has been received. The exercises begin Sunday, June 5, and those who attend will have a rich treat. Bro. Mounger, Dr. A. Coke Smith and Hon. J. S. Sexton will contribute to the enjoyment of the occasion. Fifteen young ladies will be graduated.

Centenary College.

On Sunday, May 8, Rev. Robert Harry, the agent of Centenary College, visited Felicity Street Church in the order of his "going up and down" in the State, delivered a stirring and eloquent address, and took up a collection, which netted twelve hundred and fifty dollars for the endowment of the college. A brisk shower from an angry sky at the hour of service reduced the congregation by, at least, one-half, and a failure to circulate the basket by a singular instance of forgetfulness upon the part of the collector, must have had its effect upon the total of receipts; but the result was most gratifying. This collection and that of eleven hundred dollars at Carondelet last Sunday, gathered from fields over which the scythe of the reaper had already passed repeatedly, evinced beyond doubt that this cause is one dear to our people, and that Bishop Keener made no mistake in choosing this representative to present the cause of Centenary to the public.

J. M. BEARD.

It has recently been asserted by a lecturer from Chicago, now in this city, that the World's Fair Committee are feeling the pulse of this great nation on the subject of opening the Columbian Exposition on the Sabbath. Sixty-three millions of United States citizens are anxiously awaiting the result. The eyes of the civilized world are upon us. The reputation and character of this Christian nation and this nation's religion are at stake. What are the more than one hundred thousand communicants and five hundred thousand adherents in Mississippi and Louisiana doing to stem the tide in favor of the Christian Sabbath? We will not be blameless in the eyes of men and God if we remain inactive in this emergency.

NOTES.

Take heart, brother; even Paul could not keep everybody awake when he preached!

If Salan had not put out the slaver's eyes, he would not now be grinding in the mill of the Philistines.

Take care, brother, that your talk outside the pulpit does not counteract the influence of your best sermons!

Resolutions which never ripen into deeds are of very little value. The poet says that a man "may resolve and re-resolve and die the same."

A preading elder writes of one of his preachers, "He makes pets of all the babies." We suspect that is the direct road to the parents' hearts.

Take care, hearer, in what company you unkindly criticize your preacher. Said a mother to her pastor: "Doctor, can not you help me to save my boys?" "No, madam," he answered; "you have talked away all my influence with your boys."

Some time ago we said this: "We are not working to please outside folks, but please and help Mississippians and Louisianians;" whereupon a good sister in Johnson City, Tenn., writes: "And while you are laboring with that end in view, you are pleasing and helping a Tennesseean by adoption. What are you going to do about that?" Well, we are going to keep on helping and pleasing as many as we can, by the help of the grace of the Spirit's presence.

Rev. J. M. Pike, in the Florida Christian Advocate, gives this as the kind of revival needed all over the church:

A revival that means the abandonment of all sin, and which prompts to the holiest living; that begles love for the services of God's house, love for secret prayer, and love for the Bible; that will inculcate to holy activity in the cause of Christ; that will crowd the Sunday-school with earnest workers, and interested pupils; that will cause the erection of family altars, and the religious training of the children in the home. A revival that will put every member of the church unflinchingly on the right side in all the moral reforms of the hour. A revival that means war to the death against the saloon, and the earnest effort for the salvation of the saloon keeper. A revival that will prompt to greater liberality in supporting the church at home, and lead to greater sacrifice for the spread of the gospel abroad. A revival that will kindle in every Christian heart more intense longing for likeness to Christ, and for sympathy with Christ, in his efforts to save others.

ADAMS—Miss M. EUGENIA, daughter of J. E. Adams and Mrs. Amanda Adams, was born Feb. 8, 1872, and after ten days of intense suffering she died quietly and peacefully at her home in the city of New Orleans, La., on May 10, 1892.

In the death of this young Christian lady one has been taken whom we thought could not be spared; but he who called her to himself knew what he was doing. To console her bereft parents, and to bear testimony to the life of this devoted daughter, these lines are written. A lady, mild and reserved, but possessed of a heroic will, she bore burdens for her friends with patient self-sacrifice, and thus fulfilled the law of her Master, to whom her young life was consecrated.

She was pastor for four years. Her father's home was mine as well as the home of other members. The writer remembers many a word of encouragement, many a lesson of patient endurance, given by this faithful follower of the Lord Jesus. A more devoted daughter I never met. Her parents will have her own sweet will. She was a teacher in the Sunday-school, was always at her post, ready for service. While she attended the Sunday-school flourished; when she was absent it waned. As a member of the church, she seemed to have no other idea but the glory of God, and with a spiritual magnetism, she drew others. She was not ashamed to sing the songs of Zion in church, and her singing was inspiring. She was helpful in special church-work, never thought of failure; when collecting money, went at it, feeling assured that Jesus was with her.

I make this extract from her father's letter: "She gave abundant evidence on her death-bed of her entire readiness to answer the Master's call. But to say to you that she died as she had lived is telling all in fewest words. She loved you as a pastor, and often spoke of wanting to see you. A few hours before she died she pointed upward, and said, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' She sang different verses of hymns and repeated many passages of the Scriptures, and when her mother asked how she felt, she replied, 'I am so happy.' Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

"The first death recorded was not the fallen Adam nor the wicked Cain, but the innocent Abel. The first soul that met death overcame death. The first soul that parted from earth went home to heaven. Death argues not displeasure, because he whom God loved best died first. The murderer was punished while living. Living is death, dying is life. On this side we are called; on that, citizens; on this side, orphans; on the other, immortal children; on this side, captives; on the other, free men, known of God." Bereaved parents, "your daughter is not dead, but as Christ liveth so doth she live." "Let not your hearts be troubled."

CALHOUN—From the home of his parents, near Holmsville, Miss., April 7, 1892, aged nineteen years eight months and seven days, LEON CALHOUN was gently borne away to the skies.

So another home has been made sad by a vacancy which only the grace of God can fill; another fair brow has been shaded by the cold and silent grave. As I looked upon the cold, motionless form of my little cousin, it was almost impossible to realize that the sweet voice, always ready to say a kind, cheering word, was forever hushed; and those lips, with their familiar smile, would never again in life give utterance to friendly greeting.

Lucas was, indeed, a good boy, and, by his singularly affectionate nature, endeared himself to many. He was the light of that home, and the hope of parents, brothers and sisters. It is very hard to say at such times, "God knows best," when the light of faith is shut out by clouds of grief. God bless the bereaved family, and help them to say, "Yes, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear not; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

Mourn not for him, loved ones, but know that he has only fallen asleep in the morning time of life, and some day at the Father's bidding you, too, will step into the heavenly glories, where partings will be o'er. Farewell, my sweet little cousin, till we clasp hands on the plains of eternal glory.

FANNIE HULLCOCK.

TYNES—JAMES L. TYNES was born in Marion county, Miss., Jan. 3, 1820, and died at the residence of his son-in-law (T. C. Harvey), in Terry, Miss., March 11, 1890. Nov. 10, 1846, he was married to Miss P. G. Collins, and in 1848 he was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of the Rev. J. J. Shelton.

As husband, father and friend, Bro. Tynes was true and faithful, and in these relations has given to his family and neighbors an example that will cause his memory to be cherished long after his departure for the better world. As a member of the church, he faithfully observed his vow to be subject to its discipline and to attend upon its ordinances. He accepted the General Rules as an epitome of the law of life as revealed in the Word of God, and, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, made them the rule of his life. For many years before his death he was a faithful and painstaking steward, and always feeling a pleasure to deny himself to serve his church and pastor. His last illness was protracted and severe; but he was often heard to say, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." And as he was passing out from among men to his eternal home, his last words were, "Jesus is still precious to me."

J. M. WRENS.

SAULS—JOHN ROBERT SAULS was born Oct. 2, 1847, in the State of Tennessee, and moved with his parents to Mississippi when but a child. He was married to Miss Louisa N. Lockhart, Oct. 2, 1877, and died, April 16, 1892, in Lawrence county, Miss., where he had lived all these years.

Bro. Sauls was a good citizen, honorable in all his dealing with his fellow-men. Truly he lived respected and died regretted. He was a devoted and loving husband, a kind and indulgent father, and a faithful friend. He was a member of the M. E. Church, South, and left with the bereft ones an assurance that their loss was his gain. May the Lord sustain his beloved and life-long companion by his grace, and may his children emulate the example of their father, and may they all meet over there in the sweet by-and-by!

W. A. H.

WOODWARD—J. T. WOODWARD was born July 1, 1817, in South Carolina, and died Jan. 31, 1892. Bro. Woodward joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1850, and has since lived an exemplary life.

Having consumption, he was certain that he was slowly, but surely, approaching his destiny. But in the midst of his languishing he told them frequently that he was ready for the Master's call. He said to his wife and eight children: "Do not grieve for me, for I am going to rest." God saw fit to remove him to a holier atmosphere and purer joys of his upper kingdom. May his loved ones live so as, at last, to go home to God, where he has prepared a place for all!

J. J. KELLY.

GOZA—Bro. JOSEPH B. GOZA was born in Claiborne county, Miss., Oct. 25, 1845, joined the church when very young, probably when eight or nine years old; was converted in his childhood; was married to Miss Mary E. Lord, Jan. 3, 1867, and died (after a very painful illness of about three weeks) April 14, 1892, being at the time of his death forty-six years, five months and twenty days old.

Bro. Goza was one of the very best men we had. He was a faithful, consecrated Christian man; a quiet, peaceable citizen; a loving, devoted husband; a patient, tender father, and a good neighbor. He loved his church and was ever ready to contribute liberally to advance the cause of Christ—in fact, he had all the elements that go to make up a Christian gentleman. We shall miss him in his home, in the community, in the church; but we hope and are confident that our loss is his eternal gain. While his place will be hard to fill, we pray for the grace of resignation that we may be able to say with Job of old, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!"

Farewell, Bro. Goza, but not forever. We will, by God's grace, meet you in the sweet beyond. That God's richest grace may rest on dear Sister Goza, her orphan children, and all the relatives, and that they may meet Bro. Goza where parting will be no more, is the fervent prayer of their pastor, A. D. MILLER, Barlow, Miss.

BOWEN—To the memory of my sainted sister, Miss FANNIE BOWEN, who peacefully departed this life at our home, Luka, Miss., Thursday, Feb. 4, 1892.

After many years of suffering and pain Christ claimed as his own my dear sister, who had been an invalid since her twelfth year, having died in her fifty-fifth year. She was united to the M. E. Church in early life, and ever lived a true, devoted and earnest Christian life. She was, although a constant sufferer, cheerful, bright, and always kind and thoughtful of the family and neighbors. She was not only submissive and kind, but quiet, gentle, meek and modest in all she did or said. She died as she had ever lived—sweetly. Just as she was breathing her last she sweetly and calmly told me, "Good-by," and wished that she could take me with her, for she was entering a life of perfect peace and rest, where sickness and sorrow are unknown.

I would not call her back, for my loss is her eternal gain. I nursed her through many years of pain, and one more patient and faithful could not be found. "Thou art here before, she will not be forgotten."

LAURA BOWEN.

PRICE—ROBERT CORNELIUS PRICE was born in Copiah county, Miss., Feb. 20, 1862. He died at Sidon, in Leflore county, on April 18, 1892, aged thirty years one month and twenty-eight days.

Removed with his mother and step-father, T. J. Shivers, to the swamp when but a boy, and here he had enough of the hardships of life to contend with to develop all the traits of a man. He was much loved by all who knew him. He manifested the noblest traits of a man in caring for his mother; and he had a many arm on which she could depend with pride. He was one of our young men who honored his father and mother; he was a loving, devoted son and a true and indulgent brother. He was a faithful and true member of the church. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in the Fall of 1889, and remained a member till his death. This writer received him in the church, and has been his pastor ever since. He loved the church and his Shepherd, and also the pastor, and often spoke of his hopes of heaven with joy.

The community has lost a good citizen, the church a good member, and the family a loving son and brother.

W. H. SANDERS.

NEVLAUD—Died, at Derry, La., Jan. 12, 1892, 104, the youngest daughter of J. A. and V. H. Nevlaud. She was nine years two months and twelve days old. She asked her mama, if she died, would she go to heaven. She told her, "Yes, if she loved God." She said, "I love God," and also asked to be baptized. After that she smiled, and said, "Wait; I am coming." Then an angel came and took this dear child home to heaven. Her sweet voice is silent; the home that was gladdened by her merry laughter is lonely now.

Bereaved father and mother, brother and sisters, little Nila has escaped many of the sorrows and trials of this life. We feel that her spirit is now in heaven, where she will be at rest forevermore. Let us all so live that we may meet her with many other dear ones around God's white throne, there to part no more.

GRANDMA.

Centerville, Miss.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep; had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. I had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAYS because shoes once blackened with it can be kept clean by washing them with water. People in moderate circumstances find it profitable to buy it at 20c. a bottle, because what they spend for Blacking they save in shoe leather.

It is the cheapest blacking considering its quality, and yet we want to sell it cheaper if it can be done. We will pay for a recipe that will enable us to make Wolff's ACME BLACKING at such a price, that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. This offer is open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

SEE WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT IT.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the southland alone.—Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tone. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Meantime's Herald.

After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 131, 135, 147, 180, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Wesleyan Methodist.

Editorial Correspondence.

On Saturday, May 7, at 8:45 A. M., we left New Orleans for Meridian via the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad. This is the first time we have had an opportunity of traveling this portion of the Queen and Crescent system, though we have long desired to see its famed bridge over Lake Pontchartrain. At one time this was claimed as the longest railroad bridge in the world, but it can hardly claim that honor now. In many places breakwaters have been put up, and earth and gravel dumped into the marsh, forming an embankment. For our part we prefer the embankment. For several miles the railroad runs by the side of the lake, sometimes skirting it, sometimes crossing an arm. To the left no land is visible, but here and there, while sails of schooners dot its surface, while to the right, as the sun shines on the rippling waters, every little wavelet sparkles with all the tints of the rainbow. The southern end of this road passes through an almost inexhaustible pine forest, and lumbermen have not been slow to realize its value.

We reached Meridian at four P. M., and were the guest of Bro. Cavitt, the Sunday-school superintendent of Central Church. Sunday, at eleven A. M. and eight P. M., we had the pleasure of ministering to Dr. Andrews' flock, and at four P. M. of being present at a song service, which is conducted every Sabbath afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. rooms for the children and young people of the city. The importance and result of that work may be plainly seen in a query of one of the young men to the leader: "Mrs. M., where could we young men go, and how could we spend our Sundays, if you should give up this singing?"

Monday was spent with Bro. N. B. Harmon at West End, where we met quite a number of his members. Bro. Mellen had been quite ill for over a week, and we had the pleasure of calling on him and his family.

Tuesday evening we went to Durant to attend the Kosciusko District Conference. Bishop Hendrix was to have presided, but his recent illness prevented his being present. Bro. Burroughs, however, presided with that ease and grace which becometh the office of presiding elder, and with the self-possession of a veteran in the work. Quite a number of laymen and ministers were present, as well as visitors from contiguous districts. Bro. Watkins, agent of Millaps College, was present, and on Wednesday, at ten A. M., addressed a large audience on the subject of "Christian Education."

It was the happiest effort we have heard him make. When we left on Wednesday night, the Conference was progressing finely with its work, and promised to be very pleasant and profitable. Resolutions commending the election of Dr. Murrah were passed, and the brethren pledged themselves to aid in the collection of the endowment notes now past due.

Thursday was spent at Batesville in attendance upon the Sardis District Conference. Bro. H. C. Morehead, another brand-new presiding elder, was in the chair. The Conference was opened at 8:30 A. M. with a thirty-minute prayer meeting, which set the minds and hearts of all in frame for the eleven o'clock service, at the close of which the Holy Spirit came down in power upon the audience. Many were moved to tears, and some to exclamations of joy. If the opening session is an index of the meeting, a revival wave will sweep over the Sardis district this summer.

Thursday afternoon was devoted to a Sunday-school Conference. A programme crammed with important subjects had been prepared, and for three and a half hours these subjects were analyzed and discussed in a way which showed that the speakers had filled themselves for the occasion. Two of the speakers were requested by vote to prepare their addresses for the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the Nashville Advocate. Bros. Murrah, president of Millaps College, and Newell, of Grenada Female College, reached Batesville on Friday morning; but, as we left at 8:30 A. M., we failed to hear them present the claims of their institutions of learning. It had been our purpose to be at the Grenada District Conference; but, owing to a confusion of dates in our mind, we failed to meet the engagement. We were sorry of this, but, with few district Conferences meeting in one week, covering the country from Batesville to Purvis, and the effort to have the ADVOCATE represented at each, caused the confusion. We did the best that could be done under the circumstances. B. F. L.

The Surplus.

MR. EDITOR: I ask you to copy the enclosed editorial from a late Woman's Missionary Advocate, and request its careful perusal by all who are in any way interested in the woman's missionary work of our church. I fear that the article by S. S. Keener may take the credulous and uninformed unawares, and injure our work to some extent; and from the urgent calls from all our fields, and in view of the vital issue that must be met at the approaching meeting of the Woman's Board, we must allow nothing to turn, nor to discourage us.

Everyone well informed has had his faith greatly tested by the condition of our China Mission. The force has been greatly depleted, beyond our power to reinforce, within the last four years. One of our young ladies has died, one returned to America for recuperation, one has withdrawn, and six have married. Put together the fact that none but unmarried women are available in our work, and the fact that the Parent Board has failed to keep unmarried men in their mission, and you can employ your knowledge of Christian logic and Christian economy to account for the delay in the King's business, in the way of a debt on the one side and a surplus on the other. It would not take a very astute statistician to bring out the fact that the Woman's Missionary Society represents the Christian talent and the Christian character of Southern Methodist womanhood, and there can be no doubt that their intentions are good, and they guard against any precipitate action. The manifest desire has been to reinforce the work in China commensurate with the outlay of capital there; but it is significant that but two missionaries have been accepted and sent out since the depletion began. We have two or three at training-school. We must rely on the Lord of the harvest to call the laborers. I beg the sisters not to heed discouragements from any direction. If there seems temporary failure in one direction, it may be to show us the need all around us. All these matters which have been magnified by those who have not given the subject serious attention, will straighten out, and we shall still see the pleasure of the Lord proper in our hands.

ANNIE E. LINFIELD.
Crystal Springs, Miss.

After all that has been said and written about the funds of the Woman's Missionary Society, and the wall of distress that has gone through the land on account of the "immense surplus" and the "large balance lying idle" in the treasury, there are still many vague notions and shadowy thoughts entangled with the truth of the questions involved. It is said, "Directors bring light," and we hope to make the following statements direct and clear.

It has always been the policy of the Woman's Board to collect funds before appropriating them. Even before the Woman's Missionary Society was organized, in 1878, the money for sending out the first missionary was in bank, and before the first annual meeting was held in May, 1879, $4,014.27 were the receipts for the fiscal year that had just closed.

It is not generally understood that the fiscal year for collecting funds begins and closes the first of March, but for disbursing, or paying out to missionaries, it begins and closes the first of October, to give time for the transmission of drafts to foreign fields, after new plans have been projected at annual meetings. For the sake of clearness we add that money is collected and forwarded from auxiliaries on the first of March; the general treasurer closes her books April 15; appropriations are made in May, or June 1; the drafts are sent to foreign fields by October 1, and so in each successive quarter the work is repeated.

On April 15, 1891, the amount in bank was $104,402.30; the drafts for one quarter and nearly one other, amounting to between $12,000 and $13,000, which was a part of the appropriations made the preceding year, were included in that amount; the Memorial Fund was also included, neither of which would be used, and $90,485 was appropriated in June to carry on the work for the ensuing year.

To avoid debt there must of necessity always be an amount on deposit to carry on the organized work, and to meet emergencies that arise in the interim of annual meetings, and are provided for by the contingent fund—as there is no provision in the law for appropriating money except in annual session—and funds except in annual session—and these funds, however large, are not a "surplus," nor a "balance" "lying idle" as they have been so erroneously called; but the amount collected in one year for the support of the work during the next year. The appropriations made every year are based upon the amount received the preceding year, with some allowance for increase, and they can not, without risk of debt and disappointment, be based on the unknown quantity of incoming collections. A course that has been adopted and proved eminently successful for fourteen years needs no apology and requires no change.

The Surplus.

"The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," is a good rule. I propose to give the whole truth (as I see it) on this subject. The reader is asked to note the following facts:

1. The members of the W. M. S., or some of them, do not approve of so large a sum being idle.

2. The surplus was not discovered by the brethren; objections first came from within the society.

3. If a mistake was made, it has already been, or is being, rectified.

When the W. M. S. began its work, the money for the first year's appropriations was already in hand. The society was thus a year ahead, and determined to keep ahead, which was heartily approved by those who would have been responsible for any obligation incurred. The members of our Woman's Board are not business men who can write their checks for thousands, and give security for hundreds of thousands.

But there is an additional explanation. Some years ago the treasurer of the Woman's Board began rendering her accounts as receipts and disbursements for the current year, omitting balance from previous year. The consequence was that for several years not a member of the W. M. S. knew the exact condition of their treasury. This was noticed. It was also noticed that the receipts for the last few years largely exceeded the disbursements; so, without having an exact account, it could be seen that there must be a large balance idle. This was not desired. Accordingly the treasurer was requested to publish a full statement, which she did in due time. It is safe to say that the surplus would never have reached such proportions had we known the exact state of affairs. Why was that done? We are told that our treasurer was so advised by business men, who said the women would stop giving if they knew how much money there was in the treasury. Each quarter of the present year the disbursements have exceeded the receipts, so it will be seen that the surplus is growing "beautifully less." If our officers have made a mistake, we think they erred on the safe side, and we do not blame them greatly. In the main their management will compare favorably with that of any other organization or department of church work. As for mistakes, we only ask that they do not make the same mistake twice. They have our sincere thanks for their faithful service.

It is suggested that the surplus is the cause of the debt; that the money given to the W. M. S. would, in the absence of that society, have gone to the general fund.

In reply to that opinion, I give a counter-opinion that if the W. M. S. had never existed, scarcely one dollar of the money raised by it would have been given to the church. When the W. M. S. was instituted, a new agency was set to work. The women of the church were authorized and invited to interest their own sex in missions. The strongest women of the church united their efforts to rouse the indifferent and encourage the weak. The result was a great increase of spirituality among the women of the church, as evinced by the money given, though other proofs could be shown. The debt of the Parent Board has not, as I understand it, accumulated year by year, in exact ratio with the surplus, but is largely, if not entirely, the result of appropriations made for our centenary year in expectation of gifts that did not materialize.

Is the Parent Board in a grave sinuation? Has the Parent Board made that statement officially, and called upon the church for relief? When that is done, and when Boards of Stewards and pastors inform their churches upon that subject, the relief asked for will soon be given. It is hardly the province of the Woman's Board to devise plans for the Parent Board.

Mrs. ROBERT SOMERVILLE.

The Surplus.

In the ADVOCATE, of April 28, is a communication signed S. S. Keener. I would suggest to Bro. Keener that he subscribe for the Woman's Missionary Advocate, and read it. It can not come to his household, for his article shows a lack of information, or it may be as he himself suggests: he compares the financial state of the Woman's Board of Missions with that of the Parent Board; the latter being in debt one hundred thousand dollars, the former having an equal amount, as he seems to think, of idle money. I refer him to the April number of the Missionary Advocate, where an ample explanation is given. He seems troubled to account for such a state of facts. There appears to his mind a faint glimmering of the truth in his suggestion of better financing. Of course (and here let the writer advise that the Parent Board admit a few of our women, among its counsellors), Bro. Keener, women, where they have full charge of money matters, are better financiers. Any man's wife can tell him that.

The policy of the Woman's Board is that no more money can be appropriated for missionaries than was collected the previous year, or, in plainer words, we do not spend money till we get it. How much reproach is brought upon our Master's name by this principle being set at naught by even ministers themselves! At the last meeting of the General Board of Missions it was resolved that hereafter no more money should be appropriated than was collected the year preceding. See thereto following our example. Oh, that they had realized the wisdom of such a course years ago!

Bro. Keener grasps at another solution. He thinks it may be that our money is only that which was changed from the right pocket. I beg leave to inform him it is still in the right pocket. It never belonged anywhere else than where it is.

Every missionary woman will be indignant at such an insinuation that the husbanda furnish their wives missionary money. No, sir; we make our own money. Nine-tenths of our missionary funds represent the self-denial and sacrifice of women who love their Lord. I have been connected with a number of missionary societies, and I know that we get very little money from those women who draw from their husbands' pocketbooks. When a woman becomes a live missionary worker, she wants her offerings to the Lord to represent her own individual efforts; not that she hasn't as much right to the husband's purse as he has, but often that article can not spare near so large an amount as she feels will represent her love and zeal for the Master. Is it not Bro. Keener's experience that those women who are most active in their own society are the most willing to contribute to the missionary collection ordered by the Conference?

Again, Bro. Keener is afraid that we do not look upon a corporation as having a soul or conscience. Indeed, our fears and convictions on this point have made us the more careful to avoid this fearful sin, debt. But how about the conscience of the Parent Board in appropriating that which it has not? Their zeal in extending the work of the Master is commendable; but this extension without the means to pay for it looks to us like "a grave and awful responsibility." Let them copy the liberality and zeal of the women, and forever abandon the idea of uniting with our society and directing the use of our money. I have once heard tell of the lion getting a taste of the lamb's blood, and having a desire ever after that for mutton.

ONE OF THE WOMEN.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. D. Newsom, May 10: "Our second Quarterly Conference for Sparta circuit, with its exercises and services, has passed. It was an occasion of profit and encouragement to the charge. The stewards had been at work. Some very positive life reported in country Sunday-school work. Meeting the brethren, we thanked God and took courage." On the seventh instant a hail-storm passed over a portion of Chickasaw county. Stones were reported to have fallen from an inch and a half to two inches in diameter. It shivered shingles on houses, crashed through iron roofing, and shattered every window exposed; was disastrous to gardens, and beat the fruit from the trees, and riddled the foliage along its track. In one lot every calf was reported killed."

Rev. M. H. Moore: "We began a meeting at Columbia on the second Sunday in April. The meeting lasted about a week. We were assisted by Rev. M. L. White, who preached to the delight and profit of those who heard him. Eternity only can tell all the good accomplished. The visible results are: The church considerably revived, some new family altars erected, and nine accessions to the church. Twenty or twenty-five professed conversion, among them several young men, who began at once to pray in public."

Rev. G. E. Greene, Brodnax, La., May 5: "My circuit lost its third quarterly meeting—so far as attendance is concerned—last month, on account of bad weather. However, we conducted the business under the efficient supervision of Bro. White, our faithful presiding elder. Finances very favorable; five cent cotton, nevertheless. Eleven dollars raised toward digging a new well; $14.30 paid in for foreign missions; six new subscribers to the ADVOCATE so far. Have recommended it to some thirteen families, about five of which subscribed."

Rev. W. H. Sanders, Sison charge, North Mississippi Conference: "Our second quarterly meeting met at Greenbrier on May 7. Bro. Thames, our proficient presiding elder, was on hand, and was delighted, and he also delighted the people. We had a good attendance on Saturday of the officials, and they showed a considerable improvement in the finance of the charge over last year, or the previous quarter. We can say that we are doing well. Five joined the church by letter Sunday. Our third Quarterly Conference meets at Ita Bena, on the G. P. R. R."

Mrs. Willie A. Brown, South Vicksburg, Miss., May 9: "Please allow me space to put before the readers of the ADVOCATE some dots from the work in South Vicksburg, M. E. Church, South. We have just closed a series of services conducted by our faithful pastor, Rev. Ira B. Robertson. There were four accessions; but that does not, by any means, indicate the result of the meeting. Our membership has been stirred up to a sense of their obligation as co-workers in the great and blessed cause of salvation. Our pastor is deeply interested in us, and works faithfully and efficiently. We all will bear in mind how our hearts were touched by his discourse the last evening of our meeting, from the text, 'Son, remember.'"

Rev. J. A. Poe, Belzona circuit, May 4: "As I received my first appointment in the dark corners of Washington, Holmes and Sudlow counties, I thought I would write a few lines to let you know that I have not lost myself in the labyrinths of obscurity, drowned in sloughs of despondency, nor washed away in the river of fluency. My charge is a very good one. We have some as good people here as can be found anywhere, and plenty of raw material to make more; but I think it will take the furnace of Christian grace, the anvil of faith and the tongs of a true gospel to make anything of them. We are making some advancement along the line of Christian warfare. One Sunday-school organized. Pray for us."

Rev. J. H. Evans, Williamsburg circuit, Mississippi Conference, April 18: "This is our third year with this kind people, and we are encouraged. The brothers and friends are still mindful of our welfare, although we did not have any storms or pourings; but we had rain and high waters, and our elder did not get to his appointment until Sunday morning, which was March 26 and 27, 1892, but did us good service, and preached us a good sermon, which was edifying to all present. Bro. Ellis made a splendid impression on the people of all denominations. On account of the high waters and the severe rainfall, our Quarterly Conference was not very well represented; but we feel encouraged. The officials raised our assessment above the past years, and are promising good things this year. Thank God we are already in possession of some of the good things! We have had some valuable work done on the parsonage, which has added much to the looks and comfort of our little home, for which we feel grateful to the brethren and to Mr.

Buchanan, the carpenter. We are getting this little circuit, which at the first of its framing should have been a mission, up to a good little circuit. Four new churches—three are finished, except painting, and one is not yet celled. God is with us, and I feel as though all things work for good to them that love and serve the Lord. Pray for us."

[This note was mislaid, or it would have appeared sooner.—EDITOR.]

Rev. L. J. Jones, Pleasant Grove circuit, Miss., May 5: "We arrived at the parsonage in the bounds of Pleasant Grove circuit, Jan. 5, and found a goodly number of Christian people awaiting our arrival. In a short time after our introduction supper was announced, after which we had singing and prayer, and all departed for home. We have filled all appointments up to date, received several into the church, dismissed some by certificate, and some we can not find. Our parsonage will soon be completed. We have had it supplied with lights for the widows, etc., for which we are indebted to Dr. Cowart, one who studies the wants and needs of a preacher. Arrangements are being made to build out-houses for the horses, buggy, cow, etc. We have a parsonage cow. She was paid for by the church, and a committee has been appointed to care for the same during the absence of the preacher and his family. This circuit pays our presiding elder quarterly. We hold our Church Conference on Saturday, just after preaching. We are trying to work our churches up to where they can appreciate what God has done for them. Our stewards once a quarter read out the names of every member, and the amount each has paid. This is done in our Church Conferences. I have had applications to organize two churches, which will be attended to shortly. I preached at one of these places a few nights ago. The house we occupied was as large as the majority of churches, and some of the people that attended failed to get seats. I was told that there were about seven or eight hundred people living in reach of the church. Their occupation in the week is working in the lumber business. From what I have seen and heard since I came here, I am prepared to say that we need education on the line of paying our just dues to God. I am using every effort to have a revival, and if we have it right, the assessments will be paid in full by Conference. We have expended several dollars on the parsonage. Pray for our success."

MEMPHIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

It was our distinguished pleasure to be present at the District Conference of the Memphis district, Memphis Conference, which was held at Hernando Street, in the great city of Memphis, April 29 to May 1. This Conference was presided over by Bishop Key, and right well did he impress the writer as a man full of the Holy Ghost, and full of apostolic zeal. He preached some four or five times, but it was our privilege to hear him but once. He discoursed on the "little law, and it seemed to me, to great profit. The Conference was well attended by the pastors, but not so by the lay members. I wondered if it were on account of the busy season, or the fact that the meeting was held in a large city. I have sometimes thought that a District Conference was too small to meet in a large place. It would make a greater impression in a smaller place.

The Conference took high ground against whisky and other prominent evils of the day, and the brethren spoke out with no uncertain sound.

Methodism in Memphis is more prosperous than at any time in the past. A new church has been built on Mississippi avenue, Saffarans Street Church has been overhauled, Pennsylvania Avenue Church is now undergoing repairs, Hernando has been made new, Central greatly improved, and are long First Church will be completed, and will be a thing of beauty. The District Conference put on foot a plan for a quarterly gathering of the officials of the various churches, looking to the farther extension of our cause in the city.

We were much pleased to meet Commissioner Hays and Dr. Haynes, editor of the Tennessee Methodist, who presented the interests they represent.

The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: J. R. Pepper, J. W. Wilson, W. H. Kennedy and J. W. Vernon.

SEND OUT THE SUNLIGHT.

BY ELLEN DARR.

Send out the sunlight, the sunlight of cheer,
Shine on earth's sadness till the light appear—Souls are waiting for this message of cheer.

Send out the sunlight in letter and word;
Speak it and think it till hearts are all stirred—Hearts that are hungry for prayers still unheard.

Send out the sunlight each hour and each day,
Crown all the years with its luminous ray,
Nourish the seeds that are sown on the way.

Send out the sunlight 'till needed on earth,
Send it afar in brilliant mirth,
Better than gold in its wealth-giving worth.

Send out the sunlight on rich and on poor—
Sifts all in sorrow, and tatters endure—
All need the sunlight to strengthen and cure.

Send out the sunlight that speaks in a smile,
Often it shortens the long, weary mile,
Often the burdens seem light for awhile.

Send out the sunlight—the spirit's real gold;
Give it of freely—this gift that's untold;
Shower it down, on the young and the old!

Send out the sunlight, as free as the air!
Blessings will follow, with none to compare,
Blessings of peace, that will rise from despair!

Send out the sunlight, you have it in you!
Clouds may obscure it just now from your view,
Pray for its presence—your prayer will come true.

Consecration Needed.

We have heard and sung of old-time religion. Then we have wondered if it was not the same as religion now-a-days, and if there could really be a difference between religion then and what we experience now. However this may be, the question arises: Why is not the preaching of to-day as effective as of old? In other words, why don't more people get religion to-day under the gospel preaching than do? Some say that the people of the world are more interested in making money than ever before, and are very hard to be touched by the truths of the gospel. People of the world have always been engrossed by worldly affairs, but this doesn't explain it; the trouble really is with the church. Preaching has become too much a profession, and church membership too little valued. Preachers and members are sadly failing to have the influence over men's souls that they used to have.

Not that they are less educated, for the reverse is true, but because they are more conformed to this world and not transformed; they seek a great deal of communion with the world, but very little with God; they read very thoroughly the current news, but not enough of the Word of Life; they study very much, perhaps, about domestic affairs, but not a great deal about vital relationship with God.

How is the church to receive power and be the instrument of bringing the world to Christ? The answer is found in the case of Martha and Mary. Martha was cumbered about much serving, while Mary remained at the feet of Jesus, anxious to hear his word of truth. It is not the spirit of Martha that the Lord commends, but he says: "Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." The church has too much of Martha's spirit and not enough of Mary's. We are cumbered about much serving, anxious about material progress, troubled about financial success. We need more of the anxious, inquiring spirit, longing for a perfect knowledge of the way of life. Mary showed a teachable spirit. To learn of Jesus her Lord was the chief desire of her heart, and so she leaves the cares of the world and seeks communion with him. Christians to-day don't commune enough; they are too busy, they haven't got time. Preachers don't agonize enough for the salvation of souls; there is not enough of old-time consecration among the preachers and private membership. There seems to be too much relaxation of spiritual energy; the screws have gotten loose; they need tightening up. The remedy is found in just what Mary was doing: remaining at the Master's feet, seeking for power and for the wisdom that is from above—an entire personal consecration on the part of the church.

Christians must live above the world, not of it, for our citizenship is in heaven. The spirit which Mary had is what the church needs—a very intense longing for vital union with God and a personal knowledge of him.

Some Suggestions about Meetings.

I know that ministers, like all other men, want to know the best plans of doing their work. I tried this plan at our meeting here a month ago. It worked admirably and yielded good results. It is this: After having our regular altar services, and conducting it a reasonable length of time, I asked those who were interested about their souls and wanted further counsel and assistance to remain after the congregation was dismissed. I also asked those members of the church who wanted to aid in this work to remain. Two young men remained after the first invitation, and were happily converted. In this way we had several happy conversions during the meeting. Some of the reasons why I think this plan a good one are these:

First, it gives the preacher and members of the church who wish to aid him an opportunity of a more private and personal intercourse with those who are really serious on the subject of religion.

In the second place, it gives those who are not real serious about their souls an opportunity of retiring orderly from the services without becoming unduly wearied with the services. Thus they will have a desire to come again.

In the next place, it leaves those under deep conviction with those only who sympathize with them, and thus removes them from the embarrassment and distraction caused by the gazing public. In this work, of course, the minister and those who remain to aid him talk with each of the penitents. They may also have songs and prayers.

Having tried this plan with success, I offer it to others for their consideration. The time for revivals is near at hand. May God give us wisdom so to conduct them that many sons and daughters may be born to God! I would be glad to get plans and suggestions from my brethren such as would enable me more successfully to win souls.

Nicodemus and the Nicodemus Crowd.

MR. EDITOR: Will you allow me to say a few words in defense of a character of Scripture, Nicodemus by name. I have read the article by James McCaskill in the ADVOCATE, of April 28, and I have heard similar sentiments expressed from the pulpit; but let us see how they agree with the Evangelist John. Mr. McCaskill first names certain people (real or imaginary) the Nicodemus crowd. He solved a problem by taking up his Bible and reading: "There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews: the same came to Jesus by night," and then adds: "Afraid to go by day!" How does he know that? Sometimes it is safer to go by day than by night. I protest against "Nicodemus" being the name of a sneaking coward. There is nothing in the Scriptures to warrant it.

That he was a man in high position in Church and State speaks rather for him than against him. That he did not rush to a conclusion before he understood the matter is again in his favor. That he was open to conviction is evident, for before he had the private conversation with the Savior he was convinced that Jesus was a "teacher sent from God," and from what is recorded of the conversation we can only infer that Nicodemus was in the same condition as the other disciples—he failed to understand. The next time we find Nicodemus he is in a crowd, sure enough; but he is not leading the crowd. Now let me say right here that a real Christian can not be hid. It was bound to appear that Nicodemus belonged to the Galilean crowd. It does seem to me that the closing verses of the seventh chapter of the Gospel of St. John prove Nicodemus to be far superior to Simon Peter in moral courage, but not so excitable.

And now when the Passion is over, and the garments of the divine Victim are torn from him by rude hands, here come Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea bringing clean garments to clothe the dead body. The secret way of doing this does not indicate cowardice. No coward would have undertaken such a service for the Master; and if the attempt to do it openly had been made, the sacred task might never have been performed at all.

Three times only does the Evangelist John speak of Nicodemus. Does anybody know more about him than what we learn from John?

North Mississippi Conference Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

The first annual meeting of this society was held at Carrollton, Miss., April 27 and 28. The attendance was not as large as was desired; but reports showed the work to be in excellent condition. The treasurer reported $353.27 as having passed through her hands during the year. While this is not large, yet it is much greater than the receipts for any previous year. The corresponding secretary reported twenty-two adult and eight juvenile societies contributing to the work.

Our efficient Conference president, Mrs. Robert Somerville, works with a zeal that knows no abating. She is fully informed in all departments of this work. Her unceasing efforts to arouse the indifferent, to awaken enthusiasm and to vigorously prosecute this grand work in our Conference, is worthy of commendation and imitation.

During the present year we will try to stimulate local home mission work, and to make it a means of increasing spirituality in ourselves and in those among whom we work. Several changes were made in the officers. The Conference corresponding secretary is now Mrs. H. W. Foote, of Macon.

An appropriation of $75 was made to the Shuqualak parsonage, Columbus district. This is the third parsonage helped in our own Conference since its organization in March, 1891.

We were favored with the presence of several of our brethren, who gave us cheering and encouraging words. Our meeting closed with a praise service led by Mrs. Hargrove. It was a precious season—good to be there. We felt that we had much to be thankful for, and we could not let the meeting close without expressing gratitude for the true Christian hospitality shown us by the good, generous people of Carrollton. We parted, feeling that the time had been most pleasantly and profitably spent, and go forward with renewed courage, only asking that we may be used to lighten the burdens of our fellow-men.

A Tribute to the Memory of Mrs. Mary Jane Deacon.

A few lines in a recent number of the ADVOCATE stated the death of an old member, "Mrs. S. Deacon." The initial was an error. I trust that your request for a suitable memoir to be prepared will be heeded. Either Bishop Keener or Dr. J. B. Walker might do so. I wish I felt myself competent to do it. I trust that this tribute will be accepted only as a token of my Christian love.

About the year 1845, when a mere lad, I formed the acquaintance of Wm. Deacon and wife. They were both zealous, active members of old Poydras Street Church. They were identified with Methodism in New Orleans when "Jacob was small," and, by the help of God, saw him arise "from the loft of an outhouse, and then from a little flat-boat chapel (made of native lumber, rough and cheap) on Gravier street, near where the St. Charles Hotel now stands." "They saw Methodism spread out into hands, and a little one become a thousand." They entertained Manatee, Winans, Mark Moore Drake, Travis, Steele and others, once their faithful pastors, when a home for a Methodist preacher in that then godless city meant a great deal. They took an active part in establishing Methodism in the "Fourth District," then called "Lafayette." Could old Felicity Street Church be resurrected from the ashes, and her walls be touched by the magic wand of an Edison, what a phonographic record of resonant sounds would greet the ear, of earnest, fervent, prevailing prayers, victorious shouts and hallelujahs of the now sainted band, composed of Sisters Harriet Brown, Judge Lane, C. M. Downer, and now, the last to cross the flood, M. J. Deacon!

Sister Deacon was diminutive in size; but her zeal, faith, pathos and energy transformed her into an instrument of power worthy of a daughter of an Ananias. Her old pastors, before the war, felt that God had given her the gift of prayer, and were not slow in having her stir it. Many a poor sinner has confessed conviction from hearing her pray. Being a bosom friend of my mother's, I learned to know and love her early in childhood. When my parents moved to Pike county, Miss., Sister Deacon was often a welcome visitor at our home. Old Toplaw Camp Ground was honored and benefited by her presence, and the influence of her prayers abides. Rev. John G. Jones, in reciting the record of Toplaw Camp Meeting, has enshrined her memory in his manuscript history of Methodism in Mississippi.

For many years since the war she has been in feeble health, and her impaired hearing hindered her leading an active life. One by one her old friends had gone home, and she found herself living amidst a new generation. She felt lonely, and lived in retirement.

April 18, 1892, the angel came with the welcome summons, "Come up higher." I have not learned any particulars of her last hours. It matters not. Her life's work is on record, and it was fidelity to Jesus.

Bro. Wm. Deacon passed away March 5, 1861. Thirty-one years separation! A lonely pilgrimage was her lot, but now all is well.

May God bless and save the surviving son and daughter!

Easter.

I am glad Sister Sadler follows the books on Easter. Easter is the first full moon after the twenty-first of March, as her books state, and Easter Sunday is the Sunday following that. The first was Easter, or Passover, by the order of God; the other by order of the Council of Nice, A. D. 325. Her books and mine agree. She writes about one Easter, the "Nioene," and I write of two—the one was on a day of the moon, the other a day of the week, as her quotations show.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—May 22, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LA PRADE.

Daniel and His Companions.

Daniel 1, 8-21.

TIME.—B. C., 607-584.

PLACE.—Babylon.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank."—Verse 8.

We begin to-day the study of the life of Daniel, one of the noblest men in all history, the strength of whose character, under severe strain, has been an inspiration to thousands of men from his day to our own. Daniel was born about the year 619 B. C., probably at Jerusalem. When he was about thirteen years of age, at the end of the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, after conquering the Egyptians and the Jews, carried to Babylon a number of high-born Hebrew youths as hostages. In accordance with the custom of that day, the most attractive of these hostages—those distinguished by beauty of form and feature, and by unusual intelligence—were chosen to be attendants of the king in his palace. Daniel (and three of his Judean companions, known afterwards as Shadrach, Meshach and Abed-nego) was selected among this number, and, with the others, was placed in training under Asphenaz, the chief of the king's eunuchs.

This training consisted in part of instruction in the language and literature of Babylon, in part of physical treatment intended to further beautify and give grace to their persons. From the king's own table delicacies, especially meats and wines, were furnished them, just as they were to royal captives.

Among the heathen nations it was customary to pour a libation to their gods, and to offer a meat-offering to them, at the beginning of the feast. Everyone who afterward partook of the feast was regarded as, in some sort, a worshiper of these gods. Much of this food was also forbidden to Jews, under the Mosaic law.

Ver. 8. "Purposed in his heart." He had decided the question. "He would not defile himself." He would be true at all hazards. If he could by any right course consolidate those in charge, so as to avoid danger, he would do so; if not, he would, in any event, be true.

Ver. 9. Daniel did not know that God had prepared the way for him. He did not plan with reference to escape from the consequences of his refusal to defile himself; he planned simply to do right. But God had much work for a brave, true heart like Daniel's, and arranged for his preservation.

Ver. 10. The anger of an Eastern despot was easily aroused, and to have an offending officer decapitated was not an unusual occurrence. The officer feared that the abstinence of Daniel and his three companions would do them harm, for which he might himself be dealt with severely.

Vers. 11-14. Daniel, who knew that vegetable diet was sufficient for youth under ordinary circumstances, being himself from a pastoral people, suggested that he be allowed, with his friends, to test it. "Pulse" does not here mean simply beans, or peas, but vegetables in general. We are not to understand that if he was found pale and thin after the trial he would consent to eat from the king's table; that he had decided not to do.

Vers. 15-16. No doubt God added to the natural effect of the chosen diet. He cared for his own. In the path of duty he would bless them. But had he permitted them to grow thin and pale, or even to die, better so than that they should do wrong.

Ver. 17. "God gave them knowledge." He is the source of all wisdom and knowledge. The wisdom he bestows; it is a gift that does not always go with knowledge. Knowledge is acquired. Daniel and the three others were taught (see verse 4), but God gave them unusual keenness and quickness of perception, and filled them, and Daniel in particular, with extraordinary gifts of interpretation and understanding. To be able to explain a dream, or a vision, was a rare and valued power. In those days God often communicated his will and plans in visions; to Daniel he gave power to interpret them.

Vers. 18-20. The final test is now made. The king himself examines them. In person, in spirit, in excellence of knowledge, in soundness of judgment, in grasp of understanding, they stood first. Magicians and astrologers—men who knew some scientific truths and how to apply them; who understood much of human nature and how to influence men; who added also much of imposture, and highly esteemed by the superstitious people of that period. Their sayings and doings seemed trifling when contrasted with the sound, divinely-bestowed wisdom of these pure-hearted, true young men. "Ten times better," the king declared them to be. They had the "wisdom that cometh from above."

Ver. 21. Daniel lived to be more than eighty years of age, remaining in Babylon all the time, not returning to Judea with the liberated captives. His wisdom and integrity made him invaluable, and God spared him long to serve him at that corrupt heathen capital. Amidst all its wickedness he stood for righteousness; he witnessed for God.

"The Day" in Genesis.

Being a constant reader of the ADVOCATE (my home being now with one of your subscribers), I have taken a deep interest in the investigation by several good brethren of the length of each of the six days of the creation.

In your issue of April 21 I read an article from W. N. Lewis, giving his influence to the side of ages for a day. He says: "The latest and most reliable authority estimates that far-off beginning at one hundred millions of years."

Now, what bearing can that have on the question at issue? The question simply is, What was the length of the day in the beginning without regard as to when it began?

Again, Mr. Lewis says: "The Mosaic account informs us that on the third day vegetation appeared. This age" (Now, why does Mr. Lewis say "age"? The Bible says "day." But he is fixing a theory to account for the wonderful and mysterious formation of stone coal), "the carboniferous, was the one in which our great coal fields were formed."

But, in winding up his vegetable argument, he says: "From investigation in the coal mines it has been ascertained that nearly every species of vegetation forming these coal fields has become extinct, or, if existing at all, very small and insignificant. This proves that but little of our coal has been formed in man's history."

Well, to my mind it proves conclusively that coal was not made of vegetable matter at all.

Again, Mr. Lewis gives us the case of the grand canyon of the Colorado river, which has a height of nearly 7,000 feet, and says, "The sides of this canyon are almost solid rock." Then he asks the question, "How long would it take a stream of water, however swift, to wear a channel 7,000 feet deep through almost solid rock?"

Now, Bro. Lewis, will you please inform us if you mean to teach that at some time in the misty past the bed of the Colorado river was on a level with the top of the rock of the grand canyon, 7,000 feet above its present bed?—or is it simply a fancy sketch? Now, why not dispense with all such fancies, and go back to the question, and either prove it by the Bible, or else acknowledge that it can not be proved? And if it can not be proved by the light which the Bible throws upon known facts, then we fail.

Now, let us suppose that the day in the beginning was then, as now, just twenty-four hours long, and if the Bible will not sustain us, we are prepared to give it up; and in our investigation we don't propose to refer to the opinions of any man, living or dead. The Bible tells us that the first day was composed of an evening and a morning. Just as it is now, an evening and a morning constituting a day, or darkness so many hours, and light so many hours, the two making twenty-four hours; the darkness longer at some seasons, and the light shorter, and the light longer at some seasons, and the darkness shorter, but always so as to hold inviolate the original twenty-four hours. Now, we all know that these changes from darkness to light, and from light to darkness, are caused by the motion of the earth, the planet on which we live, and in its varied relations to the great central light, the sun. In one relation it is dark, in another relation it is light, and we all know that the Creator gave to each planet its position in the firmament; gave it its law of motion, to govern it in its travels among the planets; marked out its pathway, and appointed the time of its return. This law of motion given to the planets can never be violated without a perfect wreck of the whole system. This law requires the earth to make one revolution in twenty-four hours, which revolution gives us the evening and the morning, which in the Bible is said to be the first day. Let us suppose the planets were all stopped at eleven A. M. (our time), would there ever be another evening?—or at eleven P. M., would there ever be another morning? Never. Then it is beyond question that the evening and the morning are brought about by the revolution of the earth, which revolution must be made in just twenty-four hours.

I am persuaded that the relations of the earth and the sun in the beginning were the same that they are now, as I have never seen or heard of any change in their law of motion. Then it is perfectly clear that if their law of motion has never been changed, the result of their movements would be the same in the beginning that they are to-day, and consequently the evening and the morning, or the first day, was just twenty-four hours long. I admit that if the Bible had told us that on the first day God created the heavens and the earth without telling us of what that first day was composed, there would be room for questioning the length of the day; but when it tells us that the first day was composed of an evening and a morning, and that the sun and moon were made to rule that evening and morning, all questioning should cease, for the same planets that ruled the evening and the morning at the beginning rule them to-day, making the evening and the morning twenty-four hours; and I suppose that no one will contend for a moment that the law governing these planets has ever been changed. The Bible is very explicit in regard to these two planets or lights. It says: "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years. And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night. And God set them in the firmament of the heaven to give light upon the earth, and to rule over the day, and over the night, and to divide the light from the darkness; and God saw that it was good. And the evening and the morning were the fourth day." So that the purpose for which these two great lights were made is too plain to admit of question even among school children, much less among learned divines. They were to divide the day from the night, and to be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years. In a word, they were to keep the count of the revolutions of the earth (our planet), which was required to make one revolution every twenty-four hours, which revolution was one day, and 365 revolutions in one year, and each revolution is witnessed by these two great lights, so that there can be no mistake. The law of these two great lights was to divide the light from the darkness, or the morning from the evening; so the length of the day depended altogether upon the motion of the earth, which was created on the first day, and was acting in accordance with the law of its being when these two great lights were made on the fourth day; so that if the law governing its motion required a thousand years for one revolution, then the day would be a thousand years; but if it was required to make one revolution in twenty-four hours, then the day, or evening and morning, would be just twenty-four hours; consequently the motion of the earth being the same in the beginning as now, the length of the day was the same in the beginning as now—no more, no less.

Now, let us suppose that the motion of the earth was such in the beginning as to require a thousand years to make one revolution; then the evening and morning, or day, would embrace a period of a thousand years. Then we would have the Creator making the sun 500 years before he had any use for it, as the earth would have to move so slow that it would be 500 years under the control of the moon, and 500 years under the control of the sun, the two periods making an evening and a morning, or one day.

Again, the Bible says that the Sabbath was made for man, and not men for the Sabbath. The man was made on the sixth day, and this being a thousand years, he was required to labor a thousand years before he could enjoy the Sabbath which was made for his special benefit; but the poor fellow labored on uncomplainingly, and died before reaching his promised rest. I wonder if Bro. Lewis believes that God, the all-wise Creator, practiced such an imposition as that on his creature, man.

The above is but a small portion of the absurdities that would be constantly occurring if the day in the beginning was a thousand years.

I regret exceedingly to see good men, Christian men, men who profess to love the Bible, lending their influence to a theory about the age of rocks, gotten up by the unlearned and at the expense of the grand truth of God as detailed to us in the Bible.

Bro. Ellis' Notice.

I fully appreciate Bro. Ellis' zeal as to Children's Day exercises; but I think that it was "not according to knowledge," else his notice would have appeared, at least, three weeks earlier. My work will lose the benefit of the "programmes" sent out by Bro. Ellis being so late with his notice.

Pastors in charge of circuits can not have Children's Day at all of their appointments on the third Sunday in May. So I ordered "programmes" in time to commence the first Sunday in May.

The "programmes" sent out by the Board will be received by the superintendent of, at least, one Sunday-school after Children's Day exercises are over. If there is any circuit in the Mississippi Conference that needed the assistance of the Board, "Linwood circuit" did. If in the future the Board decides to furnish programmes free, I hope that they will let the pastors know of their intentions earlier.

Thursday, May 19, 1892.

Bishop and Mrs. J. C. Keener will be at home on Thursday, the 19th instant, at Carrollton, corner of Third and Dublin streets, from 3 to 9 P. M., and will be happy to receive their friends on the occasion of their golden wedding.

To-day Bishop Keener and his excellent wife celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of their married life. For fifty years they have walked together in the enjoyment of God's blessings and sharing alike each other's troubles. Joys and sorrows have doubtless been many, but the sorrows are nearly all behind, while the joys will multiply forever! We congratulate our venerable friends on this happy occasion, and pray that the evening of life may be clear and calm.

The anniversary of the Methodist Sunday-school Union, of this city, was held in Carondelet Church last Sunday. There was a large attendance, and the recitations and singing were delightful to hear. The secretary's report was clear and succinct, and showed increase over last year. There are now in our city Sunday-schools 1,760 children and 204 teachers. Bro. Mackie, the president of the association, deserves special thanks for the admirable arrangements which resulted in an anniversary with which everybody was pleased.

The treasurers of the Church Extension Boards are calling for money to carry forward the work of church building. The promises of these Boards are out and they have no money to meet them. We know of churches in process of erection whose early completion depends upon getting money from the Boards. Will the pastors see to this matter immediately and take their collections and send the money forward? Please don't hamper this good work by longer delay. What you do, do quickly.

Centenary College—Another Precedent Heard from.

The agent of Centenary College, Rev. R. Harry, presented the claims of this venerable institution of learning to Rayne Memorial Church and obtained a note for ten thousand dollars from Bro. Philip Werlein. Carondelet has done well, Felicity better, but Rayne Memorial is best. May the good work go on, and the next report be even better than all so far reported. Bro. Harry is full of hope, enthusiasm and the gospel view of Christian liberality.

S. S. KEENER.

This is a practical age. The church needs men and women who practice their religion in their dealings with others. The man who is striving for "the unattainable" and the man who is trying to think the "unthinkable" should both be placed upon "the vanishing point." They are of no use in this practical world.

The Board of Missions.

ANNUAL SESSION.

This body met in annual session in the Mission Rooms, at Nashville, Tenn., May 6. The attendance of members was larger than usual. We believe there was only one absent. The Board was called to order at nine A. M. by the president, Col. E. W. Cole, and was opened by singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," led by Dr. Peterson, of Virginia, after which a fervent prayer was offered by Bishop Key. Several memorials from different sections of the church were presented and referred to appropriate committees. The treasurer presented his annual report, which was discussed, as to some of its special features, and received. The report shows that the regular collections for the past year amounted to $263,447.11.

The special collections reached the sum of $41,470.73. This makes a total of $304,917.84 collected the past year from all sources, being an advance of $53,618.38 over the collections of the year preceding. Though the increase in collections has been so large, there has been no diminution of the debt. This is owing to the fact that up to last January the Board was working under the large appropriations made in 1890, and the collections of 1890-91 fell behind those appropriations. The collections of the past year, however, decreased the liabilities on the line of appropriations, $39,563.22. This year the Board is working under the decreased appropriations of last year, and if the collections are as good this year as last, there will be quite a handsome amount for the extinguishment of the debt. Taking this view of the case, the outlook is very favorable. Besides this, the Board by resolution instructed the secretaries to make special efforts to collect money to pay off its indebtedness and also appointed a week of prayer and self-denial, the proceeds of which are to go in the same direction. This week is set for the first week in January, 1893.

Dr. W. R. Lambuth, of the Japan Mission, was detailed to take the place of Dr. Potter in the secretaryship. We regard this as one of the best things that could have been done to supply the vacancy created by Dr. Potter's death. Dr. Lambuth is to receive the same salary as the other secretaries.

Four new men are needed for China, four for Japan and six for Mexico, and the Bishops in charge of these fields were authorized to make special collections for the purpose of sending them out.

We regard the outlook for our missionary operations as very hopeful.

The following appropriations were made:

Brazil.....	$0 695
China.....	37 458
Japan.....	37 771
Central Mexico.....	39 124
Mexican Border.....	19 557
Northwest Mexico.....	16 249
Indian Mission.....	19 660
Pacific.....	5 100
Los Angeles.....	4 800
Columbia and East Columbia.....	6 500
Denver.....	6 500
Montana.....	4 000
Western.....	2 000
New Mexico.....	5 200
Northwest Texas.....	1 000
West Texas.....	800
Florida.....	2 800
Western Virginia.....	1 072
German.....	3 800
Expense.....	16 220
Total.....	$259,908

The following is the resolution instructing the secretaries to put forth special efforts for money to pay the debt:

Resolved, That our secretaries be requested to make personal and public appeals in order to discharge the present obligations of the Board created by the expansion of our work in the foreign and home fields; and also that a week of prayer and self-denial be appointed, and that the secretaries be requested to prepare a programme for its proper observance.

The Board resolved to hold its next annual session in Kansas City, Mo.

Serene Old Age.

BY J. B. A. AHRENS, D. D.

Longevity not specially desirable. In regard to life, quality is preferable to quantity. Many lived long, but little; not a few who lived not long, lived much. Richard Baxter, who died when comparatively young, lived more than many a theological octogenarian. The short life of Alexander the Great was more fruitful of momentous results than the many years of other military celebrities.

Whether life in old age shall be happy or wretched depends largely on the character of our lives during the years of strength. Voluptuousness, intemperance, lack of habitual study, idleness, vanity, prodigality garner their abundant sheaves of chronic disease, premature senility, acrimonious temper, misanthropy, poverty and desolation after the meridian of life has been passed. It is the old story of sowing and reaping.

But not all the ills of old age are the outcome of former life. Some are inherent. They belong to old age as snow and ice belong to winter. Strength fails, infirm, the organs of sense decay, Shakespeare's "sans everything" a reality, friends forsake—precede to the golden shore, seemingly no longer appreciated, not wanted, in the way, an incumbrance. Dotage and helplessness the climax. Declension and collapse proceed inexorably.

But here the aged frequently err. They battle against the inevitable. Successive defeats in the unequal struggle fills with chagrin. Become peevish, morose, sullen, censorious. Strange. Fruit when fully ripe is most luscious; certainly, not sour, bitter or worm-eaten. What of the decay of health, strength, sense—what of the numberless deprivations? They are obtrusive, but kind premonitions of impending demise. They whisper in our ear: Memento mori! Why feel lonely? Our loved ones are at home with God. Though unable to retain current events, the memory of the aged is allowed to revel in the past. That past becomes a pleasure garden where things well said, well done, become flowers and shrubs whose fragrance and odor fill the soul with joy. Not appreciated? Is not the thought begotten in vanity? Neglected? Perhaps, morbidly sensitive. An incumbrance? No. The life of the aged is a benediction to many.

The aged have much reason to pray with David: "Cast me not off in the time of old age." Of whatever deprived; we must not be bereft of the joy of salvation. The peace which floweth like a river deepens and widens as it approaches the ocean of death. Notwithstanding life's changes, God's love changes not. But ships have been wrecked in sight of port. Faithful unto death.

The young should treat the aged kindly, respectfully. Beware of making merry over their antiquated views, custom, habit, attire. They represent a history of former decades. Show them cordiality. Make them comfortable. The place of honor at the table, the easy chair should be theirs. The grandmother and baby must be the pets in the house. Have patience with them in petulance, in their eccentricities.

Jesus recognized the obligation of the young to the aged by designating John as his substitute in providing for his favor of thy prayers. Animated by the confidence which this disregarded not maternal claims. "This is your mother."

The Blessed Virgin.—No. 3.

Romanists say that we do them an injustice when we say the masses of their people worship the images of the saints, and especially the Blessed Virgin, and the images and pictures of her found in their churches. The Romanists claim that their worship is divided into reverence and adoration of three degrees, as Latria, the highest adoration. This is addressed to the Holy Trinity, Father or Son, or the Holy Spirit; and Hyperdulia, to the Blessed Virgin, and Dulia, the lowest form, to the saints. We fear, from our information, that these nice and learned distinctions are unknown to the uncultivated masses of Italy, Spain, Portugal, Mexico and South America. They really seem to be worshipping the images before which they bow, especially the image of the Blessed Virgin.

Let us consider some of the titles they confer upon her, some of the attributes they assume she professes, and some of the prayers they address to her. I could write here the book, chapter and page of the books (I quote from the Romanist's own books), but it takes too much space. The Virgin is called the "Holy Mother of God," "Mother of Divine Grace," "Mother of Our Creator," "Virgin Most Powerful," "Seat of Wisdom," "The Morning Star," "Gate of Heaven," "Refuge of Sinners," "Queen of Angels, of Prophets, of Apostles, of all Saints." These specimens are taken from a list of more than forty titles applied to her, in "The Litany of the Blessed Virgin."

These titles imply attributes and powers which Protestants believe can not be ascribed to any creature without the guilt of idolatry.

The Blessed Virgin is directly and personally addressed as an object of prayer, of worshipful praise. Let us quote the hymn to the Blessed Virgin in the Missal, or Roman Mass Book:

"O holy mother of our God,
To thee for help we fly;
Despite not this, our humble prayer,
But all our wants supply.

"O glorious Virgin, ever blest, Defend us from our foes,
From threatening danger set us free
And terminate our woes."

Let us look at some of their prayers. Multitudes of such might be quoted: "I confess to Almighty God, to blessed Mary, ever virgin, to blessed Michael the archangel, to blessed John the Baptist, to the holy apostles Peter and Paul, and all the saints, that I have sinned exceedingly in thought, word and deed, through my fault, through my fault, through my most grievous fault. Therefore, I beseech thee, blessed Mary, ever virgin, the blessed Michael the archangel, the blessed John the Baptist, the holy apostles Peter and Paul, and all the saints, to pray to the Lord our God for me."

In the Litany of the Blessed Virgin we read this prayer: "We fly to thy patronage, O holy mother of God; despise not our petitions in our necessities, but deliver us from all our dangers, O ever glorious and blessed Virgin."

Again: "Mother of my God, thou refuge of sinners, cast a look of compassion on me. Thy beloved Son can refuse thee nothing. Obtain for me the assistance I stand in need of to make a good confession, which will restore me to his grace and love."

We give the prayer of St. Bernard: "Remember, O most compassionate Virgin Mary! that from all ages it is unheard of that anyone was forsaken who, placing himself under thy maternal protection, implored thy assistance and begged the assistance of thy prayers. Animated by the confidence which this inspires, I fly to thee, O Virgin of virgins, and Mother of my God; and in the bitterness of my sorrows, I throw myself at thy feet. O Mother of the eternal world, despise not my humble supplications, but listen graciously, and grant the request which from my heart I make to thee."

The hymn, "Ave Maria Stella," prays thus to the Virgin:

"Preserve our lives unstained
And guard us in our way
Until we come to thee,
To joys that never decay."

These quotations, giving specimens of the prayers and praises addressed to the Blessed Virgin as an object of worship, might be multiplied, but space does not allow of it. We close by one from the visible head of the Roman Church. Pope Gregory XVI., Aug. 15, 1832, in his Encyclical (or letter to all the church) says:

"Having at length taken possession of our See in the Lateran Basilica, according to the custom and institution of our predecessors, we turn to you without delay, venerable brethren; and in testimony of our feelings towards you, we select for the date of our letter this most joyful day, on which we celebrate the solemn festival of the most Blessed Virgin's triumphant assumption into heaven; that she, who has been through every great calamity our patroness and protectress, may watch over us writing to you, and lead our mind by her heavenly influence to those counsels which may prove most salutary to Christ's flock. But that all may have a successful and happy issue, let us raise our eyes to the most Blessed Virgin Mary, who alone destroys heresies, who is our greatest hope; yea, the entire ground of our hope."

J. B. WALKER.

President Hunicutt Writes.

My last trip was to old Pipkin's Chapel, a church of which I had often heard. Bro. Johnston's gray ponies trotted as if they, as well as we, enjoyed the drive. The country south of Jackson changes from hill-land to plains. Corn has been planted abundantly, and is looking well. The oat crop, too, in places is very fine, and is now being reaped. The low price of cotton is teaching our farmers a lesson they have been too slow to learn. They should never undertake to buy provisions with cotton, but should make their living at home and let cotton be a surplus crop. Full corn-cribs are at once the dependence and the independence of our planters. He who has plenty of corn may live well at home and need not ask for credit.

The blackberry yield promises to be very plentiful. This I have thought to be the most valuable spontaneous fruit product of our country, and to be worth, perhaps, fifteen millions of dollars a year. It requires no cultivation, though it rarely grows where man has not cleared the land.

The magnolia tree is now blooming. What a sight a Louisiana magnolia forest in full bloom would be to Northern eyes!

We spent three nights in as many delightful country homes. I sometimes think that the trouble and cost of these sweet country homes is largely repaid to those who make them by the pleasure and comfort they afford to their guests, especially to preachers. The waking notes of the birds in the country at dawn of day in Springtime is music that angels might enjoy. By twos, by tens, by thousands, they seem to join in joyous chorus. It is blissful indeed to be awakened thus from a night's refreshing sleep.

Pipkin's Chapel is a neat, roomy and comfortable church located in a region known as "the Plains," nearly half-way between Jackson and Baton Rouge. It was for a long time a station, but is now part of a circuit. Recently its membership has been divided, not without some friction and pain in the pulling apart, and one portion have built a handsome, new church at Zachary, on the railroad. They have an interesting Sunday-school at Pipkin's, which does not suspend Winter or Summer. Though at present under peculiar financial pressure, they subscribed $300 for the endowment of Centenary College. Bro. Trevilion, the pastor in charge, is zealous for the Lord and his cause.

In the afternoon of Sunday we went eastward to Deer Ford, on Bro. Leggett's charge. The church here is built of the native cypress, is very neat and is most comfortably seated with elastic slatted seats of the same kind of wood. Here we preached, and $250 were added to the endowment notes for Centenary. Bro. Leggett, one of our Centenary men, is said to be doing good work.

In all this region our church is growing, and, under the leadership of a faithful ministry, giving attention to things that make for improvement. Since the lottery contest has ended the people have great peace.

From all the region round the people are coming to Jackson a few days hence to hear Bishop Galloway and Governor Foster and to attend our commencement exercises at Centenary.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

NOTES.

To do the right thing at the right time and in the right way secures success. To do the right thing at the wrong time or in the wrong way insures failure.

The Western Christian Advocate argues that there is no such thing as a "general superintendent" in the sense that obtained when the office was created. It says, "The itinerant general superintendency has abolished itself." The objection to the present superintendency is that "it is too expensive and invisible." So, so!

Anent the Bishop question, the Western Christian Advocate has this piquant paragraph:

"The idea that they are to be 'great literateurs' is growing among the Bishops. It is to be deprecated. They are not elected to become 'literateurs,' nor should they be retired for that purpose. If the ambition of the Bishops is in the line of letters, there are plenty of college presidents and professors. A Bishop's place is in the saddle, not in the study."

Speaking of the missionary mass meeting of our Northern brethren at Omaha, a special correspondent of the Central Christian Advocate has this:

But two things made a painful impression on many persons. The old-time devotional spirit, or, at least, attitude, seemed to have become a thing of the past; for during one of the prayers, of the thirty-one persons on the platform, including nine Bishops, not one was seen to kneel. And one of the leading prayers had been carefully prepared in writing and was deliberately read word for word, the petitioner standing and facing the audience!

We have frequently noticed that things happen in a sort of epidemic way, illustrating the old saw, "When it rains it pours." We had a note, a week or so ago, about a thief who, with "malice prepense," entered our sanatorium and "did, with felonious intent," appropriate our valuables. And now comes the editor of the Alabama Advocate with a pious wail:

A gentleman of like character entered our sanatorium, a few nights since, and literally dispossessed us of our entire official assets, a pair of old solitaires, which, although somewhat "whapper jawed," were all we had.

The other editors may look out! That fellow seems to be on the pad, going north eastward.

An advertisement in the London Times recently asked for a tutor "capable of teaching the classics as far as Homer and Virgil." One of the answers received read as follows: "With reference to the advertisement which was inserted in the Times newspaper, a few days since, respecting a school-assistant, I beg to state that I should be happy to fill that situation; but, as most of my friends reside in London, and not knowing how far Homer and Virgil is from town, I beg to state that I should not like to engage to teach the classics farther than Hammermill or Turnham Green, or, at the very utmost distance, further than Brentford. Awaiting your reply, I am, sir, etc."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Greenville District Conference.

The twenty-third session of the Greenville District Conference met at Friar's Point, Miss., April 22. Bishop Hendrix presided. It was the most delightful Conference we have ever had in this district. All of the preachers and many of the laymen were present. Revs. T. J. Newell, A. F. Watkins, B. F. Lewis and G. W. Bauman were with us. The Conference was interesting from the start, and there was not a tedious moment throughout. Bishop Hendrix is a fine president of a District Conference. The Conference knew the condition of a charge when a preacher had finished making his report.

Much good work is being done throughout the district. In most instances the women and children are the workers. Quite a number of Epworth Leagues have been organized. Most of the charges have a Woman's Missionary Society, and many have the Juveniles. Our church literature is very generally taken and read. Nearly every Methodist family in the Delta takes one or more of the Advocates. The Sunday-schools are increasing. More are organized and more people are attending them than heretofore. Three or four churches are being built; some are being remodeled, and some are being repaired. At Cleveland Bro. Shipman is building a parsonage. Quite a number have been added to the church membership. The district is developing, spiritually. In some parts the development is slow and the preachers have not much to encourage them. In other parts there is much of encouragement. Some of the preachers report a good and effectual work among the Jews and Chinese. The negroes are not neglected, but are ministered unto in holy things. Financially, the future is not as bright as heretofore. The money pressure throughout the valley is very hard. However, there has been very little retrenchment, and most of the preachers hope to report everything in full at the Annual Conference.

The spirit of the Conference was fine. All were happy and joyful. The sessions were well attended by the people of Friar's Point, and they seemed to enjoy the reports and discussions. The preaching was all good, and the love-feast on Sunday was soul-strengthening. Bishop Hendrix preached for us twice, and his words of cheer and encouragement were a benediction.

Bro. Shumaker is an excellent host, and the people at Friar's Point entertain handsomely. We will be glad when the time comes again for the Conference to go there.

Greenville was selected as the place for holding the next Conference. G. F. Maynard, T. B. Johnson, G. L. Wren, L. A. McKee were elected delegates to Annual Conference.

This is our presiding elder's last year on the district. In the last four years the district has grown and developed much. His energy and labor have been no small factors in this advancement. We love him for his work's sake. May God accompany him wherever his lot may fall next year! W. W. WOOLLAR, Sec.

Mississippi State Sunday-School Convention.

This body has just been held in the beautiful and hospitable city of Oxford. There was present a large number of leading and talented laymen of the different denominations. There were men present capable of mastering any subject and of laying successful plans, and there was a great deal done calculated to result in good; but, strange as it may seem, with all our home talent and capabilities, the programme was prepared in Illinois, and almost monopolized by two gentlemen from that State. To one, at least, it was a source of regret that those who understood our own difficulties and needs could not discuss questions of interest and exchange views and plans, but instead those from a distance must prepare the programme and then occupy the time. These, we have no doubt, are noble and true men, and we find no fault in what they said and how they said it; but in the future we hope that our Sunday-school workers at home may have a chance.

Is it true that our preachers do not have a practical knowledge of Sunday-school work, and that in no assembly of any church do Sunday-schools receive attention, but are in the background, and that no denomination is doing any Sunday-school evangelistic work? These are mature statements made by one prominent in this convention. We were surprised. It may be, true that preachers are guilty of the charge, but we can not think so. As to the attention other denominations give to the subject of Sunday-schools, we can not say; but we do know that the Sunday-school is emphasized by the Methodist Church and receives attention in every Quarterly, District and Annual Conference. It is also true that in North Mississippi, at least, we have a Sunday-school agent, or evangelist, who travels and looks after the destitute places, and that ninety per cent. of the money collected on Children's Day is used in this work.

We would not throw a straw in the way of the great good which this convention is fitted to accomplish; but, true to the facts, these statements should be made. HESLER.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting called by a number of the ladies of Rayne Memorial Church, in memory of Mrs. Emma Phillips Wood, the following resolutions were read and adopted:

Whereas, In the wise and loving providence of our heavenly Father, our dear friend, sister and co-worker, Mrs. Emma Phillips Wood, has been called away from this present and mortal existence to that which abideth forever, we, as members of this church, do offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the loss of our dear sister we feel that our church, our social life, our individual friendships have been sorely bereft of one who sustained each of these relations most truly and beautifully.

Resolved, That though we are stricken in heart, we rejoice in the certainty of her present and eternal happiness, and we gratefully acknowledge to our Lord his goodness in so graciously showing to us, through the beautiful life and calm, serene death of our beloved sister, how perfect is his sustaining grace at all times. We thank him that we can learn from her life lessons of faithfulness to duty, of tender, Christ-like charity. We rejoice that we have known so long and so intimately one whose life was ruled by love; a love which made her dumb as to the failings of others, and generous of loving deeds and words. Her gentle hands were ever ready to help the needy, and her heart opened to every call of distress. She loved her church with true devotion, and to work for it was her joy. "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," we wonder not that when the sudden call of the "Bridegroom" came at midnight, her lamp was found trimmed and burning, and she had only to enter into the joy of her Lord; and we who are left can devoutly and rejoicingly say for her: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Resolved, That a copy of this paper be sent to the family of our departed sister, and that we tender to the bereaved husband, mother and children our most sincere sympathy, and pray that the God of all comfort may be their strength and consolation in this their hour of need.

MORGAN-WM. HENRY MORGAN was born in Tennessee, Oct. 26, 1823, and died in Desoto, Miss., April 4, 1892, after a brief and painful illness.

During boyhood young Morgan moved to Virginia. About maturity he came to Alabama; married there soon after his majority to Mary Ann Clary; soon afterward came to Mississippi, and spent the remainder of his days in and near Clarke county. His first wife lived about twenty years, leaving him one son who now lives in Newton county, Miss. In 1875 he was married to Miss Ann E. Sharrborough, who lived with him but a short time when she, too, was taken to a better country. On Feb. 1, 1879, he was married to Mrs. Mary Seaman, the faithful wife who survives him, and who through many seasons of suffering and trial stood by him faithfully and was indeed an helpmeet for him.

Part of his young manhood was spent serving his country as a soldier in the Mexican War. The hardships then endured brought many pains and dread disease on him from which he never fully recovered.

Bro. Morgan was a remarkable man in several respects. He had little opportunity for education in books. But gifted with mother wit, abundantly, having great grit, much grace and untiring industry, he lived to good purpose and made his mark never to be obliterated. When quite young, and rather wild, he was soundly converted at a camp meeting in Alabama. Till death he delighted to tell of God's wondrous mercy in dealing with him so kindly and giving him such a blessed and lasting assurance. Like many others, he was seeking for conversion after his own fancy—quietly and with no outward demonstration. Thus he sought in vain for many days. At last, through the wise suggestion of a mother in Israel, he determined to let God have his way about it. Soon light streamed into his soul, joy filled his heart and overflowed at his lips. Through a long life, cheered by pain and pleasure, he kept the faith. He was an eager and intelligent listener to God's preached word and took special delight in meetings for prayer and experience.

He died as a soldier of the cross, with the shield of faith covering him, fresh from the field of labor, conflict, suffering. Desoto Church and community is poorer by his removal. We all shall miss thee, brother; but, by God's grace, we will meet thee over there.

His pastor, J. M. DRAKE.

HEALEY—DIED in San Luis Obispo, Cal., April 9, 1892, JOHN GAY, infant son of Rev. James and Mrs. Etta Healey. "Johnnie" was born in San Luis Obispo, Dec. 26, 1890. He was just one year three months and thirteen days old. He was dedicated to God in holy baptism by this writer, May 17, 1891. He was from birth a bright, healthy and promising child. He was buried from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in San Luis Obispo, attended by a large concourse of sympathizing friends, who manifested, by many kind and beautiful tokens, their interest and sympathy for the bereaved and sorrow-stricken parents.

"Johnnie" has gone to him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," where he will suffer no more, and will grow in immortal youth and beauty. Q. A. OATS.

DRAKE—At a meeting of the Ladies' Co-operative Aid Society of the M. E. Church, South, Port Gibson, Miss., a committee on resolutions was appointed and submitted the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, has seen best to call to his reward in heaven our much-loved sister and devoted co-worker, Mrs. E. P. H. DRAKE, therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Ladies' Co-operative Aid Society of Port Gibson, Miss., have lost their oldest and one of their most efficient members in the removal by death of our beloved Sister Drake. Resolved, That we do meekly submit to this dispensation of God's providence, praying that her mantle of love and fidelity may fall on us who are left to carry on the work, and that we strive to imitate her Christ-like character.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her two sons, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and to the Port Gibson Revue for publication. Mrs. B. F. JONES, For Committee.

BARLOW—MATILDA E., infant daughter of Thomas and Zenobia Barlow, was born July 4, 1891, and died after a brief illness, April 8, 1892. Betty was a sweet little child, dearly loved by her parents and friends; but the heavenly Father wanted her to live with the angels, and he sent for her and took her home. Farewell, precious little one, but not forever. We will meet you again. May God bless the parents, and help them to meet their loved one on the other shore! A. D. MILLER.

Barlow, Miss.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone.—Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tune. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Memphis Herald.

After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 131, 135, 137, 139, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Wesleyan Methodist.

South Carolina Correspondence.

BY REV. S. A. WEBER.

The South Carolina Episcopalians held their annual convention at Sumter last week. Though comparatively new in membership, they are an exceedingly respectable church in this State. In Charleston they are easily the leading denomination, and have been so since Colonial times. They are the leaders in society there and elsewhere in South Carolina. They are strong also in Columbia and in Greenville, which are our two cities next to Charleston in population and wealth. Elsewhere they are a feeble folk with us, and don't seem to grow much. They do little more than hold their natural increase in population. There was a new departure, last week, in the convention at Sumter. I doubt if the like ever happened before in South Carolina. A Methodist preacher, Rev. A. J. Stokes, our stationed preacher at the seat of the convention, was formally introduced and welcomed to the hospitalities of the convention. This unusual Christian courtesy was rendered Mr. Stokes on the motion of Rev. Gen. Ellison Capers, D. D., the white-plumed Henry of Navarre of the Episcopal clergy of the Palmetto State. The general was a brave Confederate—a Southron "to the manner born"—and laid down the sword at the close of the war to assume the shepherd's crook. But am I too fast? The shepherd's crook—Isn't that the symbol of the office of a Bishop? Well, not too fast on our theory of primus inter pares; nor, since I come to think of it, on the other theory, since the general has already been offered the Bishopric two or three times. Not much too fast, then, on the churchman theory. He is the honored son of the greatest Methodist that South Carolina has ever produced—our unparalleled Bishop William Capers. Long live Ellison Capers!

The name of one knightly man engenders to me that of another. Your country Charles Betts Galloway comes up here by a law of association I can't resist. His given name is more significant to us here in South Carolina than you in the Southwest. Charles Betts, his uncle, was a mighty man of color in the South Carolina Methodist of the old lang syne. William Capers and Charles Betts were par nobis fratres in a much better sense than Horace meant. (Sat. I, line 243.) The young Bishop, the youngest of his peers, and who shares with Bishop Capers the honor of being the youngest man yet called to the American Methodist episcopate, is a gallant knight—unus par et sine reproche—and glorifies the Master and his opportunity in the magnificent fight which he is leading along the line, and especially in his native Mississippi. His work for temperance reform and aggressive educational progress in the "Bayou State" is known and read of all men. It is a high compliment that our youngest Bishop should be our representative at Sumter to the English Wesleyan conference, "the mother of us all." He could send no more honorable representative of the esprit de corps of Southern Methodism.

Beside my personal letter of congratulation, I send my own and South Carolina's best wishes in this public way to our venerable and beloved Bishop and his wife on the happy occasion of their golden wedding. Bishop Keener has been greatly respected and admired here ever since he has been known to us; but our personal appreciation of him and our personal love to him have been much greater here of late in our better opportunity of knowing him. He has resided at two successive Conferences in the past few years, and thereby greatly grew on his South Carolina brethren. The dear, good Bishop grows old most gracefully. Time gently slants into eternity in the experience of a good man, and eternal life means the same thing on either side of the Jordan of death.

"And when we taste thy love,
Our joys divinely grow
Unspeaking, like those above,
And heaven begins below."
Don't mean that there is any very great likelihood of the Bishop's getting to heaven right away. For our sakes, I hope not. I claim a volume of his sermons in behalf of our Christian public before he goes hence. Somewhere I choose the sermons before the scientific disclosures of a volume of which we have been hearing now and again as in the stocks in the Bishop's study. His sermons read as well as they sound. Each one is a prose-poem to my heart and ear.

South Carolina Methodism suffers a loss—the loss of its foremost preacher—in Dr. A. C. Smith's appointment to Norfolk, Va., to fill the vacancy of the withdrawal of Dr. Evans to go to the Episcopal Church. Dr. Evans is the author of one of our hymns, No. 697,

"Come, O thou God of grace," and is reported well of where he is known best. Our self-adjusting machinery provides for the immediate loss in Dr. Smith's prompt transfer; and if I am any sort of a prophet, the bereaved congregation will dry up their tears when once they see—no, hear—Coke Smith.

Our commencement season is on hand. Bishop Hendrix is to preach the commencement sermon at Wofford. This will be the Bishop's first appearance among us in official work. He comes to us later to hold our Conference, which meets this year in Charleston. He will find a right royal welcome. I undertake to say that he will find the finest commencement-congregation at Spartanburg he ever addressed. It has been so from the first. Large and brilliant concourses attend the services and exercises. Many of the preachers from different parts of the Conference attend. The Bishop's splendid reputation as a scholar and robust preacher puts us on the qui vive to hear him. It is to be hoped that he may be induced to attend some of our District Conferences, preparing himself in this way for the delicate duties of the stationing-room next December.

I live at what may be called one of the centers of the Seceder Church (A. R. P.). They are very strong here—the A. R. P.'s are. They still sing the psalms—a revised version of Rouse. Until recently they were close communists. On yesterday, perhaps for the first time in the experience of this town, members in good standing in other churches were invited to communicate. The change of custom came about in the change of the pastorate here. This accounts for it in part. I believe the Synod, by a recent act, leaves it at the discretion of the individual church to invite, or not, others to the Lord's table. The world moves. This item and that of my first paragraph are significant signs of the times. I mention another. Until a few years ago the Baptists had no dealings—in a formal way, at least—with their brethren of other Christian bodies of the State. Now they cordially and formally recognize their brethren in the ministry who visit their associations and other representative assemblies. The Baptist State Convention sometimes meets coetaneously with the South Carolina Conference, in which case telegrams of Christian salutation pass between the bodies. I insist on it, the world moves; and that, too, at the dictation of the obituary.

Methodism was never before such a force in South Carolina as it is to-day. We have all along been counted on as a spiritual power, and second to no other in anything like moral reform; but we are more to the front now as a social factor in the community, and a force where intelligence and growing culture are acknowledged and felt. Our colleges have had much to do with this condition of things, and are contributing year by year to it.

One item more. Another missionary goes out in a short time from this State. Miss Susan Littlejohn goes to Brazil to teach in Granbery College, under the auspices of the W. M. S. She is a graduate of the Williamson Female College, of which Dr. Lander is president. Dr. Lander is one of the first educators of ladies in our church. Several of his pupils are in the mission field. Miss Littlejohn is first-class for the work she undertakes.

Revival at Blinnville.

MR. EDITOR: We have just closed a meeting of two weeks, embracing three Sundays. It was one of unusual interest and power. Many have characterized it as wonderful, like never having been witnessed here before. I do not think I have ever seen it surpassed for devotion on the part of the members of the church, and the willingness and readiness with which the young men and the young ladies engaged into the work, being always ready to do anything the pastor would suggest. All moved steadily in line of battle. It was delightful to see with what zeal the young converts entered into the work, seeking after friends, and working with penitents at the altar. It was, indeed, a glorious work. Not only was the town interested, but the work extended for miles around. When I made the announcement for a meeting at this season of the year, some thought it inopportune, that it was out of season, and that the people were busy in their crops. But one brother who thought so became so interested that he left his plow to attend. Some of his children were converted, and he was powerfully blessed. The appointing of the meeting at that time, which in the country is so unusual, was mainly for the benefit of the students of Fairview College, before the session would close, and thereby secure an opportunity for bringing them to Christ. I am glad, for the results vindicated the propriety of holding a meeting early. The students have shared largely in the revival. I can call to mind but one young man, who is here from a distance, who has not been converted, and he was at the altar twice. The work was general and deep. The conversions, for the most part, were bright and unmistakable. Young converts and old Christians joined together. Penitents were invited to kneel at the altar for prayer—not merely indicating their desire by a show of hands, or by rising in the congregation. Whatever may have been said about the "mourner's bench," in derision, it is the place for the penitent. Our church must get back to the old custom of kneeling at the altar for the prayers of the church. When one is so concerned for the salvation of his soul as to come forward and how before God, there is great hope of his conversion.

The revival commenced at the beginning of the meeting. We had looked forward to it, and the church was willing and ready, and the good work went on. The church should get rid of the idea that we must wait until the Fall to have protracted services. Then the most of the preachers are engaged, and it is difficult to secure help. I shall (D. V.) hold another in the Fall, or "when the crop is laid by."

Well, what are the results of our meeting? If I have numbered them aright, there have been sixty-one conversions, besides quite a number of recommitments—say, twenty-five in all. I counted only those, with one exception, who publicly gave the hand as an evidence of conversion. There were probably more. Bro. Clark thinks there were one hundred souls saved, and about one hundred spoke in a praise meeting, testifying by their experience, to the saving power of the gospel of Christ. There have been thirty-six accessions to our church by ritual, and nine by certificate. Some will unite with other churches. The disparity between the number of conversions and accessions can be accounted for from the fact that many were already members of the church. The revival has affected the entire community, and the good done will never be known until the light of eternity shall flash upon the acts and scenes of time. Some fossil church certificates have been exhumed, and their holders started on a renewed Christian life.

Bro. N. M. Clark, of the Lauderdale circuit, was with us nearly the whole time, and did efficient work, coming in the Spirit of his Master, seeking the salvation of souls. He did all the preaching while here, giving us twenty-two sermons, and enjoyed the meeting wonderfully. He regretted that he could not stay longer. He left with a glad heart and the warm congratulations and the sincere prayers of the people. Should any brother invite Bro. Clark to assist him in a meeting, let me advise him not to try to put Bro. Clark in a "straight jacket," but leave him free to act from his own convictions, and the suggestions or inspiration of the Spirit. When the meeting closed, one dozen, or more, persons were at the altar. I should not have closed it but from the consideration that it had been in progress sixteen days, and that the commencement of the college was near at hand, and the attention of the students was required to prepare for the occasion. The president and professors are Christian gentlemen, and labored earnestly and faithfully in the meeting, suspending exercises for the eleven o'clock service, and going in procession to the church.

I can not close this notice of the meeting without a few words about the singing, led by Mrs. A. B. Archibald, teacher of music in the college, and organist. The singing was earnest and spiritual, and the songs appropriate, which added much to the success of the meeting.

The church here is at work, and they have been endeavoring to meet the demands upon them. We have a young men's prayer meeting, a young ladies' prayer meeting, a Woman's Missionary Society, and a Juvenile Missionary Society.

As I have not sent you a postal since I came to this work, it is not inappropriate for me to add that we were warmly and cordially received, and the pastor and family have not wanted for kind attentions; and, doubtless, there is a mutual appreciation between the pastor and his charge. I have never served a more pleasant charge, nor been the pastor of a kinder or a more friendly people. I have found no croakers or fault-finders here. They know how to take care of their pastor. One thing I will mention, which in these latter days is almost an exception: The congregation kneel when at prayer. Brethren, try to bring the church back to the kneeling posture.

Doctor, I have received a cordial invitation from the resident graduates of my class to meet them in a reunion to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of our graduation. We know that ten of the twenty-one who were graduated are living. I much regret that I can not accept the invitation for the want of means. It is quite inconvenient at times not to have money at command.

The Sardis District (North Mississippi) Conference.

Held its twenty-second session at Batesville, Miss., May 12-14, 1892; Rev. H. C. Morehead, P. E., and Bishop C. B. Galloway presiding. All the pastors of this district were present except H. P. Gibbs, of the Pleasant Grove circuit, who is now in England, and every charge was represented by one or more laymen, except two. As evoked by the reports, the attendance upon the preaching of the Word and the observance of the ordinances of the church throughout the district is gratifying. The spiritual condition of the charges, with only a few exceptions, is healthy, while in many it is advancing, and in a few there are evidences of special life and growth.

The Sunday-school work receives due attention. The discussions on the various features of this important department of the church were unusually spirited.

Two churches and two parsonages have been built. The stringency in money matters has effected to some extent the operations of the church; but most of the charges reported a fair per cent. paid on salaries and connectional collections, the former averaging 33½ per cent., and the latter about 25 per cent. in cash and subscriptions.

The subjects of Christian education and religious literature elicited warm, lively and interesting discussions.

Revs. G. W. Bachman, B. F. Lewis, T. J. Newell, and Dr. W. B. Murrah, the newly elected president of Millsaps College, were each with us during a part or all of the session. At the conclusion of Dr. Murrah's address a resolution was unanimously adopted, congratulating the church on his election to the presidency of Millsaps College, and pledging our unqualified support to him and the institution over which he presides.

Special emphasis was given to religious worship, and from the first to the last service the Divine Spirit rested upon the body. Rev. H. C. Morehead, P. E., though new in the work, directed the deliberations of the body with much credit to himself and to the satisfaction and pleasure of all. Bishop Galloway failed to arrive until the last day, but came in time to preside over one session and give one of the most masterly sermons that this writer has ever heard from this master of assemblies.

J. L. McGee, B. P. Jones, G. D. Shands and Robt. Houston were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and P. T. Callicott and Dr. J. W. Sharp, alternates.

Herrando was selected as the next place of meeting.

Bro. Cameron proved himself an excellent host, and the people of Batesville gave us royal entertainment.

District Conference Notes.

Purvis, Marion county, Miss., is 92 miles north of New Orleans, on the N. O. and N. E. R. R., and was honored by the late session of the Seashore District Conference. Thursday, May 12, three P. M., found a fair representation of Conference members assembled in the Methodist Church-building. Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder, has been critically ill, and it gave great pleasure to have him present at the opening. His enfeebled condition gave several of the brethren an opportunity to be clothed with "a little brief authority" in presiding over the deliberations of the Conference. We were fortunate in selecting the skilled penman, T. W. Adams, for secretary.

Bro. Howell, P. C., took occasion to give early notice that Purvis needed and wanted a revival, and requested that all sermons preached be directed to that end. He was obeyed.

Among the many pointed sermons preached, perhaps that of T. W. Adams, on the Judgment Day, made the most profound impression.

Conference love-feast, three P. M. Sunday, was a "feast of fat-things." One soul converted on a call for penitents. Many young men stood up to witness for Jesus.

Pearlington and Ellisville were rivals for the Conference of 1893. Pearlington carried off the prize.

The session, as a whole, was one of the most delightful I ever attended. Its good influence will be lasting.

The Conference requested Bro. Ellis not to attempt to fill any appointments for the present round. The brethren agreed to help one another at their quarterly meetings in the absence of the presiding elder.

Bro. Howell is protracting services at Purvis, and he is expecting glorious results.

R. B. DOWNEY.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. C. McDonald, P. E., Brandon district, May 12: "On the morning of the fifth instant I started out on one of my long trips in the southwestern part of the district. On the sixth we held the second quarterly meeting for Shiloh circuit at Salem. We had a good congregation to preach to, and there were seventeen officials in Quarterly Conference. Quartermaster reported, $103 65, with a good beginning on other collections. At Harrisville, on Marvin circuit, we had fine congregations on Saturday, the seventh, and on the Sabbath. Quartermaster, $80 30, with other collections well up. There were five children baptized on this circuit, and one accession to the church. We had a good experience meeting on Sunday morning. This is Bro. Robinson's fourth year as supply on this charge, and all the interests of the church have been greatly advanced. At both of these meetings we had dinner on the ground, and the Marthas did their part well. I think the spiritual condition of our people improving, and the outlook encouraging for a general revival. At Harrisville my home was with Bro. Daniel I. McLeod, a friend and associate of my boyhood days. Our grandfathers were neighbors in North Carolina a hundred years ago, and a friendship has existed between the two families through all these years. Near Gum Springs, on my route, I drove into a most unusual racket. Cow bells were rattled furiously, a cow horn being also blown, and my horse looked frightened, and as if he meant to leave for other parts. The bees had swarmed at a negro's residence, and all this noise was to make them pitch."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D., of Grenada station, is sick.

Rev. J. E. Thomas was not physically able to attend his District Conference.

Rev. J. S. Oakley is at Bladen Springs, Ala., for physical recuperation.

Six District Conferences have been held, four of which this scribbler has attended. The reports generally show finances to be low, the spiritual condition medium, lapsed Sunday-schools opening and new ones organizing, a few new parsonages and churches, and the general outlook for the future hopeful.

The Sunday-school agent has sent out on orders more than 4,000 Children's Day programs, from which good reports are expected. A few pastors have not ordered as yet; but it is not too late, brethren. Let not the children of any Sunday-school in the Conference be deprived of this very delightful and educative occasion. Remember the programs cost you nothing but the ordering and using.

It was matter of universal disappointment that Bishop Hendrix was hindered by personal affliction from holding the Kosciusko and Sardis District Conferences; but while we deeply regretted his absence, we were gratified at the graceful and able manner in which the new presiding elders assumed and discharged the responsibilities that devolved upon them.

Bishop Galloway reached Batesville the last day of the session, and presided and preached to the delight of all.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Rev. J. S. Parker, Hattiesburg, Miss., May 7: "According to a promise made some months ago, Rev. Joe Jones began a meeting at this place Saturday night, April 23. The people had been looking forward to it with eager anticipations. Union prayer meetings had been held for weeks beforehand. An excellently arranged tabernacle, capable of seating 2,000 persons, and at a cost of over $200, had been erected near the center of the town, and every arrangement made for the accommodation of the large crowds expected. Bro. Jones preached three sermons per day for about ten days, to the delight and profit of the immense audiences who flocked to the tabernacle at each service. They were here from all parts of the surrounding country, so that, ample as were the accommodations, we were sometimes strained for room. The singing, under the leadership of Prof. Gilreath, musical director, and with piano, organ and cornet accompaniment, was exceptionally good, and added greatly to the interest of the services. It would be difficult to estimate the good done at this meeting, for precious seeds were sown which will, no doubt, bear fruit many days hence. Many of the 'hard cases' of our town were converted and brought into the church. Many who came to scoff and ridicule the preacher left praying. About 45 joined the Methodist Church, 34 the Presbyterian, and, perhaps, 25 gave the preacher their hands, pledging themselves for God and a better life, and that they would unite with some branch of the church, so that we may estimate the number of accessions to the different churches at fully 100. Of this number, many are substantial business men, and among the best citizens of the place; those for whom we have long prayed. Of course, a few 'got mad,' but they generally came back in a day or so. I believe Bro. Jones to be a man of God, consecrated to his work, and his labors here were owned and blessed of God. He is fully in sympathy with the pastor, his true friend, and doing all in his power to build him up, financially and spiritually. Our good people unanimously invited him to hold another meeting here next Spring. I feel greatly encouraged, and know that the church has been built up and strengthened along all lines. My people responded most generously to all demands made upon them, and in return God has abundantly blessed them. At our prayer meeting, Wednesday night, after the meeting closed, the large church was nearly full—think of it!—and there was one accession to the church, and I feel confident more are to follow. The day before the meeting began a liberal 'pounding' at the parsonage put the preacher's family at ease, as far as 'creature comforts' are concerned. We have here a large and flourishing Sunday-school, well equipped; also a wide-awake Ladies' Aid Society, Sunday-school Missionary Society, Woman's Missionary Society—all doing good work. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. A. Ellis, is still at home, and quite feeble, though he is improving; and, we trust, will soon be able to resume his loved employment. In the midst of afflictions he has maintained that sweet spirit of resignation and patience which the grace of God bestows. Let the church pray for his speedy restoration to wonted vigor."

If thou hope to please all, thy hopes are vain; if thou fear to displease some, thy fears are idle. The way to please thyself is not to displease the best; and the way to displease the best, is to please the most. If thou canst fashion thyself to please all, thou shalt displease him that is all in all.

Are Our Doctrines Sufficiently Emphasized in Our Present Sunday-School Literature?

[Paper read by Rev. Thomas Cameron before the Sunday-School Conference, held at Batesville, Miss., May 12 and 13. Published by vote of the Conference.]

This is a question much more easily asked than answered. If it refers to the doctrines of Methodism which are held by all evangelical denominations in common, it might be answered in a general way affirmatively. The doctrines of repentance, faith, justification, the new birth, etc., are brought out with tolerable prominence before the Sunday-school scholars. But it is assumed the question refers to such doctrines as are peculiar to that form of Christianity called Methodism. If this assumption be correct, the proper answer to the question is, not that they are sufficiently emphasized, nor yet that they are insufficiently emphasized, but that they are not emphasized at all.

From the position taken by some, it is a question whether it is best or profitable to incorporate the teachings of these doctrines in our Sunday-school work. Yet the writer holds this to be true in every case. Every Christian denomination is in duty bound to promulgate such views as it honestly believes to be set forth in God's Word. How this is to be done must be matter for the good judgment of all concerned to decide. It is certainly indisputable that denominational integrity and stability depend largely upon the careful indoctrination of the membership. Who, should one undertake the task, could proselyte a genuine Baptist? No one. And why? Because their people are carefully taught from the beginning those things that distinguish them from other religious bodies. And it may be truthfully said of them that there are no people more loyal to their doctrines and form of church government than they. And you would as well undertake to move the pillars of Heracles as to try to pull an old-time Presbyterian away from his doctrinal moorings, because the catechism has been instilled into his very being from infancy. These people are to be honored for the steadfastness of their faith in, and loyalty to, their forms of doctrine.

But what of Methodists? Are they well grounded, as a rule, in the doctrines peculiar to Methodism? How, if we answer affirmatively, has it come about? A large per cent. of our people never see one of our religious periodicals. But few of them, comparatively speaking, ever see the inside of a book on Methodist doctrine. And who can point out a single instance where in our own Sunday-school literature any distinctive feature of Methodism has been clearly and prominently set forth? Reference is had in this remark to our Sunday-school magazines and quarterlies.

This question presents itself: Are the doctrines of Methodism scriptural? And then this question: Is any one of these doctrines of such small importance that it is unnecessary to propagate it?

Now, if we give an affirmative answer to the first of these questions and deny the second, a third question presents itself. How, when and where shall we teach these doctrines? Is it enough that they be embodied in a sermon from the pulpit now and then? What parent in the education of his child would be content for that child to leave off the study of the textbook and confine itself to an occasional lecture on the course of study?

Take the doctrine of sanctification for example. Would it not be well for our Sunday-school literature to set forth, occasionally, at least, what the church to which we belong holds at this point? Say we, by such methods, instill into the minds of our children that their sanctification is only begun in their conversion, and that Christian maturity is attained by growth, and insist upon it that by the use of the means of grace they are to grow up into him who is the Head, until they shall come to the "measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ Jesus," is it not reasonable to suppose that they would be more firmly rooted and grounded in this doctrine, and would be more profoundly impressed with the importance of the highest possible religious attainment, than are the present young Christians of our church?

I am aware that in taking this course in this paper I have drifted away somewhat from the exact nature of the question; but I could only generalize. Our literature can be referred to only in a general way as failing at this point. What I have said of sanctification applies in a measure to all the doctrines peculiar to Methodism.

Again, we ask: What is the Sunday-school for? Is it not to teach the doctrines which that particular church believes to be taught in the Holy Scriptures? Would the ministry be excusable for preaching a partial gospel? No more, it seems to me, is the Sunday-school pardonable for leaving out great and important truths because, perchance, it might not be popular with some to teach them.

I know it is contended by many, and probably will be by some here to-day, that the literature now used is the best that can be had under existing circumstances, and yet I venture to affirm now what I have believed and contended for these twenty years nearly, that what Methodism needs, and what nearly every denomination needs, is a graded system of catechetical instruction in the Sunday-school work, setting forth clearly and concisely the doctrinal position of the church. All this may be done in perfect consistency with the spirit of that broadest fraternity which recognizes all lovers of our Lord Jesus Christ as brethren.

Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

The annual meeting of the Central Committee, as the Constitution requires, was held at the same time and place with the annual meeting of the General Board of Church Extension, in Louisville, Ky., April 13, 14, 15. On the first day the committee met in its office in the house of Mr. Geo. P. Kendrick, whose kindness in providing this office cannot be too highly appreciated. The following members were present: Mrs. Bishop Hargrove, Miss Emily Allen, Mrs. S. S. King, Mrs. Ellen Burdette, Mrs. M. K. Carter and Miss Helm. Applications for aid to parsonages to the amount of $6,250 in donations and $1,225 in loans were presented by the secretary. These were carefully and prayerfully considered, and fifteen donations granted to the amount of $2,975, and three loans to the amount of $740. Besides these, three donations were granted on condition that special donations be raised for those places. The places to which grants were made are scattered over fourteen States and Territories, and are both needy and important. As the Constitution requires, these appropriations were formally reported to the Board of Church Extension for approval or disapproval. They were, without hesitation, approved, and the work of the society during the year highly commended by the Board. That a larger number of persons might be able to attend the meetings, they were held, on April 14 and 15, in Chestnut Street Methodist Church, and were rendered very interesting by talks on general home mission work, in which active workers in other denominations joined. It was decided to call a convention of the home mission workers of the M. E. Church, South, for general consultation. The exact time and place, with other details, were left to a committee. The subject of the evangelization of the mountains of Kentucky and Western Virginia attracted much attention, and the committee determined, with God's help, during the coming year to endeavor to raise funds for a mission school in those mountains, to be known as the "Sue Bennett Memorial." Miss Sue Bennett, as secretary of the Kentucky Conference, was planning this mission when our Father called her home. Miss Belle Bennett subscribed $500 to this memorial mission. Other large gifts are expected from those interested in that most needy field. Mrs. Gross Alexander was re-elected editor of leaflets. Miss Belle Bennett was elected to fill the vacancy on the committee left by the death of Miss Sue Bennett. The report of the year closing March 31, 1892, was encouraging. More auxiliaries were organized than any year previous, and a more decided increase in dues reported. During the year the Central Committee aided twenty-three parsonages to the amount of $4,675 in donations, and $1,000 in loans—whole amount, $5,675. The Conference aided thirty-two to the amount of $2,400, and over. The amounts granted by Conferences are not always given. The Central Committee and Conference together aided fifty-five parsonages to the amount of $8,075, and over. Besides these, the auxiliaries report $8,192.62 raised as special donations for local work, with which seventy-nine aided their local parsonages, either for pastor or presiding elder. This shows the Parsonage and Home Mission Society through its Central Committee for general work, its Conference organizations for Conference work, and its auxiliaries for local work, aided during the year 134 parsonages. That is an average of over two parsonages and a half each week. What a relief it would be when the appointments are to be made at the Annual Conferences, if each preacher knew, and the Bishop sending him knew, that wherever sent, he would find a comfortable home awaiting him! Under the stimulus of this connectional organization this happy dream of the past bids fair to be a reality in the near future.

The general treasurer received during the year in dues, $2,011.43; the Conference treasurers retained $2,011.48; whole amount of dues, $4,022.96. The general treasurer received in special donations, $1,500.03; in loan fund, $216; Conference treasurers received in special donations for Conference work, $337.25; whole amount received by general and Conference treasurers, $6,076.24. If special donations raised by the auxiliaries for our local work be added, we have the grand total of $14,268.86.

"OUR HOMES."

In January, 1892, the society began to publish a paper under the title of Our Homes, that was at once received into favor and put upon a paying basis. We are deeply grateful to the many friends who have given our paper not only encouragement, but the highest praise. This paper is intended not only to give needed information of the society's work, but to represent generally the work of our women in the home field, to stimulate them to the highest endeavor for a Christ-like spirit in themselves and Christ-like labors for the salvation of souls, and to give to our young people reading matter both interesting and of literary value. The price is only twenty-five cents a year, and sample copies will be sent to all who may write for them. We will send it free to anyone sending us twelve subscribers. We most sincerely ask the prayers of all who love the Lord, the Savior of sinners.

Woman's Work.

Auxiliaries should remember to forward the money for the publication of the Minutes of the annual meeting to the recording secretary at the Conference. Auxiliaries numbering twenty-five, or over, to be assessed one dollar, and all under that number fifty cents. Places inviting the Conference to meet with them are expected to extend the invitation in writing.

Let's go to the annual meeting, to convene June 25, expecting a blessing as individuals, as well as upon the work; and may the good sisters of Vicksburg have no cause for regretting having invited us!

All would be benefited, encouraged and cheered by reading the May issue of the Woman's Missionary Advocate. Besides other valuable reading, there is an account from the North China Daily News, Shanghai, of the opening of the McVeyre Home and School, an Anglo-Chinese college for girls. Another solid planting and firm foundation, which opens under most encouraging prospects. "The intention is that, in the matter of current expenses, the school shall be self-supporting."

Miss Laura Haygood, in a letter to Mrs. Butler, says: "In place of the letter which I was under appointment to send you last month for the Advocate, I send a copy of the North China

Daily News, of this date, with an account of the opening of McVeyre School, and invite every member of the Woman's Missionary Society to join me in thanking that God has made this possible to us. I am sure that I had a new appreciation, on the evening of the sixteenth of March, of all that the children of Israel must have felt when the Jordan was actually crossed and the memorial stones set upon the other side.

"Here I'll raise mine Ebenezer."

But the land is yet to be possessed, and many a battle is yet to be fought. More than ever, perhaps, I need to be held up by the faith and prayers of my fellow workers at home. Not less now than when I wrote in November that the opening of the school must depend upon her coming, do I need some one to help me in this school. I have not time to tell you of all the leadings which brought me to feel that I must not longer delay the opening. I found myself "bound in the Spirit" to do this. My "waiting eyes are unto God" for the help which in his own good time I am sure that he will send."

[Can not a response come from the Mississippi Conference?—EDITOR.]

Mrs. E. D. JONES,
Editor W. M. S., Miss. Conf.

An Omission Supplied.

Since there was an accidental omission in the printed Minutes of the last Mississippi Conference, the treasurer of our Missionary Board, Dr. T. S. West, authorizes me to furnish for the Advocate figures, displaying, to all whom it may concern, the amounts paid out by said treasurer to the various charges aided by said Board, viz:

Those places which had the largest appropriations were generally new territory, with scant funds or poor membership, and unprovided with parsonages. The small sums ought to have been larger. The larger should not have been less, but also greater.

"The Greater Responsibility."

If four thousand four hundred and fifty-three effective ministers of the M. E. Church, South, with a million members and eighty million dollars in keeping, can't raise a debt of one hundred thousand dollars, it might be well for somebody somewhere to consider the methods of a few women—about one-tenth of the female membership—who have not only kept out of debt, but have been prudent enough to keep on hand a contingent fund for any emergency.

Our Savior oites the children of this kingdom to the children of this world for business acumen.

Peter was told to catch the fish, and then pay the tribute. God told Moses, "Of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart, ye shall take an offering" of gold, silver, purple and every manner of stones, and then "make me a sanctuary that I may dwell therein." The duty of voluntarily giving is taught everywhere, but the tithes were never used until they were gathered in.

Paul said to the Corinthians, "Let everyone lay by him in store that there be no gatherings when I come." He wanted no deficits to beg nor borrow.

Isn't there a grave responsibility in using the Lord's money to pay interest on a voluntary debt? The man to whom five talents were given was told to use five talents and no more. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth;" and an over-sanguine zeal may accrue a large debt in pushing the kingdom into the regions beyond. So it might, and every child of God should groan under the impulse; but we must "scatter" only the seed given us, and "over-zeal" must not lead us to violate the New Testament command to "owe no man anything, but to love." Uzzah attempted to steady the ark in its progress—its slow, uneven progress—but his "over-zeal" was severely punished. "The zeal of mine house hath eaten me up."

Debt is an incubus—in Church and State—and the women are afraid of it. Willing consecration of what we have and faith we can comprehend, and they yield an hundredfold. The Savior himself refused to presume on divine, miraculous interposition and left us a lesson in "Tempt not the Lord thy God," though "the earth is his and the cattle on a thousand hills."

This interpretation of Scripture has been the basis of the woman method.

If the debt belonged to the Woman's Board, we shudder at contemplating the possible hue and cry.

The W. B. M. has not robbed the Parent Board. Their funds represent thousands of little "lay-bys," which have scattered the heaven of willing self-sacrifice throughout the church. Besides this, the usual response of the same women in the general collections have been increased, thus lessening the debt.

Did you ever hear of a man with houses and lands wanting his wife's chicken money to help pay his church subscriptions? "It is all the Lord's money," says he. "So it is, and the Lord shall receive his own even though it be with usury, ha!"

Better let the women alone to scatter and work as best they can. Their hearts are right in the cause, and their Great Head will impart sufficient wisdom when he opens the way for their willing offerings.

Instead of condemning the whole plan authorized by the church, and thank God! approved by most of the ministers, it would be more Paul-like to help those women whose labors in the gospel have been crowned with such success.

Pres. L. W. M. S.

Parker Christian Convalescent Home.

For all those who are benevolently inclined an opportunity is afforded to bestow a part of their benevolence upon a worthy object which is to be found in Capt. Parker's Convalescent Home, situated at No. 29 South Claiborne street, New Orleans. The history of this institution is briefly as follows:

For a period of some twelve years, Capt. Robert Parker has daily visited the Charity Hospital, and, while passing through the wards on his mission of kindness and mercy, he found many patients who were in a convalescent state, but destitute and penniless, and many of them far from home and friends. The idea occurred to his mind that a place for such patients would be a great advantage to them—a place where they could be comfortably provided for until such time as they could obtain employment, or hear from their families or friends. In one of the wards on one occasion he found a young man who was in a convalescent condition and took him to his own home for a few days by way of experiment, but at the end of this time he was compelled to let him go because the means at his command was not sufficient to keep him longer. The young man in his efforts to reach his friends stowed himself away in a box-car, but the car was side-tracked on the way, and when it was opened, which was after the lapse of three days, the young man was found dead. In the pocket of the deceased was found a memorandum book containing Capt. Parker's name and address.

This melancholy circumstance enlisted Capt. Parker's Christian sympathies for this class of poor and destitute humanity. He went energetically to work, and the result of his labors may be seen in the present home. While the institution thus established is not yet fully up to Capt. Parker's idea, yet in the three years that it has been in existence it has accommodated an average of twenty inmates for thirty days each; besides affording out-door relief to poor people to whom he has given seventeen hundred meals.

The management of the home is under the immediate superintendence of Capt. Parker and family. It is conducted in a spirit of pure Christian philanthropy and liberality. It has proved, indeed, a "home" to many who have not had the comforts of such for years. But while this is a fact, the support which it has received has often been so meager as to wring Capt. Parker's heart and cause him sometimes to fear for its continuance. But his faith in God has continued strong, and often when difficulties seemed most insurmountable, help has come from unexpected sources and the difficulties were bridged for the time.

The burden of its support has fallen upon a few good and Christian people so far; but it is now hoped that the liberal-minded people of New Orleans will come to its assistance in so generous a manner as to place its needs beyond peradventure.

It is urged upon your readers' attention, that in bestowing their aid upon this institution no more worthy object could be found for the exercise of their benevolence. Donation of money, clothing, provisions, farm and garden produce, etc., sent to Capt. Robert Parker, 29 South Claiborne St., New Orleans, La., would be gratefully received and applied to the uses of the home.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—May 29, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LA PRADRE.

Nebuchadnezzar's Dream.

Daniel ii, 38-49.

TIME.—B. C. 605-602.

PLACE.—Babylon.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"All things are made and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."—Heb. ix, 15.

THE DREAM OF THE GREAT BABYLONIAN KING OCCURRED IN THE SECOND YEAR OF HIS REIGN, HE HAVING RULED JOINTLY WITH HIS FATHER, NABOPOLASSAR, FOR A FEW YEARS PREVIOUSLY. THIS PART OF CHAPTER 2 PRECEDING THE LESSON SHOULD BE READ BY THE TEACHER TO THE CLASS, SO THAT THE CONNECTION CAN BE SEEN CLEARLY.

GOD APPROACHES THE MIND THROUGH THE avenues that habits of thought, or personal peculiarities, or national type may have opened. He sent the star to the astrologers of the East, the angels to the Hebrew shepherds, to announce the birth of Jesus. So he now sends a dream to a Babylonian king, taught from infancy to regard dreams as of divine origin. But he does not allow heathen interpretation of the dream. He sends confusion to the mind of the king, so that he remembers simply that he dreamed something wonderful, but can not recall the dream itself. To Daniel only does God make known what the dream was, so that his interpretation of it would also be accepted by the king.

Ver. 36. The three companions of Daniel had joined him in prayer for wisdom. Now that the prayer had been answered, Daniel regarded himself as simply the spokesman for the little company.

Ver. 37, 38. Many kings had been conquered by Nebuchadnezzar and their kingdoms laid under tribute to him. In Egypt, Arabia, Nigritia, Syria, Tyre, Phenicia, he ruled everywhere he had conquered in the world of his ambition, in the political world of his day. Dazzling in glory of conquest and of wealth, Babylon was the head of gold.

Ver. 39. By reference to chapter v, 28, it will be seen that Medo-Peria was the second kingdom, inferior in power and wealth to the Babylonian kingdom at its best, and which yielded to the Grecian arms under Alexander in the year 333 B. C.

The third kingdom, called the brass, one probably because of the brass armor of the Grecian soldiers, was of almost universal dominion. Alexander was, indeed, called "king of all the earth," and the diffusion of Grecian culture through his victories did much toward changing the type of civilization in the west of Asia and in Egypt.

Ver. 40. The Roman power succeeded the Grecian. Stern in character, rigid in discipline, relentless of purpose, full of force, the Roman dynasty is well represented by iron.

Ver. 41-43. The policy of the Caesars was to bind together the dissimilar elements of the Roman Empire by force of authority; but the masses of it never became homogeneous. Various alliances, during the later periods of it, were made by marriage and by political treaties, but these never brought permanent union. Part iron, strong, coherent; part clay, brittle and weak, the figure fitly represents the facts.

Ver. 44. Jesus was born during the reign of the early Caesars. John preached that "the kingdom of heaven" was at hand. Jesus declared that the "gates of hell" should not prevail against his church. The universal dominion of his kingdom was foretold in second Psalm; his perpetuity Jesus himself declared. The kingdom of Christ is the fifth kingdom of the dream.

Ver. 45. The kingdom of Christ was not the outcome of human ambition; it was not the product of human wisdom. It is spiritual in nature, divine in origin. "The weapons of our warfare" are "spiritual, mighty through God." Its beginning was small, as men see things; a handful of men and women. All European and American Christianity once crossed the Mediterranean Sea, from the mouth of the Orontes river to Cyprus, in a small vessel. Paul, and Barnabas, and John Mark were all. The "Stoics" is growing; it will "fill the whole earth." It is not brittle; it will hold together; its parts cohere because the Spirit of God binds them. Love to God; love to man; faith in Christ; unity of the rag in the highest spiritual sense become each subject also a child of God—these are the perpetual oneness. Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander, Caesar are gone, and the glory of their kingdoms; God is eternal; "his kingdom ruleth over all" and "abideth forever."

Ver. 46, 47. The king recognized that Daniel's God had given him wisdom; so he bowed himself before him, filled with reverence and awe. He would have done him divine honors had Daniel permitted him to do so. As Daniel had given God the glory, so also the king did.

Ver. 48, 49. Naturally Daniel, full of wisdom, was raised to eminence. At his request his three companions were made his chief ministers, but he himself stood nearest the king, so, through him God brought good to Israel.

THE FLOWERS' MORNING PRAISE.

BY F. L. BLANCHARD.

"Twas all of a calm, fair morning,
That blessed by the rising sun,
Sweet flowers ope'd their tiny eyes,
When the night of rest was done.

The shy, fragrant little violets
That deep in the valley dwell, Joined in praising God's great goodness
With the golden asphodel.

And the "morning glory" tender,
That did o'er the arbor creep,
Raising one sweet palm of thanksgiving
Kre she calmly tell asleep.

From the height the "alpine roses"
Gave thanks with a glad accord,
And the "lilies" from the water
Praised and magnified the Lord.

At the "passion flower," Christ's symbol,
Were the cross upon her breast,
And in solemn, gentle accents,
Calvary's dying Lamb confessed.

See the thoughtful little "pansies,"
All of purple, brown and gold,
With sweet songs of consolation
Now their lovely leaves unfold.

Kosciusko District Conference.

The first session of the Kosciusko District Conference (a new district formed at the last meeting of the North Mississippi Conference, held in Macon, Ga.) was held in the Methodist Church in Durant, Miss., May 11 and 12, 1892.

It was a matter of general regret that Bishop Hendrix was sick and not able to attend. The duties of the chair were discharged with dignity, modesty and marked ability by the presiding elder, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, a young man and a new official. A new committee were appointed, and matters referred to them were well considered and ably reported upon. Rev. J. W. Bachman, Conference collector; Rev. B. F. Lewis, associate collector; Rev. A. F. Watkins, agent of Millaps College; Rev. S. M. Thame, trustee of the same, and Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., president of Grenada College Institute and trustee of Millaps College, were the only connectional visitors present. These preached and spoke to the great pleasure and profit of all. The several interests represented by them were ably represented by each and heartily endorsed and strongly commended by the Conference.

The attendance of the preachers and laymen was pretty full when we consider the busy season now on hand. The running reports of the pastors and representatives, made orally, indicated that the church was alive and growing, but not as zealous and prosperous as we would like for it to be. Indeed, a church or a Christian satisfied with present attainments, that has need of nothing, is either dead or dying—"lukewarm," "neither cold nor hot," and so, offensive to the heart of God. In some things there was cause for comfort and congratulation; in others, cause for sorrow and deep humiliation. The one drinking sheep dancing lamb in a flock of one hundred caused more comment and called forth more sorrow than the ninety and nine fairly, orderly living members. The sore spot always attracts attention. The hurt of the daughter of God's people needs to be healed. It was generally agreed that the great body of our membership was orderly, consistent, charitable, generous and liberal in supporting the institutions and enterprises of the church. In this respect, mainly, were found the indications of religious growth and Christian engagement.

The following named members were elected lay delegates to the Annual Conference: J. G. Hamilton, J. Irving, F. M. Glass and Dr. W. H. Dr. J. G. Gunn and G. B. Ramsey were chosen as alternates.

The next District Conference is to be held in Eupora, Miss. The Christian hospitality of Durant was abundant, and the Conference held that it was a country flowing with Jersey cream and airwaves. I will ask room for the report of the committee on Education on Millaps College and its new president. This the first District Conference held in this Conference since the election of Mr. Murrah. Pending the adoption of the report, Rev. A. F. Watkins made an eloquent and powerful address in behalf of Christian education in general and of this college in particular.

MILLAPS COLLEGE—REPORT NO. 1.
Your committee, to whom was referred the subject of education, have heard with great pleasure that the building of Millaps College and the adjoining boarding-houses will be ready for the opening of the college next Fall. We are also delighted at the announcement of the election of Mr. W. B. Murrah, D. D., of the North Mississippi Conference, to the presidency of this institution of learning. We recognize in this college the promise and power of great and lasting good to the cause of God and to Methodism in this State. We are glad that we express the sentiment of all our people when we say that the election of Dr. Murrah to the presidency of Millaps College meets the hearty approval of every Methodist in the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference.

We are pleased to have with us Rev. A. F. Watkins, the financial agent of the college.

We would offer the following resolutions for adoption by this District Conference:

Resolved, That the Kosciusko District Conference is delighted at the prospect and promise of the opening of Millaps College at an early day, and that we hereby pledge ourselves to give this institution our patronage and our hearty support.

Resolved, That we are greatly pleased and encouraged by the fact that Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., one of our number, has been called to preside over this college, and that we hereby pledge him, personally and officially, all the strength and help it is in our power to give him. We regard him well qualified and specially gifted for this important position.

Resolved, That we extend a warm welcome at all times to Rev. A. F. Watkins, agent, and that we hereby pledge him all the help we can give in collecting the endowment notes still in his hands and due by members and friends in our respective charges, and that we will aid him in any other way in completing the endowment of one hundred thousand dollars.

Resolved, That we urge our people to pay these notes promptly, so as to finish up this good, round sum, now so nearly full, and so necessary to the opening, progress and prosperity of this school.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Grenada District.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, M. E. Church, South, met in annual session at Charleston, Miss., Wednesday, May 11, 1892. The opening religious exercises were conducted by the district secretary, Mrs. Anna P. Ball. Hymn 851 was sung, followed by prayer and Scripture lesson, Matt. xxv. Mrs. W. T. J. Sullivan was elected secretary. The district secretary read her report, giving an interesting detail of the work and an earnest appeal for greater activity. Hymn 915 was sung, after which reports from auxiliaries were called for, and the following reported by delegate or otherwise: The report from the Oxford Auxiliary was read by their delegate, Mrs. Collier. Water Valley was called, and there being no representative, the district secretary made a verbal report of the work there. The report from Coffeeville was read by Mrs. G. W. Gordon, who also made verbal report of the society at Antioch. The district secretary read the report sent by the Grenada Auxiliary. By request, Rev. O. L. Savage read the report from Minter City, and gave a cheering account of the work at Strathmore. Reports from juveniles were then called for. The report from the Oxford Juveniles was read by Mrs. Collier. The district secretary read an interesting letter from the society of the Grenada Collegiate Institute. Master Edward Delosch read the report from Grenada Juveniles, which was quite interesting. The report from Coffeeville "Forget-me-nots" was read by Miss Susie Bibby. In answer to the request of the district secretary, Mrs. Choate, of Charleston, read a history of the organization of the Woman's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South, and auxiliaries thereto in the North Mississippi Conference. This interesting and instructive paper was prepared for the annual meeting of the Conference society by Mrs. Georgia Foote Paine. After a song and prayer the morning session closed with the benediction by Rev. Jas. Porter.

The society met pursuant to adjournment at 8 o'clock P. M., and the devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Collier. Scripture lesson, Luke x, 1-16. The minutes of the morning session were read and approved. Mrs. G. W. Gordon read an essay on "Juvenile Work," after which the district secretary made some pointed remarks on the same subject. Then followed an interesting recitation, "The Bible and the School," by Miss Susie Bibby. A selection from the Woman's Missionary Advocate, of April, 1892, was read by Mrs. W. T. J. Sullivan. Miss Maggie Johnson gave a beautiful recitation, "Hold the Rope." Mrs. Bailey read an interesting and impressive selection from the Woman's Missionary Advocate, "Somebody is Watching," which was followed by prayer led by Rev. G. W. Gordon. After a song by the choir, little Ethel Durant, of Coffeeville, recited in a charming manner, "Missionary Music." Mrs. Collier then read a leaflet, "Why Our Society Did Not Disband," which was full of spirit and instruction. A recitation, "Consecration Offering," was well rendered by Master Edward Delosch. The district secretary added some pointed remarks on consecration. The society adjourned to meet at 8 o'clock P. M. Benediction by Rev. O. L. Savage.

The society met according to adjournment, and after a beautiful recitation by little Ethel Durant, she passed through the audience and took a collection amounting to six dollars and seventy cents. The society then adjourned to meet in connection with the District Conference next year.

done by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Grenada district at its recent session. This is the second meeting of this kind it has been our privilege to attend, and we trust the Lord will permit us to attend many more. The reports from the different auxiliaries show that there is a steady growth in the work. Mrs. Anna P. Ball, the district secretary, is an untiring worker and fully consecrated to God. To her zeal and push in the work is attributable the state of the work in this district. She, with the assistance of others, organized a Woman's Missionary Society in Charleston with 10 members and 3 honorary members, also a juvenile society with 14 members. God bless the women and children!

Report on education, adopted May 13, 1892:

Whereas, We, as a church, have for many long years felt the great need of a college in the very heart of our beloved State, where our boys could be educated under the supervision of our own church, and that we could not meet the demands that were upon us without the establishment of this institution of learning, we hear with great delight of the early completion of Millaps College, and that arrangements are now being made to open the institution for the reception of students in the Fall; therefore, be it.

Resolved, That we have received with great satisfaction the information of the election of the Rev. W. B. Murrah, A. M., D. D., to the presidency of the college. We deem this a wise selection. We will give him our earnest co-operation in building up this institution of learning, that it may be the pride of every Methodist household in the State.

Resolved, That we ask our people to pay their endowment notes as soon as possible, and in every possible way do their utmost to help forward this grand enterprise of the Methodist people in Mississippi.

Resolved, That we will heartily welcome to our pulpits and to our pastoral charges the beloved and zealous agent of the college, Rev. A. F. Watkins, and we will gladly co-operate with him in his work.

The following is Report No. 2 on education:

While no reports have been presented to this body by Centenary, East Mississippi, Whitworth, Port Gibson, or Woodville, we heartily recommend these institutions as worthy the confidence and patronage of our people. We recognize the good they have accomplished in the past, and pledge them our support in the future.

Those who have given the matter greatest study admit that baldness is more often the result of a want of local vigor than the consequence of constitutional decline. The remedy therefore depends mainly upon stimulating applications, energetically and unrelentingly employed.

Anyone concerned about his or her hair, even if they have deferred attending to the matter until baldness has appeared, should begin treatment at once. The first applications of the Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer will demonstrate that it is something more than an ordinary tonic. It is a preparation having for its basis the root used for years by the Creoles, noted the world over for their luxuriant locks. Nothing injurious is introduced and it is a purely vegetable compound. It acts wonderfully on the scalp and roots of the hair, relieving at once any itchy or unpleasant sensations and giving a refreshing feeling. Growth is stimulated and the natural coloring properties of the hair restored. As a dressing it is unexcelled, and no lady who uses it once for her toilet will ever be without it. Manufactured by Dr. J. C. Parker, Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

Alas! alas! Never to fire, never to grow cold; to be patient, sympathetic, tender; to look for the huddling flower and the opening heart; to hope always, like God; to love always—this is duty.

—Amiel.

Baldness is either hereditary or caused by sickness, mental exhaustion, wearing tight-fitting hats, and overwork and trouble. Hall's Renewer will prevent it.

The Golden Wedding. Thanks!

Bishop and Mrs. Keener desire to express, in this public way, their heartfelt thanks to the college of Bishops, to the members of the church, and specially to the preachers and Methodists of New Orleans, for the high appreciation shown and most honorable mention of interest in the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. The occasion itself was made a Methodist Night Dream in the substantial, elegant and tasteful manner of all its appointments, only seen in a New Orleans entertainment. Besides many costly and brilliant gifts, there were present a large company of elect ladies, noble persons, and charming young people, beautiful to God, to angels and to men. The graces of Christian womanhood, mature and gentle, and of reverend, godly men, and of youth already inspired with immortal life, constituted a salutation of the whole church to us as a kiss of love, which, in the spirit of St. Paul, we most gratefully return, believing that we shall all by and by meet in those amaranthine homes which "the King in gold of Ophir" has prepared for the perennial joy of his Bride.

Carrollton, May 19, 1892.

The dispatches state that when our fraternal messenger to the General Conference, at Omaha, Dr. J. J. Tigert, in the course of his speech to that body, remarked that the "Southern whites were the negroes' best friends," the statement was greeted with hissing! This was an unpardonable offense. The M. E. Church had as well cease prating about fraternity and union, if our representative to their highest body is to be treated with such indignity and no protest made as publicly as the hissing was done! We hope the dispatches are incorrect!

Our Northern brethren in General Conference, at Omaha, seem to be having some new experiences and are "taking on" over them. Witness the following, clipped from one of their papers:

When Bishop Taylor had concluded his address, he called a little negro girl, not four years of age, upon the platform, and presented her. She was rescued from heathendom less than nine months ago. Her name is Diana. She is a beautiful child, regular features and perfect head and physique. Bishop Bowman grasped the little black hand amid a storm of applause; yet the face of the child broke into a smile as she looked into the kindly face of the senior Bishop and found sympathy in her bewilderment. It was a memorable moment; and a picture of that scene would become historic in Methodism. The ovation was overwhelming, and reached the climax when colored delegate Knox, of Indianapolis, declared that the Spirit of God was upon him to read in that scene the fulfillment of prophecy.

An Important Movement.

On Friday evening, May 13, at the call of the presiding elder of the New Orleans district, there assembled in Felicite Street Church the largest representative gathering of Methodists we have ever seen in this city. All of our city pastors, excepting two, were present. The roomy and pleasant basement of the church was well filled with prominent laymen and elect ladies from each charge. The presiding elder of the district presided, and Rev. J. M. Henry, of Carrollton, acted as secretary pro tempore.

The meeting had been called and was held in the interests of mission work within the city limits. The report of a committee appointed at a previous meeting was handed in and discussed thoroughly, point by point, and amended as to most of its suggestions. The final outcome of the amendment was this: This representative body of Methodists resolved almost unanimously to appoint a committee, composed of the pastors and one layman from each church, to carry on mission work in this city. The laymen on this committee were nominated each by his own pastor, and the nominations were confirmed by the body. These laymen are: E. P. Mackie, of Carondelet; L. S. Widney, of Felicite; Philip Werlein, of Rayne Memorial; W. B. Thomson, of Louisiana Avenue; Paul Voss, of Dryades; C. M. Fush, of Parker Chapel; J. R. Westfield, of Carrollton; Dr. J. W. Adams, of Moreau; J. F. Muller, of Craps and Sorparu; F. A. Daniels, of Algiers, and Jeff Matthews, of Gretna.

It will be seen at once that it is proposed to do connectional mission work as well as mission work by individual churches. This we regard as a most important movement. Methodism is and must continue to be a connection throughout all its parts. No part of it can do without any other part of it. "The head can not say to the foot, 'I have no need of thee.'" To preserve and foster and strengthen the whole body of connectionalism there must be work in common for all the parts. Hence the institution of a committee with an equal number of workers from each charge concentrates the energies and sympathies and working forces of the whole body of Methodists in the city upon that line of work which the committee, in its godly judgment, shall determine to pursue. There is a power in this union of sympathy and working force which can hardly be overestimated. "In union there is strength," and the whole of city Methodism concentrating its power upon one point is not only an exhibition of strength, but it is a prophecy of success.

It will have a very salutary influence in another direction. Other churches and the outside world will see in this movement that we not only do our individual church work as best we can, but that we have united together on a special line to do extra church work. This will provoke other churches "to love and good works," and proclaim to all outsiders that we intend to push forward the interests of our Zion as doors shall open and opportunities are afforded. Besides this, the movement will awaken our own dormant faculties and stir our energies and quicken our zeal and enliven our hopes and create fresh enthusiasm in the work of the Lord.

The committee met on Monday, May 16, in the presiding elder's office and perfected its organization by electing the presiding elder chairman of the body; Rev. J. M. Henry, secretary, and E. P. Mackie, treasurer. A Finance Committee, whose duty is to raise funds for carrying on the work, was selected, consisting of E. P. Mackie, W. B. Thomson, F. A. Daniels, Rev. F. N. Parker and Rev. A. E. Clay. A Committee on Work and Workers was chosen, consisting of Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Rev. F. N. Parker and Rev. A. E. Clay. These two committees were constituted also an Executive Committee. The committee resolved to meet the first Tuesday in each month, at five P. M., in the presiding elder's office.

The first work of the committee was to take charge of the flourishing mission now in successful operation on Tchoupitoulas street. Bro. Harrison, who has done such good service there, was continued as superintendent, and was given the assurance that aid in the way of workers and means would be amply supplied. Now, if the Methodists of this city will back up their committee with their means and prayers, this mission work will succeed beyond their most sanguine expectations. Brethren and sisters; give us your aid.

General Conference of the M. E. Church.

NOTES.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church convened in Omaha, Nebraska, Monday, May 2, Bishop Bowman, the senior in office, presiding. All the sixteen Bishops were present at the opening session. This is the first time in the history of the church that a General Conference has been held west of Chicago.

There are 500 delegates present—350 clerical and 150 lay—representing 2,300,000 communicants in various parts of the world. Of these 500 delegates nearly 400 are new men.

It has been just one hundred years since the General Conference began to hold quadrennial sessions, and it is proposed during the present session of the Conference to celebrate in some appropriate way the centennial of the General Conference as a quadrennial body.

The address of the Bishops was read by Bishop Foster, and was pronounced by some as the finest ever presented. It occupied an hour and three-quarters in reading. It opened with an invocation of the Holy Spirit upon the body, reviewed the work of the past four years, looked hopefully at the future, but touched rather indefinitely on one or two subjects upon which it should have been explicit.

There is a strong plea, especially from the city churches, to have an indefinite pastoral limit, instead of a five years' pastorate, as the law now stands. The advocates for this change claim that the Methodist Church with a limited pastoral term can not keep pace and compete with other denominations with unlimited pastoral terms in the cities. Strange to say, the episcopal address makes no mention of this matter. The laymen held a meeting on Saturday before the opening of the Conference to consult as to the advisability of asking the General Conference to allow the lay delegates to be seated separately. The meeting was headed by Hon. John Field, postmaster of Philadelphia, who is a member of the General Conference. This movement was construed as one intended to give laymen more power than they could have under the former custom. When the question came up on the following Monday, after a spirited debate, the request of the laymen was granted. About two-thirds of the laymen occupy chairs in a block, but the remainder prefer sitting with the ministerial delegates.

The subject of worldly amusements will be considered. The episcopal address, strange to say, is not very definite. It pronounces against all amusements "offensive to conscience and deadening of spiritual sensibilities," and says that the line between these and those that may be indulged in is not difficult to be discerned. The press dispatches say that a resolution to allow dancing has been introduced and referred to the appropriate committee for consideration. We hope this is a mistake.

The Bishops make reference to the prosperity of the Southern Methodist Church, and intimate that they would like for there to be union of the two. "We do not ask our sister to come to us. We do desire and will continue to pray that we may come together on terms that will be equally honorable to both." They "wait in loving hope and with extended hand."

There is a difference of opinion as to the election of more Bishops. Some contend that the sixteen they now have are sufficient, while others say, at least, three additional ones should be elected. The colored members are trying to get a colored Bishop elected, but all their efforts are vain. It is a question whether the white Conferences would receive a colored Bishop. The colored brethren, however, are willing for a Bishop of their color to confine his labors among themselves.

The episcopal address shows that on the subject of admitting women into the General Conference the vote stood: For admission, 235,668 lay, 5,777 ministers; against the admission, 163,843 lay and 4,765 ministers—a majority of 10,012 in favor of admitting them. But this falls considerably short of the requisite three-fourths. The question will, however, be discussed during the present session of the Conference.

Since the foregoing was written much has been done by the Conference, and many things brought forward have failed. The Conference has refused to add to the number of Bishops. This gives the colored aspirant for episcopal responsibilities a quietus for the present. The same missionary secretaries have been re-elected. They are McCabe, Reed and Leonard. Drs. Buckley, Edwards, Moore and Smith have been re-elected editors, respectively, of the New York, Northwestern, Western and Pittsburg Advocates. Dr. Jesse Bowman Young takes charge of the Central at St. Louis; Dr. J. E. C. Sawyer of the Northern, at Syracuse, N. Y., and Dr. E. W. S. Hammond of the Southwestern, at New Orleans, La.

In mission work the progress of the M. E. Church during the quadrennium has been marvelous. Each year the income of the Missionary Society has risen to a higher level, reaching last year $1,228,888.04. The sum named does not include $263,660.69 raised by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, nor $155,398.54 raised by the Woman's Home Missionary Society, nor $311,827.56 raised by the Board of Church Extension, nor $322,656.44 raised by the Freedmen's Aid Society, nor many thousands of dollars raised by the various city missionary societies. Even more encouraging are the spiritual fruits. During the past year, in a single field (North India Conference) the baptisms of converted heathen have averaged at times 500 a week. The accessions in that field alone within the twelvemonth have amounted to 16,000.—Missionary Review.

Here are some interesting Sunday-school statistics: There are in the United Kingdom some 45,000 schools, in which upwards of 700,000 teachers are engaged in instructing 7,000,000 scholars. In the United States there are upwards of 100,000 Sunday-schools, more than 1,000,000 teachers, and 8,500,000 scholars. In the whole world the schools are said to number 183,390, the teachers 1,999,569, and the scholars 17,716,211. Almost without exception the teaching is voluntary.

A Brilliant Affair.

BISHOP KEENER AND WIFE CELEBRATE THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING, MAY 19.

Life would become oppressively prosaic without super-addition of a little sentimentalism. The latter is like a little flower garden in addition to a large plantation, like diamonds and pearls in addition to necessary habiliment. Thus we are permitted to permeate staid reason and cumbrous matter of fact with charms of romance and fancy. The golden wedding of Bishop Keener and his beloved wife afforded one of those charms.

THE OCCASION.

Fifty years of happy wedlock. A fifty years' voyage together o'er life's boisterous main without serious accident. The wedding ring thinned, but still on the finger; vision dimmed, but still perceiving perfection in each other. Interesting, charming, memorable, epochal. Much presupposed. Both healthy. Neither of them having been a life-long sick-nurse. Not only the Decalogue, but also the laws of nature obeyed. Wife home-loving. Studying husband's taste, disposition, wishes. Cheerfully providing for same. Finding comfort in husband's comfort, delight in his delight. The husband not less assiduous in his attention to his bosom companion. Industrious, frugal, confidential, affectionate. The two hearts beat ultimately in unison; think alike; not unfrequently look alike. Living for each other often secures living long with each other. A felicitous occasion.

THE PREPARATION

was brief, but elaborate and complete. A meeting of the Methodist ladies—a representative gathering—resulted in appointing one female member from each church as committee on arrangement. Each member to be assisted by three young ladies from her own church. Mrs. W. W. Carre superintending. Refreshments and decoration of Bishop's residence provided for. Each church requested to secure and present a suitable souvenir. All Methodists and friends invited to attend. Grand reception in the evening from three to ten o'clock. All our preachers and their wives the reception committee. The New Orleans Preachers' Meeting, at preceding session, passed complimentary resolutions and requested the presiding elder to present them at the proper time. A valuable memento was purchased and Dr. Walker chosen to make presentation speech. All met at six o'clock at our church in Carrollton and march in a body to the festive abode. At the appointed time Bishop Galloway joined the preachers and headed the procession.

The golden wedding was, indeed,

A BRILLIANT AFFAIR.

The college of Bishops had sent, and Bishop Galloway presented to the esteemed couple, two valuable leather-cushioned arm-chairs. Seated on these, beneath a large arch of jessamine and evergreen, from whose centre was suspended a beautiful marriage-bell of golden flowers, the happy pair awaited their friends. Floral decorations abundant. Congratulations numerous and cordial. Dr. C. W. Carter prefaced the reading of resolutions, alluded to, with appropriate remarks. Dr. J. B. Walker presented the preachers' souvenir and spoke as only he can speak. Sister Keener gave expression to her appreciation and gratitude. Now the Bishop gave one of his characteristic speeches. Spoke of his labors for the Master before, during and since "the war." Expressed himself the petted child of Providence. Alluded kindly to his good wife. That he was vastly indebted to her. Home and female influence give traits and charm to character which university and high office fail to impart. He pitied all women who craved for conquests and kingdoms beyond the home circle. A queen of home was a queen indeed. A happy home was glory begun below. Of joys and woes he had had a full allotment. His dear wife had faithfully shared both. When Bishop Keener took his seat, the united choirs of our different churches sang, with exquisite pathos: "How firm a foundation," etc. Now representatives of our different churches presented congratulations and presents. Individual members and friends duplicated the process. Other appropriate songs, instrumental music, genial intercourse and converse caused the happy hours to rapidly pass away. Throngs of people, like surging billows, approaching and receding all evening. 'Twas a scene in which angels find delight.

PLEASANT MEMORIES.

The youngest of our college of Bishops was foremost in doing honor to the beloved senior. Seniority in such a body means more than official relation. High mountains and ancient castles compel admiration. Bishop Galloway appreciated the divine injunction (Leviticus ix, 32): "Thou shalt rise up before a hoary head and honor the face of the old man."

Our church is emulating the Master's spirit by being not a respecter of persons. Men and women of vast wealth and influence were not more welcome than the many who move in the lower walks of society.

Methodism is a compact body. Not an "Archipelago" of disjointed entities. For this we are indebted to our connectional officers, including the Bishops. Their office and influence weld the entire membership into organic solidarity. Loyalty to the church and love to our chief ministers was plainly manifest on this occasion.

J. B. A. AUBREY.

NOTES.

The Interior "hits it" when it says: "There are more wonderful gifts than strong common sense, but none more useful to either Church or State." And a friend of ours says, "There is none more uncommon!"

Money is called "sterling," because in the time of Richard I. money coined in the east of Germany became, on account of its purity, in special request in England, and was called sterling money, as the people of that part of Germany were called Easterlings.

The correspondence of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes with his father on the subject of the choice of his life-work is laconic enough to suit even a Laconian. Here it is:

"My dear father, I think I ought to be a Wesleyan minister. Your affectionate son."

The answer was equally laconic. "My dear boy, I would rather see you a Wesleyan minister than lord chancellor. Your affectionate father."

The Nashville Advocate asks these questions:

Is there one solitary person among all those who read these lines that has ever endured real hardship in order that he might have something to contribute to the wants and woes of the fellow-men? Is there one who has restrained his love for rich food and costly apparel for Christ's sake? We ask these questions in all seriousness and earnestness. Are we Christians at all in any high sense of the word as long as we surrender nothing except what we can easily and pleasantly do without?

What is your answer?

An English paper advertises for a preacher thus:

Curate wanted, a common-sense, broad-church, ritualistic, evangelistic, working on Church Times' lines. He must be an all-round man, able to superintend a soup kitchen, personally conduct penny readings and parochial smoking concerts, and manage a gymnasium and swimming bath for boys and girls. If competent to preside both at church, balls and banquets, and to appear occasionally as a nigger soloist with or without a burnt cork and banjo accompaniment—all the better. Some practical knowledge of sanitary science would be a distinct recommendation. Views flexible. No fringe allowed, but monstrosities welcomed. Address the Rev. Professor Tootle-Smith, M. A., Lion College, E. C.

Such a man might suit some congregations on this side the water!

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Dr. O. G. Andrews will preach the commencement sermon of Montrose, (Miss.) High School, May 29.

The Book Committee at Nashville has declared a dividend of $17,500 in favor of the Conference claimants of our church.

The brethren must bear with us for leaving over quite a number of postal card reports. The pressure on us is very great, and this was the best we could do.

Dr. A. C. Smith, of Vanderbilt, has been appointed pastor of Granby Street Church, Norfolk, Va. Dr. Smith had already expressed his determination to resign his professorship in the university.

The brethren ought to be sure about their notices before sending them to this office. The request not to publish a notice after the paper has gone to press is a little awkward. Be sure of your time before you send your notice.

Mrs. S. S. Keener and the ladies of Bayne Memorial have started a scheme to raise $1,000 for the missionary debt, and already nearly $500 have been secured. We note this with pleasure, and wish those godly women abundant success.

A note from the pastor of Felicity Street states that the meeting at that church has been quite successful. There have been twenty-five altar conversions, and ten accessions to date, with more to follow. The meetings continue this week, the services to open at 7:45 p. m. and close at 9:30.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend the commencement of Grenada Collegiate Institute. The program is appetizing, beginning Sunday, June 5, with a sermon in the morning by Rev. Amos Kendall, and one in the evening by Rev. R. G. Porter. J. B. Ross, of Grenada, will make the address on Tuesday to the alumni, and Dr. W. C. Black, of Jackson, Miss., will make the annual address on Wednesday.

Rev. W. C. Black, Jackson, Miss., May 18: "On Sunday, May 15, I had the pleasure of dedicating a new church at Sharod, Miss. The congregation far exceeded the capacity of the building, many being compelled to hear from the outside. The building is quite a neat one, and sufficiently spacious to meet the needs of the community. It is finished, with the exception of some inside painting, and is free from debt. In connection with the dedicatory service, a collection was taken which aggregated a sum very nearly sufficient to put on the finishing touches. The pleasure of the occasion was marred by the absence of the pastor, Rev. V. D. Skipper, from the services, his absence being caused by the serious illness of his wife."

Rev. T. L. Mellen, May 17: "Sunday, May 15, Soule Chapel, Lauderdale circuit, Meridian district, was dedicated according to our ritual by the presiding elder. It is a neat, commodious building, and reflects great credit on the faithful preacher in charge, and Bro. Henry Tinsley and Charles Butcher (the Building Committee), and the membership who aided them so liberally and cheerfully. When painted, the building will be well worth $1,000. Bro. N. M. Clark has recently been assisting Bro. J. M. Pugh in a revival meeting of wondrous power at Blinnville, Miss. There were 75 conversions, 48 accessions, and a number of recommitments. There was more than one shout in the camp. The outlook over the district is most cheering."

Bishop Galloway represented the college of Bishops on the occasion of Bishop Keener's golden wedding, last week. Bishop Galloway is a great favorite with our people here, and is always heartily welcomed. He will preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College, May 29. He will leave home for his European trip, sailing from New York, June 11, in the steamer Servia. The Bishop goes first to the Irish Conference at Belfast, and in July to the Wesleyan Conference at Bradford. He will give our readers some interesting letters from abroad, paying special attention to the workings of Methodism in its Conference work, circuit work, village work and city mission work. He will study these matters by personal presence and observation, and we know the Advocate readers have a rich repast in store.

Wesleyan Female Institute.

Commencement exercises of the Wesleyan Female Institute, Stanton, Virginia, will occur as follows: May 30, final celebration of the Lee and Jackson Literary Society at 8 p. m. Saturday, June 4, art exhibition. Sunday, June 5, at 11 a. m., commencement sermon by Bishop A. W. Wilson, LL.D., of Baltimore; and at 8 p. m., sermon before the Y. W. C. A. of the Institute. Monday, June 6, final address of instrumental and vocal music, at 8 p. m. Tuesday, at 10 a. m., closing commencement exercises, awarding diplomas, conferring degrees, etc.

W. A. HARRIS, D. D., Pres.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Queen Victoria has decided to send to the World's Fair some specimens of her knitting and spinning done when she was a girl.

We saw while in Batesville, the other day, a copy of the first Discipline ever issued by the Methodist Church in America. It was published in 1808, and was the fourteenth edition.

Rev. A. B. Nicholson, a superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, gave us a short, but pleasant call a few days ago. He was on his way to Edwards to attend a meeting of some kind now in progress there.

While in Meridian, Miss., a few days ago, a lady asked how old the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was. We replied that it was about forty years old. "Why," said she, "have you been editor of that paper all these years?" We left Bro. Harmon to answer the question.

"Isaiah and His Times," by Rev. A. C. Smith, D. D., of Vanderbilt University, has been read with much interest and profit. It was written for the Epworth League readers, costs but five cents, and will pay you to get it. Order from the Publishing House in Nashville, or from your colporteur.

During the Kosciusko District Conference, while discussing the circulation of our church periodicals, the presiding elder, Bro. Burroughs, made a remark we reproduce as a seed-thought: "Every family into which a church paper goes regularly becomes a liberal supporter of the church."

The Board of Missions have appointed the first week in January (1-8), 1893, as a week of prayer and self-denial to raise funds to aid in paying off the missionary debt. We have always looked upon these seasons of prayer and self-denial with great favor, not so much for the money that is raised, as for the information and inspiration that comes to the church.

A Hindu conversing with a missionary of the Church Missionary Society, in answer to the question, "Which of all our methods do you fear most?" answered, "We do not greatly fear your schools, for we need not send our children; we do not fear your books, for we need not read them; we do not fear your preaching, for we need not hear it; but we dread your women and your doctors, for your doctors are winning our hearts, and your women are winning our homes, and when our hearts and our homes are won, what is there left us?"—(Selected.)

The New York Independent, of May 5, has fifteen articles on "The Ethics of Gambling," one of which is on "Gambling at Church Fairs," by Dr. J. M. Buckley, of the New York Christian Advocate, which is as forcible a presentation of this aspect of church entertainments as we have ever seen. He closes with this sentence: "When the church in its organic capacity resorts to questionable means (for raising money) it becomes more than the ignorant of sin, more than its patron; it is directly the perpetrator of iniquity." This is strong language, but no stronger than the merits of the case demand. Church entertainments, festivals, fairs, or whatever they may be called, are inconsistent with vital godliness.

Mississippi College will certainly open next Fall if there are no providential hindrances. A portion of the faculty has been elected, and the remainder will be at the next meeting of the Board of Trustees. When the course of study is arranged, we sincerely trust the Bible will find a prominent place in it. This is a church school, and a Christian school; why not teach Christianity from its source? The Bible is taught in every Methodist college in Alabama; but we do not recall a single instance in which it finds a place in the curriculum of the Methodist schools of this State (Mississippi), while dancing has been allowed more than once at one of these schools. We would like to see a new wave set in motion by Mississippi College taking the lead and placing the Bible along with Latin, Greek, chemistry, mathematics, etc. Why not?

North Mississippi Conference.

GRENADA DISTRICT SUNDAY-SCHOOL AND DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The two Conferences named above were held, May 12-15, at Charleston, Miss. The presiding elder, Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., presided over both Conferences. O. L. Savage was elected secretary of each. There are fifteen charges on this district. Of these seven pastors were present. Rev. T. J. Newell was present to represent the cause of education. Rev. T. J. Biber, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, was introduced and took part with the Conference. Fifteen lay delegates were in attendance.

The reports before the Sunday-school Conference brought out the fact that there are 69 Methodist schools on the district and 1 union school. There are 337 teachers and 2,573 pupils. All of these are supplied with our literature.

The sermon of our presiding elder, Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, on the subject of missions, delivered May 11, was a strong, practical discourse, full of thought and force. The preaching of Revs. G. W. Gordon, E. H. Rook, C. C. Grisham, was certainly their very best. Bro. Levin Lake made a strong speech on "The importance of securing grand juries who will not pander to the sale of intoxicating liquors."

A resolution, offered by Rev. J. M. Huggins, that each pastor in the district shall preach a sermon on "The Sacredness of the Civil Oath," was adopted by the Conference. Your scribe preached to a good crowd at night after the session of the Sunday-school, and to a real fine one the night after the District Conference closed.

Prominence was given to religious services. The presiding elder presided with courteous and sweet-spirited way, that made all feel that they were at home. The next session is to be held at Coffeeville.

A strong report on temperance but reiterated the sentiments of the late General Conference, the Discipline and the Bible, on the evils of the fiendish and awfully destructive traffic of intoxicating drinks, which the Conference ordered published in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. The session was harmonious. O. L. SAVAGE, Sec'y.

OBITUARIES.

CARNE-MRS. MARTHA A. CARNE, daughter of Jas. Mabry, caught the first glimmering rays of this world's beautiful light on Dec. 2, 1827, in the State of Alabama. On the morning of April 4, 1892, the penning shadows of death fell across the beams of this borrowed light, and the watchers said, "She is dead."

She gave her heart to God while it was yet sweet with the dew of childhood. It was in her thirteenth year, and while at the altar pleading with penitents to yield to the persuasion of gospel-truth, that her life-long companion discovered, enshrined in a pure heart, a jewel more precious than rubies. On Jan. 21, 1846, she stood a fair and youthful bride by the side of him who ever afterward proved her unaltering husband in the worthy name of E. L. Carney, who still lives to cherish the sacred memory of one who never gave him aught but pleasure.

Sweet-spirited, indeed, was she, who always preferred to make the best of everything, rendering the atmosphere of her home as balmy as a summer breeze, and as refreshing as the sparkling waters of some mountain streamlet; yes, "as happy as a poet's dream." God honored this Christian home with eleven children. Preceded the mother to their home above. She is awaiting their summons to their final reunion and communion with God and one another.

Sister Carney exemplified in her life what is meant by Christian fortitude under affliction. She was a great sufferer, and yet an example of patience. She was an exemplary member of the Methodist Church, South, for many years. She loved her pastor, and they in turn looked up to her as a mother. Her heart was the receptacle of the word of God, of the love of God, and of the spirit of God.

Some thirty-five years ago she selected Matt. 5, as her funeral text. The writer found a happy obituary, so befitting was the life of one so eminently pure. She died at the home of her son, Dr. Carney, of Thomasville, Miss. Her funeral was preached in the Methodist Church at Saline, Miss., by her pastor, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Edgar, of Camden, Miss., who so faithfully and kindly attended the family through all their deep affliction. Her body rests in the Saline cemetery, her pure spirit in heaven. The tie of love is not broken, but strengthened. May it blud all hearts in one and all to God! R. M. EVANS, P. C.

STAPP-MRS. MALINDA A. STAPP, daughter of E. L. and M. A. Carney, was born March 10, 1868, in Attala county, Miss., and died March 20, 1892, at Pratt Mines, Ala., in her twentieth year, leaving a husband and four little girls. Her remains were brought to Saline, Miss., and quietly laid to rest after the usual funeral services at the Methodist Church, conducted by the writer.

The death of this saintly woman marks the entrance of untold suffering, and opens to her the gates of health and sweet relief. The wintry days of this life were too severe for a flower so tender; she fully realized it. God saw it, and said, "It is enough; come up higher, and I will care for thy loved ones." She gave her heart to God at an early age, and ever lived a true and constant Christian in the bosom of the Methodist Church, South.

She was married Dec. 21, 1881, to V. M. Stepp, who still survives to cherish with warm devotion the sacred memory of one so true and kind. The little girls are at the home of loved relatives, papa having no one to keep home for them in mama's absence. What a trial this to a father's heart! Nothing but the blood of Jesus can heal a wound so deep. Dear Lord, let thy tender love abound.

An obedient child, a true daughter, a faithful wife, a precious mother, a devoted Christian, and a saintly soul. The characteristics of this beautiful life are treasured up in hearts below and in heaven above. Her suffering is ended and she is at rest. R. M. E.

PUCKETT-JAMES SAMUEL ADAMS PUCKETT was born Jan. 23, 1859, and passed from earth at the home of his father, W. H. Puckett, at 8 P. M., April 14, 1892. Having had the influence of Christianity thrown around him from infancy, he was powerfully convinced and brightly converted Sept. 10, 1873. Immediately after which he connected himself with the M. E. Church, South.

While in his boyhood he often grew indifferent, and at one time withdrew from the church, yet, upon the whole, he was, even then, a worthy example for his associates in that he was always ready to see a wrong, willing to acknowledge a fault, and anxious to ask forgiveness for an injury, and, above all, he was as anxious to forgive as to be forgiven. However, for the last eight years of his life he was a consistent, though quiet, Christian.

From the first of his last illness he seemed to know his time was nearly spent. He apparently suffered but little, but gradually and slowly wasted away as a burning candle. He was conscious to the last, and though he could not speak, when interrogated he gave plain and unmistakable signs that he was trusting in God, and that Christ was bearing his burdens through the valley of death.

Thus as the last pencil of light withdrew themselves from the bosom of heaven and leave all nature to fall into a deep sleep, to be awakened only by the return of the sun, so the light of immortality quietly withdrew itself from his breast and left his body to sleep in the tomb till the Son of God shall return and banish the mists of death and the grave.

BRENTNER-MOORE.—These two sainted mothers in Israel passed over the river of death to join the happy throng of the loved ones who have preceded them, and are waiting on the other shore. They departed this life at the home of the writer at Winnboro, La., who is son-in-law of the former, and son of the latter.

Mrs. CHRISTINA M. BRENTNER was born at Hainburg, Europe, June 17, 1807, and died March 24, 1892. She came to New York in 1844, and was united in marriage to August Brentner. The same year to them was born one boy and one girl. The little boy died, and her husband died in 1847, and in 1855 she with her then only child, a little girl (who preceded her in death one month and four days) came to Franklin parish, La. She, together with her daughter and the writer, joined the M. E. Church South in 1872, under the ministry of Rev. J. McKee, in which she continued a worthy and good member until transferred to the church triumphant.

Mrs. ELIZABETH C. MOORE was born at De Kalb, Ga., Feb. 18, 1823, and died April 2, 1892. She was united in marriage with A. N. Moore in 1837, and had nine sons and one daughter born to them—all of whom preceded her in death except three sons. They came to Franklin parish, La., in December, 1850. Her husband (and father of the writer) died in May, 1857. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1841, and was converted and lived a true Christian life, and died with the blessed assurance that Jesus was her Savior.

These two good old mothers died of pneumonia, of six days duration each. Although they suffered great pain, they murmured not, but bore it with a great deal of fortitude and Christian resignation, until the summoning angel came around their bed-sides, when they went to sleep, calmly and peacefully, in the arms of Jesus.

Of them it can truly be said they were kind and loving mothers and affectionate grandmothers, and ever ready to administer to the wants of others, and ever in sympathy with the poor and suffering.

Sleep on, my two mothers; the setting of your sun of time is the rising of your sun of immortality. We will follow on inspired by the hope that the pearly gates will open to us, and we will enter in at his bidding and will meet you and others who have preceded us and have washed their robes white in the blood of the Lamb. A. D. O. MOORE.

MCADORY—MRS. MARTHA A. MCADORY (nee James) began the pilgrimage of her successful life in the grand old State of Virginia, Jan. 18, 1812, and bade her loved ones a happy farewell, Feb. 12, 1892, at the residence of her devoted daughter, Mrs. Mary J. Brown, of Saline, Miss., with whom she had lived many years. She spent only five or six years on the soil of her native State, and yet quite enough to enrich her blood for all time to come with that energy and vim peculiar to the sons and daughters of Virginia.

The pure, sparkling, health-giving waters of Northern Alabama, too, claim a share in the further development of that noble womanhood that should afterward brave the storms of a wilderness of more than fifty years.

She was married in early life to John McAdory, who, after a few brief years, fell on sleep, leaving it all with wife and children—two boys of tender days who never knew their father, and four little girls who lived to try the realities of life. Two of these sisters—Mary J. Brown and Lou McAdory—still live to cherish the memory of their sainted mother.

Sister McAdory was a success at whatever she undertook. Her energy and care she accumulated several thousand dollars, with which she educated and otherwise provided for her daughters. She was a Cumberland Presbyterian, and withal a staunch Christian. She manifested great fortitude under severe affliction, and fell asleep in the very arms of Jesus. Her body rests in the old family cemetery, her soul with God in heaven. R. M. E.

I, A. C. Hammecker, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. David's Compound of Wild Cherry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. David's Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

We use Alcohol

pure alcohol to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING. Alcohol is good for leather; it is good for the skin. Alcohol is the chief ingredient of Cologne, Florida Water, and Bay Rum the well known face washes. We think there is nothing too costly to use in a good leather preservative.

Acme Blacking retails at 20c. and at that price sells readily. Many people are so accustomed to buying a dressing or blacking at 5c. and 10c. a bottle that they cannot understand that a blacking can be cheap at 20c. We want to meet them with cheapness if we can, and to accomplish this we offer a reward of

for a recipe which will enable us to make Wolff's Acme Blacking at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. We hold this offer open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone. —Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc. This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tune. The balance of the book consists of the finest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale. —Messiah's Herald. After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to page 181, line 18, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago. —Western Methodist.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. D. C. Langford, Benton, Miss., May 16: "We are moving on smoothly in Benton circuit. We have had no arrivals yet. Our great need is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. We are praying and hoping for this. Pray for us."

Rev. B. F. Jones, Port Gibson: "We will build a 'brand-new' parsonage here this summer. The money and lot are secured, and the contract for building will be signed in a few days. It is said we will have waterworks and electric lights in the town very soon. Our cotton mills will begin operation in the fall."

Mrs. Ella P. Farrar, Newellton P. O., May 14: "The neighbors of Lake Joseph, Texas parish, La., have just finished a very neat union church in the little town of Newellton. The doors are now open to all denominations. May all set in full union, and each denomination enjoy a full right to use the church in turn as it is intended to be used!"

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Caseyville, Miss., May 16: "We are moving on nicely in Caseyville circuit. Congregations good; close attention given to preaching. Several have been received into the church; others coming. Old members are being stirred and revived. We are all hopeful of better times, spiritually and financially. Instruction of children and pastoral visiting attended as well as a preacher in feeble health can do it. Pray for us."

Rev. M. L. Burton, McComb City, Miss., May 17: "We have just closed a meeting at this place. We trust much good has been done. Our congregations were large whenever weather would permit. Have received up to date 40 into the church; removed, 9—net gain, 31. Finances pretty well up. Have very good Sunday-school. Prayer meeting well attended. As a rule, our people are moral; but we need a deeper work of grace."

Rev. J. C. Park, Prairie Charge, North Mississippi Conference, May 12: "Our second Quarterly Conference convened Saturday and Sunday last. We were gratified to report an increase in interest in Sunday-school work, with no schools established, and preparations being made for the observance of Children's Day. Class meetings and prayer meetings growing, and church attendance larger than at any time during our three years with this people. The stewards came up with one-fourth of our assessment. Rev. J. B. Jones, P. E., was with us. His association and labors did us all good. Rev. A. Bowen, of Aberdeen, will be with us in two days' meeting at Prairie next week. Pray for us and our people."

"Omega," Escatawpa, Miss., May 16: "Though Escatawpa is a quiet, unassuming town, it is a progressive one. Its religious interest manifested here perhaps, remarkable, when compared with former status in this parish. Under the pastorate of our pastor, L. W. Wood, the church is alive. The members are working bravely and effectively under his direction to make the religion of Christ to be desired than temporal possessions. Bro. Wood is loved by everyone in and out of the church. By his walk he is known. New members come in constantly. Truly, a great work is going on. The spirit of revival has reigned since he came here. His appointment at Conference. We are moving forward. Prayer meetings, etc., are well attended. Our Sabbath-school will compare well with any in large cities. The superintendent, Wm. Smith, has occupied that position many years, and has been untiring in his work and efforts to keep the school to a high standard. Last Sabbath we celebrated the 'Children's Day.' The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, evergreen and bays. Dinner was served on the ground near by in the school-building to about 175 persons. The singing programme was that furnished for 'Children's Day.' Sermon by Dr. Beal. After dinner singing, and sermon by Dr. Beal. The day is to be long remembered by all. The preacher is not only a Sunday preacher, but an every-day one. We think we have as good a pastor and Sunday-school superintendent as can be found anywhere."

Rev. B. P. Fullilove, Atlanta circuit, North Mississippi Conference, May 24: "The work is in a better condition than any year in its past history. There has been more money paid up to date for the support of the ministry, and also on the collections, than any previous year. The people are growing in spirituality; the revival fires are steadily burning; souls are being blessed monthly. We have received into our church three. We have only two Sabbath-schools; have two prayer meetings. Our presiding elder, Bro. W. T. J. Sullivan, was with us on April 20, and preached in his usual way, to the delight of all. He said that ours was the banner circuit in the district this quarter. Praise the Lord. I wish the ADVOCATE much success. Pray for us."

Rev. W. M. Young, Lula, Miss., May 18: "Our second Quarterly Conference has come and gone. We had a good time; a real refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Bro. Standerfer was fully alive with the power of the Holy Spirit resting on him. Our congregations are better than at any time since we first came to this charge. Our people are growing, spiritually, and we wish here to extend our thanks to the people of Lula for a substantial donation, which came in last week in the way of general family groceries—quite a wagon-load. This is not the first time, by any means, since we have been serving this people that they have thus remembered us. We have received some members by certificate; are having a fine prayer meeting. We will send you some new subscribers to the ADVOCATE soon."

Rev. J. C. Long, Neshoba circuit, May 21: "This is the fourth time the Bishop has read me out for this circuit, and we are doing very well up to date. My second quarterly meeting was held May 14 and 15. Our beloved presiding elder, C. McDonald, was on hand, and preached two grand sermons to the delight of all who heard them. The house was crowded to its utmost capacity, and it was an old-time quarterly meeting. The people got happy and praised God. Bro. McDonald came to town, and preached to a large congregation at night on his way home. Our collections are short to date, but think all will be paid by Conference. This is a good circuit, and anyone will be glad to get it when we get a parsonage; and I think we will have it by Conference. We have appointed a committee to look after it, and report by the next quarterly meeting. I want to have it in good fix for the next man. I hope to have the best year of my ministry with this people. Pray for us."

Rev. T. J. Upton, Lake Charles, La., May 23: "The great and long-expected meeting was opened yesterday morning by an excellent sermon by Bro. Whitehurst from the text, 'God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ,' etc. This sermon was well received by the large audience, and many renewed their allegiance to Christ. In the afternoon the song service, conducted by Bro. Saunders, was both interesting and profitable. At night the immense audience was again thrilled by another of Bro. Whitehurst's telling sermons, and many gave public expression of their determination loyally to serve the blessed Master. The meeting at Paducah, Ky., was booming when Bro. Whitehurst and Saunders left; but Bro. Inge will probably leave to-day and reach us to-morrow night. Let the church everywhere pray for the success of our meeting. Quite an event transpired at the parsonage here on the nineteenth instant, for which its occupants feel very grateful. About thirty ladies and some boys, led by Judge Gorham, marched up with one wagon and two buggy-loads of provisions—all for the occupants of the parsonage. A nice and appropriate speech was delivered by the Judge, which was feebly responded to by the writer, and soon the crowd of donors were gone, and the immense larders of the parsonage were filled with the 'good things' received. These events, Mr. Editor, are highly appreciated by the preacher and family, both because of the intrinsic value of the articles brought and the motive prompting the gifts. Now, reader, if you want to gladden the heart of your preacher and family, go immediately and do for him as the ladies of Lake Charles did for their pastor."

OUR NEW CHURCH AT WAYNESBORO, MISS.

The above is a very fine representation of our new church at Waynesboro, Miss. It was dedicated Sunday, May 22, by Rev. T. L. Mellen. The auditorium is 32x48 feet; the Sunday-school room, 28x28 feet; the classroom, 12x16 feet. The contractor was paid $2,547.00, the furniture cost $300, making a total of $2,847.00. All of this except $45 was raised in Waynesboro, and every cent is clean money, not having been defiled with church entertainments or ice-cream suppers. The pastor, Rev. J. V. Penn, has been indefatigable in his efforts, and he and his good people now worship in as beautiful a church as there is in the Meridian district.

Rev. James Porter, Charleston circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We think our District Conference was a great blessing to this town. Many of our people joined in prayer for greater consecration of themselves to God; and I think that many vows and promises of a better life were made. Dr. Sullivan presided, and with so much of the Spirit of the Master that all were pleased. Sister Ball, the district secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society, held the district meeting here, and the services were splendid. Our ladies organized a missionary society here, and we expect great things of them; and the children also were organized into a juvenile society. Soon after the Conference adjourned the people sent to the parsonage a great many nice things, such as flour, lard, sugar, coffee, rice, oaloo, domestic, etc., all of which we appreciate very much. May God bless them all!"

Rev. T. B. White, New Iberia, La., May 20: "A week of revival meetings at Patterson, with good results and, and anyone will be glad to get it when we get a parsonage; and I think we will have it by Conference. We have appointed a committee to look after it, and report by the next quarterly meeting. I want to have it in good fix for the next man. I hope to have the best year of my ministry with this people. Pray for us."

Rev. W. D. Burroughs, Shawnee, East Holly Springs circuit, North Mississippi Conference, May 13: "This is my first year in regular work for our blessed Master. Having been read out to East Holly Springs circuit, I made my way to it as early as possible. When I arrived I found a kind, generous-hearted people waiting for the new preacher. Have been very busy since I have been on the work. My people are very kind to us, and seem to think well of their pastor. Have two appointments each Sunday. We have two Sunday-schools in regular work, which are doing well. Think we will have some more at work soon. Upon the whole, I think we are doing very well; and I am determined, by the grace of God, to press forward and do all that is in my power for the glory of my Lord and Master. Our second Quarterly Conference was held on the seventh and eighth, with our much-beloved presiding elder, Dr. Boswell, at his post. The financial report was very good, considering the 'hard times.' Dr. Boswell preached us two very fine, practical, as well as theological sermons."

Rev. S. L. Boyd, Tillatoba circuit, North Mississippi Conference, May 20: "Our second Quarterly Conference convened yesterday. Dr. Sullivan was on hand, and, after preaching a fine sermon to an appreciative audience, he presided over the Conference with his usual dignity and precision, making a fine impression on our people. In fact, our presiding elder, like Bro. McCullough's, is all of the 'folens,' and we appreciate him. We have some hot, some cold, and some lukewarm people on this circuit; but, thank God! we are all growing in grace except the lukewarm ones, whom the devil has hoodwinked into believing they are grown. Brethren, pray to God to convict and convert these lukewarm church members before he spews them out of his mouth. Bro. A. J. Chancellor died May 9, 1892. He was a worthy man, and a useful member of our church."

Rev. B. W. Lewis, McBride, Miss., May 19: "We had an interesting and profitable service at Lebanon last Sunday (May 16). It was our Children's Day service. We spent the day at the church. We met at the church about half-past ten, and Bro. Bob McBride (our worthy superintendent) opened Sunday-school by singing, 'All hail the power of Jesus' name!' and I believe the most of us felt the power in our hearts. God was with us at the beginning. The exercises of the day were simply grand. Everything was carried on in perfect order. Old men and boys, young men and maidens, old women and children, seem to enjoy the grand feast that God had prepared for us on that day. Though some of our number could not be there on account of afflictions, yet God was there, and that was the best of all. I have four Sunday-schools on my work. All are in good condition. My work is moving on very nicely. I am very much encouraged. I feel that God is blessing my labors, and, oh, how sweet it is to have God to help us in our work! Pray for me and my work. God bless you!"

Rev. W. T. Woodward, Ponchatoula, La.: "The predicted storm reached our little village last evening about eight P. M. The clouds were rolling up from the southwest all day. As Mrs. Woodward had me stemming strawberries for preserving purposes, I paid no attention to the signs, etc.; yet I saw there was some preparation by way of receiving guests being made all day. As the king of day was sinking behind the western hill, to give place to the bright, bright moon, the clouds began to gather, and the wind to blow from all parts of the town, and, before this whirlwind ceased, there was twenty-three packages blown 'nail' into the parsonage store-room. Nobody but an itinerant preacher knows how to appreciate such surprises as this. The good people of Ponchatoula have befriended me in several ways this year, and they continue with their hospitality. We are expecting to commence our church here next week. We would have commenced two weeks ago; but failing to get our brook caused the delay. Our presiding elder, Bro. Johnston, preaches for us next Wednesday night. He will hold my second Quarterly Conference the next day. After Conference I will give to the readers of the beloved ADVOCATE a postal card report of the work."

Rev. R. B. Downer, Ellisville, Miss.: "The second Quarterly Conference was held at Sandersville, May 7 and 8. The good people had been astir making their house of worship a place to be respected as an exponent of their Christian love. The perforated steeple was repaired, the injured bell restored, new front steps replaced the old ones; all the outer walls of the church-building shown resplendent in their virgin robes of white paint. The neat chancel railing and modernized pulpit and platform testify as to what a few godly women can do when they get their hearts on the altar of consecration. Why, I felt like a Bishop could afford to visit the place and preach his very best. We expected that our presiding elder would have to spread himself for this occasion. It gave us great sorrow to learn that a relapse has so prostrated Bro. Ellis, hindering his presence. The people were in full attendance on Sunday. The sacramental service was most gratifying, on account of the number communing. Our superannuated brother, Rev. D. Morehant, though quite feeble, was present, and assisting. The love-feast at three P. M. was a precious meeting. Next quarterly meeting goes to Laurel."

Rev. A. T. Buck, P. C. Shuqualak, Miss., May 23: "Our beautiful May days are still bringing with them feasts of good things to both pastor and people of Shuqualak. First, the District Conference, presided over by our much-beloved presiding elder, Dr. Wier, was a delight to all. The attendance was small, but the 'feast' was only the greater (to the writer). Our second Quarterly Conference was held at the same time. Pastors' reports on 'Sunday-schools' and 'general state of church' were complimented by presiding elder. Finances are just 'so-so' (which, with our interpretation, means 'short'). Following District Conference, we had a four days' meeting, conducted by Bro. Joe Jones, which did us good. Prejudices removed, church revived, and good resolutions formed. Our prayers shall follow Bro. Jones in his labor and love for souls. Next came commencement, with its exercises, too numerous to mention, but very interesting to those present. And last, but to myself by no means least, came a nice 'crazy quilt,' with compliments of the good sisters of Salem, to the writer. May God bless them, and supply their spiritual needs as they have the temporal needs of his servant!"

Rev. W. S. Shipman, Cleveland and Shelby, Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, May 25: "Have, in obedience to the order of our church, observed Children's Day, third Sunday, at Cleveland, and fourth at Shelby. Bro. T. B. Johnson is our Sunday-school superintendent at Cleveland, and Bro. George B. Shelby fills the same important office at Shelby. These brethren had furnished themselves and schools with programs in ample time; so, when the day came, things were done in order and with credit to all concerned. Our ladies rendered valuable assistance to our superintendents in music, decorations, and in preparing and training the children. Bro. Standerfer was with us at Cleveland, and preached the sermon; and Prof. Wm. D. Sumpter, of Pulaski, Tenn., delivered the address at Shelby. Bro. Standerfer's sermon was an earnest appeal to seek first the kingdom of God, which we hope many of those happy boys and girls will do. We count ourselves fortunate in having the services of Prof. Sumpter at Shelby. His address was eloquent, appropriate, and well received. The collection was an impressive feature of the program. Mr. Editor, no one but those who have been here can appreciate the wonderful advancement of spiritual things in this country (in the Greenville district) in the past ten years. I was here in West Bolivar county in 1882. 'What a change his Word can make!' If our levee holds the struggling Mississippi, this is destined to be a great country in many respects; but our levees have enemies, our citizens are patrolling them day and night, and we have just received a telegram from Gunnsboro, Miss., just twelve miles west of Shelby, that a man was killed on the levee last night in the act of blowing it up. Our levee district is in good fix, and crept well worked and advanced. Our people are hopeful and happy, and we are expecting and praying for a great revival, and the conversion of many sinners. Our prayers, labors and sweat have at last materialized in a comfortable parsonage at Cleveland."

Rev. S. S. Bogan, Oakley circuit, Louisiana Conference, May 16: "We have had our second Quarterly Conference for this year at Oakley Church, Saturday and Sunday, May 14 and 15. The meeting Sunday was a time of more than ordinary interest. Our beloved presiding elder, Bro. White, was with us, and won for himself the hearts of both preacher and people. We enjoyed two of his most excellent sermons, which, indeed, were a treat to us; and though they were clothed in power and eloquence even to the sublime, yet they were graced with the beauty of simplicity that so peculiarly characterizes the true gospel, that the simplest could understand and the wisest learn. As I glanced over the large audience I could see impressed upon every face an eagerness to catch every word. I knew the Holy Spirit was among us, and the powers of Satan were made to tremble. Brethren, this work has a hard name, and I can not deny it; but, thank God! he has not cast us off yet. His loving Spirit is still among us. He still strives with men, and I have reasons to be encouraged, and more fully trust the blessed Lord. I have not built a church or removed a mountain; but I am trying, by the grace and help of my Master, to point and lead sinners to the 'Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.' Brethren, don't forget to offer up a special prayer for pastor and people of Oakley circuit. We want to see the walls of Zion erected here, and this people taken possession of in the name of the Lord."

THE LEVEE STREET MISSION.

The Levee Street Mission, which was opened on Feb. 9, 1892, on the corner of South Madison and Levee streets, Vicksburg, Miss., is now entering the fourth month of successful operation. During the three months just past we have given shelter to 793 poor, unfortunate and homeless men and boys (white only), and of whom we kept a strict register account—name, age, trade, and religious tendencies. Owing to the bad weather and hard times during February and March, many of the men were sheltered for several nights in succession, aggregating a total of 3,995 for three months ending May 10, being an average of near 45 per night thus sheltered from the inclement weather, and brought under Christian influence and moral restraint. We have done and are doing all we deem prudent to discourage idleness and vagrancy, and are by no means ashamed of the grand results. We have witnessed some most marvelous reformations amongst these poor men for whom Christ died. Many realized afresh the truth and power of the gospel message as it was spoken to them every day for about two and a half months by the founder of this mission—religious services being held every morning at eight o'clock, and again at eight o'clock at night. Quite a number gave testimony of a determination to forsake the paths of sin and give their hearts to God. Amongst the first of these was an old sailor sixty-four years of age. We believe he was converted, and left this city a happy Christian man. Another notable character was a Mr. Wilson, aged fifty years. In his public confession he said: "I have often tried to be a Christian, but could not find the way. But I picked up a tract here, entitled, 'What is the Gospel of God?' I got new light, and now the way is plain. Jesus Christ is the Way, the Truth and the Life." This man evidenced his change of heart by the study of "the Word" daily, and by efforts to save other men from sin and vice.

One of the most striking manifestations of the power of God's Word to save, even to the uttermost, was lately witnessed in this mission—Joseph L. Moran, a man about forty years of age. He says: "The accursed drink habit has been my ruin, and I am done with it forever. I haven't the light of God in my soul yet, and I may never get it; but my mind is getting clearer, I am becoming more and more enlightened every day, and, with the help of God, I am going to save every man I can." From the first he has asked that the good Christian people pray for him. The greatest desire of his soul is "a pure heart before God." The New Testament is his companion. Solitude in prayer is a strong point with him. Faithfulness to truth and uprightness is marking his course, and we are praying that he may "become a bright light in America" for God and temperance reform.

FAITH'S VISION.

BY ROBERT GIBBERT WELSH.

These eyes shall see the King in all his beauty,
These lips in reverence kiss his pierced feet,
And then by love attuned to music holy,
Shall swell the song for my Redeemer meet.

These feet that oft have strayed in ways forbidden,
And earthward crushed in blindness many a flower,
Shall stand at last in heavenly high-ways—
Oh! for the gladdening sense of that first hour!

Welcome be to all such consummation,
Welcome be to all such blissful day—
Yes, welcome death! I can not lose the dawn—
That ushers in an endless, perfect day.

"A Thousand Souls Won To-day."

In what follows real names are not given, for the reason that this article does not concern itself about persons, but a method that the writer believes to be a "delusion and a snare." But fancy has nothing to do with the statements; only facts enter into them.

In a large Western city, during the month of April just passed, thirty-three pastors of evangelical churches concentrated their efforts in "preparing the way" for the coming of the Rev. John Smith, "evangelist." I advised our pastors to co-operate with the others. It was necessary. That it was necessary is more clear to me now than before the meeting.

Large collections were made to meet "expenses." Mr. Smith making no stipulation as to personal remuneration. That was left to voluntary contribution. Whether this is more remunerative than making a square trade I do not know, having no experience. He insisted that the funds be absolutely secured beforehand, "that there might be no gatherings when he came." The money was raised; comparatively a few people, who hear all the burdens, paying it. Everything was well done that could pique curiosity, excite interest and arouse enthusiasm. From time to time judicious clippings appeared in the papers concerning Mr. Smith's triumphs in other cities. Telegrams helped much. We were told that in a rushing city, north of us, "six hundred stores were closed one week day" for the sake of the meeting. The pastors laid themselves out, using all their influence, publicly and privately, to stir up the people. Special preparatory services were held in the different churches. The Sunday-schools were aroused, teachers and pupils. Church people, godly men and elect ladies not a few, exhausted their resources to get themselves and the people ready for the coming of Mr. Smith.

My belief is: If in each church they had worked to help their own pastor as they worked to help Mr. Smith, there would have been in each church a genuine revival of religion. Further: No church is wise to make its pastor a bell-ringer, horn-blower, bill-poster or stump-holder for another man. Moreover: One of the most faithful of the thirty-three pastors, talking with me to-day, wondered how they "were to pull through the long, summer months" when the paroxysm was over. God help them!

All the street-car companies, electric, cable, horse and mule lines were enlisted to the advertising point. On the front and rear of every car in big letters were these words: "This car to the Smith Meetings." A circus was never better advertised. And the whole city knew that Evangelist Smith was coming. Nothing was omitted, except firing a salute when his train rolled in, and having the band play, "See the conquering hero come."

One service attended—duty with the sick forbade my attending oftener. More than four thousand were present—"men only." There are said to be thirty-five hundred chairs in the auditorium. None were vacant. More than five hundred stood. Announced for days as "for men only," there was not a word in the sermon that would have been out of place "for young girls only." But the bald drew the men. They say two thousand failed to get beyond the door.

Mr. Smith is a youngish-looking preacher of a Calvinistic denomination; clean-shaven and good-looking. He has a winning countenance. I was drawn to him. Upon acquaintance I am sure I would love him. He has the marks of a gentleman. He is earnest in spirit and in life, believes himself thoroughly religious. His delivery is agreeable, though monotonous. His thought was commonplace as to matter and form, as with the majority of us. His language was pure idiomatic English, without a flavor of slang. There was not a harsh word or phrase in the sermon, nor a flash of humor, and with only a suggestion of pathos now and then. No honest-hearted man could listen to him or see him without full faith in his downright sincerity. The great crowd listened with not only the decorum of the best-bred Sunday audience, but with what seemed to be eager interest.

The text was, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." After a few simple and appropriate introductory words, he told us of the different knockings at the slumbering heart: 1. Through conscience. 2. Memory. 3. The Word of God. 4. Preaching. 5. The lives of Christians. 6. Tribulation. 7. The direct work of the Spirit. He dwelt briefly on each point with anecdotes of the ordinary type, mostly "remisciential," "bringing forth things new and old."

For illustration and appeal it was a plain, earnest, sincere, every-day revival talk from beginning to end. The preacher had mastery of his audience from the crowded platform to the rear line of standing men in the second gallery just under the high ceiling. The singing was good—not extra good. What the secret of Mr. Smith's hold on the great crowd was this article does not inquire, but concerning a very different and vastly more important matter. When the sermon was ended, he led in a short, simple, very earnest prayer. The prayer was followed by a proposition of a very mild sort, as nearly as I can recall them, in these words: "I ask all who will promise to cultivate any desire they may have to be religious, to stand up an instant." A considerable number arose. Then cards were rapidly distributed by a large number of men with big, red badges on their coats. In a few minutes the cards were gathered—one is before me. It has this printed: "I desire henceforth to lead a Christian life." Under this the signature, residence and name of pastor preferred for advice. These cards were distributed in the Sunday-school in the morning.

The Monday morning papers gave a very full account of the meeting, as they have done from day to day. In this city the press charges for preaching announcements. In this meeting they had inducements; $500, as one of the committee told me, being divided between the two leading dailies for printing, etc. One of them quoted the evangelist as saying at the end of the Sunday service "for men only": "Over a thousand souls have been won for Christ in this city to-day, and the meeting to night is a fitting close to a noble day."

The card before me is one of a dozen or more collected in one of our Sunday-schools. It bears the name of a little girl converted some months before and received into the church in due form by the pastor. He tells me that most of the cards handed him were signed by recent converts. Another one of our pastors had twenty cards handed him. Just ten of them bear the names of converts in his meeting in January. Another pastor had a similar experience. Another, upon hunting up one of the card-signers, found a man who wanted to argue with him about "Christian Science." I believe what these four tell me to be fairly representative of the experience of the thirty-odd pastors helping in Mr. Smith's meeting. That the evangelist believed that "over one thousand souls had been won for Christ" that Sunday I am sure. He did not say they were converted (very little has been said about conversion or the new birth, a constant hearer tells me); he said, "Won for Christ." No doubt he meant converted or somehow "saved." So the people understood; so the papers and telegrams sent the news abroad. This evangelist, Mr. Smith, will, I believe, have a career that will take him into every chief city of our country. It is important, therefore, to consider what it all comes to. In this article little more is proposed than to raise some questions that pastors, who are the mainstay of God's church, should, it seems to me, consider with some seriousness.

It is my belief that only God knows the heart-condition of a thousand souls at the end of a day's meeting in any city. We have, nowadays, altogether too much human judging of the state of men's souls. I do not forget the "three thousand" in one day in Jerusalem; but that is an inspired record. Besides we have had no Pentecost. The thirty-three pastors together trying to read the significance of "standing" or "lifting the hand" or "signatures," can not know the state of a thousand people doing these things. And no evangelist is "expert" enough in "discerning spirits," especially a thousand at once, to know more than the thirty-three pastors who could at most recognize some faces and some signatures. With due respect for the young man and confidence in his sincerity, I am shocked at his statements. They terrify me; they are appalling.

Only those who have parted company with fair-mindedness, and are unwilling that any should think who do not agree with them, will say that this article attacks Mr. Smith, Mr. Blank, or any person in his line. It does attack a way of doing that I believe to be "evil and only evil, and that continually." I do protest against such statements, unjustified by facts and incapable of proof, to which, through reports and telegrams, the widest possible publicity is given. I believe that such statements do measureless harm. No intensity of zeal or sincerity of belief can redeem them. It is all the more dangerous that such statements are sincere. In such a case sincerity proves the depth of delusion. And such delusions are contagious as scarlet fever.

I have considered the mental habits and processes that lead men in Mr. Smith's line of things to make such statements; but it is not needful to give my analysis now.

Let us consider two illustrative cases: In this same city within the past eight years two other such meetings were held by noted evangelists—each meeting costing somewhat over five thousand dollars. At the close of one of these meetings the evangelist published in a New York paper that "six hundred and sixty souls were saved" in his meeting. There was an effort at precise statement in this announcement; but one of the oldest pastors in the city tells me that "not more than seventy-five accessions to the different churches" engaged in the meeting could be counted when it was over.

Of the other meeting it was set forth in speech and in print, as I am told, that "twelve hundred were saved." The pastor mentioned above has been a long time in this city and is a man thoroughly informed, and he says: "Less than one hundred were added to the churches as the result of that meeting." If one should answer that "the others were church members not before converted," he assumes a right of judgment that belongs only to God. Besides, that is not what was meant to be understood when the announcements were made. I have heard it said in such a case: "The pastors did not take care of the new converts and they fell away." This explanation is a libel on the pastors; and if it were true, shows the work to be so superficial that the less we have of it the better.

It is time to consider these matters. There are, perhaps, none of greater importance to the church. What must be the effect upon the "thousand" affirmed to have been "saved" that Sunday, if they themselves believed what the evangelist said of them? Undoubtedly a great number of the converted or guessed-at thousand "standing," "lifting the hand," "signing cards," were Sunday-school children and young people already in the church and professors of religion. Will they conclude that before that day they were only deluded—that their pastors who received them in the church were also deluded, or insincere? Will those not professors of religion before this Sunday of evangelistic wonder-working, who "promised to cultivate any desire they might have to be religious," or who signed a card that they "henceforth desire to lead a Christian life," will they take these mild avowals and supposed "expert judgment" as proof of their conversion? Will sinners who neither signed, nor rose, nor lifted their hand, accept "official announcement" that those who did these things were converted? Then what sort of notion will they have of conversion? Probably this notion. If that be all, it is not worth bothering about; and they would be in the right about it. What will our church members accepting such statements (and it is easy for them to accept without questioning what a man says in Mr. Smith's relation to such a meeting) come to believe conversion to be? And the pastors looking up to him for light and truth? Already a leading Methodist pastor in this city (not one of ours, thank God!) since this meeting began, said: "The old Methodist ideas about conversion were too rigid."

What doctrine of regeneration will this pastor preach after this? And what doctrine of the new birth will the herd of imitators of the noted evangelist preach? Even imposters catch on to what is popular and make getting into the kingdom an easy thing. A soap turned up last Fall at Laredo, Texas, with forged recommendations for admission on trial to the "Border Mexican Conference." The fraud was detected promptly when the paper was examined. Yet he had been preaching in Laredo ohnrohes for two Sundays preceding the Conference, and on one occasion publicly ridiculed the old doctrine of conversion. He thought he was in line, and overdid the thing.

In such preaching and in such methods where is repentance, confession, humiliation under divine "conviction of sin as well as for sin"—to use a phrase of the late Dr. Lovick Pierce, of blessed memory—and where is regeneration by the Holy Ghost? What sort of conception of sin will such methods lead to? What mortal here—eating out like a cancer the very heart of our Methodism—will issue from such inoculations as these?

Already a few pastors, under vows some of them, repudiate the language of our Lord and of his apostles, and instead of depravity talk of "a certain trend toward evil!" No wonder sinners are politely asked to "lift the hand" and counted "saved." In this Smith meeting, some nights after the Sunday, the proposition was varied, as the morning paper reported, thus: "That any who were willing to be Christians, if they could have the way pointed out, would rise." The editor commented approvingly upon the "absence of excitement!" Once upon a time, as he confessed to me in my old house in Oxford, Ga., an old-time preacher, having exhausted his list of propositions, moved an old soldier with a bullet in his knee with this invincible test: "Let any who respect the memory of George Washington come to the altar." The old fellow grunting out, with some expletives, "I can't stand that," limped down the aisle. His test was as good as many others and not so apt to deceive people about the state of their souls.

Many ohnrohes have concluded, if they only could have an expert evangelist instead of their faithful, praying, hard-working pastor, they could have revivals, too. So believing and talking, they think meanly of their pastor; endure him, and break his spirit. As most churches are poor and can't afford big guns, the village churches in sheer desperation hire any talked-of "rattler" they can find, although he is only a three-dollar, one-barrel shotgun, about which the only sure things are its "boaters," and on occasions "busts." How many pastors, sorely beset and tempted of the devil, lose all faith in their own ability, even with the help of God, to conduct revival meetings at all. May God save us from imitating these methods!

Too much depends on the counting. Even an expert stranger can't do it. If such meetings are to be held all over the country, we want reliable "returning boards" at each precinct; else we shall presently announce more converts than the census shows population.

One other thing I must say: One of the big dailies writing of the meeting, and theorizing about the secret of the evangelist's hold on the crowd, put it down thus: "That man is in deep earnest."

Indeed! What could he have done but for the thirty-three pastors and their faithful helpers, who made it possible for him to get that crowd, shutting their own churches to help him? Dead in earnest! If there are in this world earnest men, they are the patient, long-suffering, always-working pastors, without whom the church would die; men who do not have the stimulus of great crowds, newspaper fame, or big receipts. To discount these men is a crime.

ARTICUS G. HARGOOD.

P. S.—The Wednesday after the big Sunday special services were held, and great exertions made. Next morning one of the dailies referred to gave us an editorial announcement that the "Wednesday conversions were 1,600." Whether he resented this conclusion by "internal suggestion" or "the bias of jurisprudence" does not appear. No matter; it was to him like guessing the number of beans in a bottle. His editorial guess is on a par with the official announcement of Sunday night; only the editor went a bow-shot beyond the evangelist, which may be set down to newspaper enterprise.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—June 5, 1892.

BY REV. W. H. LAPELLE.

The Fiery Furnace.

Daniel iii, 13-25.

TIME.—About B. C. 585.

PLACE.—Babylon.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee."—Isa. xlii, 1.

We can not tell with exactness the date of the remarkable events recorded in to-day's lesson; but we are reasonably sure that it was not earlier than B. C. 590, nor later than B. C. 580. Some time during that decade Nebuchadnezzar finished the invasion of Syria, and, as was the custom of the time, celebrated his triumphs by processions and feasts, concluding with a great religious festival, in the course of which divine honors were to be paid to himself. The spoils of battle would furnish the material for an image overlaid with gold. The Babylonians, and, indeed, all nations then except the Jews—worshipped a multitude of gods, and divine honors were often paid to great conquerors. The worship of some special god, in connection with the king, as the source of his power, was customary on such occasions.

The image referred to in our lesson was probably of wood, overlaid with gold. The height seems too great for the breadth, unless we understand by "breadth" the thickness from breast to back, which would give about the proportion of a man.

The fact that the king had already declared Jehovah to be "a God of gods and a Lord of lords" (see chap. ii, 47) need not cause us to wonder that he should worship other gods and seek divine honors for himself. In those days of ignorance and superstition each nation was supposed to have its own peculiar deity, who managed its affairs, and transfer of allegiance from false to god was no unusual thing. But god to god was no unusual thing. To him there was but one God, Jehovah, omnipotent, eternal. To him only could he bow down in worship. The Jews were the only monotheists of that age; the gods of the heathen were haughty.

So Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego refused to bow down to the idol. Daniel may have been, as prime minister, in some distant part of the kingdom; or, because of his power and wisdom, the courtiers may have feared to accuse him at the first. Let us bear in mind that the refusal of the three was made with knowledge of the penalty of death by burning; that it was a deliberate refusal; that to be true was better than to live, if that were the issue, in their estimate. Caro must be taken not to allow the pupil to suppose that they would have yielded had they known that they would be slain. They risked all for rights' sake.

Vers. 13-15. Their refusal was at once a reflection on his greatness and a contempt of his authority. No oriental monarch would stand that. Nebuchadnezzar was filled with rage and fury, stirred to greater depths by the skill of his flattering courtiers. But these Jews were of great use to him; he would give them another chance. Perhaps they did not understand that they were not exempt from the requirement; perhaps their refusal was not of deliberate purpose. A second opportunity was offered.

Vers. 16-18. The reply of the three—calm, decided, clear-cut—is one of the noblest utterances ever recorded. To their minds, true to God, there is no open question. Why should time be consumed in another trial? The question is settled. They will not debate the matter. God will care for them. He is able. They can but perish, at most. To burn is better than to be false to God. Let the king do as he will; as for them, they will do right.

Vers. 19, 20. Rage, fury, malice—all are at the front now in Nebuchadnezzar's heart. Let the furnace be heated to its utmost, and cast in these men who dare to oppose his will. He will show them who is master in Babylon.

Vers. 21-23. Immediately he picked men of his army seized the three, bound them tightly in Babylonian garments wrapped about their limbs, and cast them into the roaring furnace. So great was the heat that the executioners could not stand the near approach necessary to carry out the king's command, and perished. Down into the midst of the fierce flame—hot enough to reduce them to cinders in a moment—fell the three true men, bound hand and foot; the king, from a safe distance, gazing over their supposed destruction.

Vers. 24, 25. One thing the wrathful king left out of his calculations: the power of Jehovah and his love for his own. There, from the floor of the furnace, seemingly unconscious of its white heat, with their hands all burst asunder, rose the faithful three, and with quiet ease walked about in the flame as though enjoying the cool breeze of evening in the hanging gardens of Babylon. And with them, with face and form not of earth, walks the angel of God, who has brought with him the atmosphere of heaven, enveloping them in its delicious balm, so that "no smell of fire is on their garments." Astonished beyond measure, and convinced that "Jehovah is the Lord," the king decreed death to the enemies of God, and promoted the three to still higher places of honor in his kingdom.

Note—

1. Circumstances should never be allowed to affect devotion to God.
2. No question is open that God has once noticed.
3. Death is not to be dreaded, even death in its most awful form, so much as sin.
4. God is able to deliver from all possible combinations of evil.
5. God tests every professed believer, and will finally bring the faithful through in safety.

Letter from Arabia.

MR. EDITOR: Having safely arrived here after a long and interesting journey, and remembering your request that I write you from here, I take great pleasure in this, my first opportunity of doing so.

I hardly know what to write. To tell you about the trip would take pages, and would, no doubt, be uninteresting; and I have been here so short a time that I can not write about the mission except in a very general way. There are at present three of us in this field—Messrs. Canline and Zwemer, and myself. Mr. Canline has been in this part of the world a little more than two years, and Mr. Zwemer has been here about eighteen months. I arrived here about ten days ago; so you see we're quite young yet. Messrs. Canline and Zwemer have traveled over most of the coast of Arabia selling Bibles and doing general mission; also looking for a suitable location as permanent headquarters in this country.

After having seen Bussrah, they decided to locate here. This city is situated about sixty miles up the Shatt el Arab river, and has a population of about 40,000, chiefly Arabs and Persians. There are about 100 Turks here, and 18 Britons and Germans. The Turks govern the city. The banks of the river are very fertile, having date palms in abundance, extending from half to three miles beyond, and then comes the desert, which extends unknown distances in either direction. Among the palms are orange, lime, fig, pomegranate, etc.; trees; also grapes. Just now the weather is perfectly delightful; and, walking among these fruit trees, one can readily imagine why this part of the world is said to have been the Garden of Eden.

Three days after arrival I began the study of Arabic, having been a tutor an educated Arab, who speaks English fairly. I opened the dispensary a week after arrival, and averaged five patients daily for the four days that it has been open. There was a dispensary here a short while ago; but the Turkish authorities had it closed. There are several Turkish doctors here, and they strongly object to any other nationality practicing in their midst. The Turks rule, so am in daily expectation of having the dispensary closed; also of being forbidden to practice medicine here. I get a Turkish diploma would mean a knowledge of either the French or Turkish language, neither of which I conversant with—obstacles which present can not be overcome.

The foregoing facts prove the absolute necessity of having a suitable place upon which can be built a suitable place for a dispensary. Such a place would cost about $1,800 here. Two miles down the river is a village named Mohamrah, and it is in Persian territory. Now, if we had a sailing boat upon which to erect a dispensary, and the Turkish authorities closed the dispensary here, we could drop down the river to this village in Persian territory. The Arabs and Persians hate the Turks; and, although they hate a Christian, particularly he is a missionary, they have great respect for a Christian doctor. They would willingly come twenty miles for medical aid. But the name of our mission is "Arabian," and we are going to stay in Arabia until something serious occurs to prevent. The "Arabian" is a "waning light" in this part of the world, and sole object of the officials here was to be to extort money from the Arabs and Persians. Nearly all the here hold some official position, they have two small man-of-war vessels constantly in the river in front of the city. The Arabs outnumber the Persians to one, but have no power—naturally, no leaders; but speaking too much of the political nation.

To-night I am writing a letter more than ten thousand miles from home and friends, among a people whose religion is their law, and whose teachings, even commands, threaten the penalty of death, to not embrace other. Their fast month (Ramadan) began a few days ago, and they even more fanatical now than at other times; and I put the questions to myself: Why am I here? Why leave the comforts of home, the pleasures of civilization, the ambition of my life, to come among a people illiterate, fierce and fanatical people, labor and strive to learn their language and customs, treating diseases of most loathsome and contagious kind in constant danger of death at the hands of these people? I need not repeat the questions to myself, before the mere thinking of the questions is done, the answer comes as thought, silently, yet distinctly, sunbeam, and the answer is: For Christ's sake. Oh, what could be more comprehensive a Christian, more incomprehensible an infidel? For Christ's sake, heart swells with pride when I hear those three words, to feel that I am in the front ranks in the battle that began. I could ask no better than in the midst of the enemy, sincerely thank God for the position which he has placed me in this land. The numbers of the enemy are great, but with him on my side, their numbers will only add to their confusion and the end.

I am not accustomed to ask for assistance in fighting my own battle, but in this battle of Christ's I am. Some wealthy Christian among your acquaintances that might interest you or herself in the conversion of the Mohammedans, may I ask you to write great and urgent need of him, and they are plainly before him, and they are in Christ's name, the amount is $1,800? It is a great and important opportunity for some one to lay account in heaven that can be of great interest.

The undersigned offers all, every to the cause. Who will offer a tion? Yours in Christ,
CLARENCE E. RIGGS, M. D.,

WHERE IS THE GOLD?

No gold! no gold! There are souls that are wandering all around who have never heard the gospel sound; who shrink from the wealthy few; who shrink from the walls of the city we want to call to "thematic service" or "mission hall." There are voices ready for grave, sweet psalms, in the desert sands, or under the palms, there are hearts awaiting to open wide; but our hands are heavy, our feet unshod, for we have not the gold to go forth for God.

Where is the gold, the fair, bright gold, which is given the church for her Lord to hold? Is it the flash of the diamonds' rays, or is it the place in a saint's array? Is it gleaming on mirrored walls, where the ransomed sit in their pearly halls, or is it the shine in robes that change their costly beauties so sad and strange, "Aloft" the lovers of God's meek Word, who say that they strive to be like their Lord, who are glowing in costly wine, who daily banquet in His sign, and whose bread is washed on trifled store, whose self is lost in a moment more, who for the gold, God's gift of gold, which he gives to his saints for their Lord to hold!

Who over the gold, God's gift of gold, who is it given for him to hold? Is it the gold in the seed-time hour, or is it the glory cometh with harvest hour.

Our Grand Old Hero's Ascending Message.

When the thrillingly sad tidings of the death of Dr. J. W. Lambuth reached us by cablegram, our sorrow was tempered, our hearts were touched by the characteristic message to the home church: "I die at my post, and more men." More bravely and nobly than any of us can realize did this faithful soldier of the cross follow his Divine Leader and battle for the truth.

More than thirty-seven years ago, at Jackson, Miss., he and his devoted young wife dedicated themselves to the work of reaching "the regions beyond with the message of light and life." There was much to beckon them back to their beloved native land; but such loyal souls the voice of their inner conscience, saying, "Go," and, "Lo, I am with you," was far more imperative than any earthly motive. They went, they stayed, they conquered. For, in the grandest sense, they overcame who while their own spirits—who sacrificed, ambition, earthly good and glory for the sake of "filling up that which beheld of the sufferings of Christ for the body's sake, which is the church."

This J. W. Lambuth and his helpmeet have done more distinctly than any people that we have known in this century. Due, as we believe, under the blessing of God, to their fidelity and unremitting industry, their success has been remarkable. Think of it!—our first substantial success in China, the projection of our great mission in Japan—almost superhuman labors in the—with a legacy of living, active, aggressive agents at the same self-sacrificing toll, their "heritage from the Lord," children of their youth—all these have been generously given—nothing held back. Living and laboring along the outposts of his Master's kingdom during an ordinary lifetime, he kept signaling back to us to send reinforcements enough to storm the enemy's camp or to sap and mine his great works. Our failure to do this has been, doubtless, brought him now with "his back to the field and his face to the foe." "At his post" he breathed his heroic spirit back to God, freighted with a message to us: "Send more men." Oh, the heart-rending lying back of these words to be revealed in the last great day! They are fraught with deepest pathos. Struggling during these years, for fourteen hours each day, to bring the real light of life to the Sunrise Kingdom; realizing, as he did, that unless the gospel reach and rescue these quick and active people in their (now) transition state (and that speedily) thousands of them, and perhaps the dominant portion of them, would turn from their idols only to idolatrous infidelity—a darkness more oppressive than the paganism from which they are emerging—who had a better right than he, living or dying, to call across the broad waters to us here in a land well garrisoned and provisioned: "Send more men?" God's armies and angels help us to heed the call, to redeem the time, to raise more means to "send more men."

How shall they hear without a teacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent? It is a time for pleading prayer, for self-examination and for self-denial.

West Indies.

A name given by Columbus, and leading to what a world of tragedy, depravity, and of shame! From the second visit of Columbus until the present century these islands have been the scene of sorrow and oppression. Their waters have been dyed with human blood. Piracy was rife, and the commerce of Europe suffered from the commanding buccaneers who were related on the wrongs they suffered, and related on the innocent as well as the guilty. The slave-trade had its origin here, and the hardly less cruel importation of coolies has left its mark. For years these islands were England's penal colonies. Into this moral sewer was swept the refuse of Europe. Is it strange, then, that these islands should have been sunk in the lowest depths of sin and degradation?

The total area of the West Indies is not far from 100,000 square miles, and the inhabitants number between 5,000,000 and 6,000,000. Various European nations have parcelled out the islands among themselves. Only Hayti is independent, with its 29,000 square miles and 1,160,000 inhabitants. Spain possesses Cuba and Porto Rico, with an area of 60,000 square miles and a population of 2,276,000; Great Britain claims ownership in Jamaica, the Bahamas, Barbados, etc., with 12,000 square miles and 1,213,000 inhabitants; France is master of Guadeloupe, Martinique, etc., with 1,100 square miles and 352,000 inhabitants; the Netherlands of four islands, with 434 square miles and 46,000 inhabitants, and Denmark of St. Thomas, Santa Cruz, etc., with 223 square miles and 34,000 inhabitants.

The original Indian inhabitants have entirely disappeared. For years they were enslaved and shipped over seas by their Spanish masters, and then, against the protest of the world, annihilated. In Hayti alone 2,000,000 aborigines were found, but in thirty years scarcely one was left alive. Then negro slaves began to be imported in their place, the Portuguese settling the nefarious example, and then later every nation possessing colonies in these islands shared in the iniquity to the full. It is estimated that to Jamaica alone between 1700 and 1786 not less than 600,000 African boundmen were brought. The negroes now far outnumber the whites. Hindoos and Chinese (coolies) also constitute no inconsiderable part of the population.

The Moravians were the first to carry the gospel of life and hope to this most degraded and wretched people. And to the West Indies went, in 1733, the first heralds of the cross ever dispatched from Herrnhut. They set forth expecting and willing to be themselves sold into slavery as the price of their mission. In their churches are now found 16,547 communicants, and the number of adherents is almost 40,000. Among other denominations engaged in missionary work are the English Baptists, with about 40,000 church members, the Wesleyan Methodists, the United Presbyterians of Scotland, and the Methodists and Episcopalians of this country. In all there are engaged about 120 ordained missionaries, with nearly 500 ordained natives, while the membership of the churches is not far from 75,000.—Review.

"They Die Well."

That is what John Wesley said of the Methodists of his day. From the subjoined letter from Rev. E. A. Tilly, our missionary in Brazil, it will be seen that our native preachers in that land also "die well."

A few weeks ago I was my sad duty to announce to you the death of the wife of our native preacher here in Rio. My duty is doubly sad in that I have to announce to you the death of Mr. Ludgero himself, and also his little child. The wife first, then little Imogene, and now our brother. All the family in two weeks!

Mr. Ludgero was ill two weeks. The patience with which he suffered, the resignation of spirit to the Lord's will—these were stronger arguments than he had ever made in the pulpit for the Master's cause. He was a good student and a common-sense preacher. At times some of us thought him stubborn when he differed from us in opinion. The stubbornness may have been on our side. He thought for himself. He had an individuality; he loved his country ardently, yet was not too blind to see her faults, nor too cowardly to point them out to his fellow-citizens. He was full of hope for the future of Brazil and the success of the gospel in the land of the Southern Cross. The Conference has suffered loss, great loss, in his death. However, his death was a triumph for the truth of Jesus, and will be sanctified to the growth of our church in this city. Rio should be dear to the heart of every Southern Methodist. Here her servants have been tempted and tried; here they have toiled; here they have suffered; and the very earth has been made sacred to us in that it holds the "dream-land" of those who gave up their lives that the glorious truths of Christ's kingdom might be established in the hearts of this people. Here it was that Mrs. Ransom "fell on sleep." Here it was that the Master said to the genial, sweet-spirited Mattison, "Come up higher." Here it was that the portals of a divine life were opened to the gentle girl-mother, Da. Hamina, and the sweet little babe Imogene. Here the Miranda brothers, "the first-fruits" of the ministry of our church in Brazil, shook off the tabernacle of this death, entering into "the building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." I love Rio.

I believe that the gloom and sorrow of the past are but the harbingers of a glorious dawn. At least my labor of love shall be in this faith and hope.—Reporter.

Public School System of Japan.

Among the many wonderful forward movements which have been made by the progressive party in Japan, there is none that promises more far-reaching results than the establishment of this graded system of public schools. This graded system of public schools is a model of the public school system of this country, modified to suit the peculiar conditions of Japan. From an outline of the Church at Home and Abroad, by Rev. Dr. G. W. Knox, of Tokyo, we gather the following facts: First, the little tots begin to study, or rather to work, for the four years spent in these schools are devoted wholly to the Chinese characters. There are, twenty-eight thousand of these schools, with two million six hundred thousand pupils.

Next come the higher elementary, fourteen hundred in number, with one hundred and forty thousand pupils. In these the study of Chinese continues, as, indeed, it does through all the grades, and the pupils take up also morals, arithmetic, geography, history and science. Gymnastics, singing and sewing are also taught. Thence the student passes to the ordinary middle school, which is exclusively for boys, and which corresponds to the conscripts of study with good academies in this country. Higher middle schools, recently introduced, give a still more advanced course, and in them the student pursues such a course as will prepare him for the prosecution of his studies in the Imperial University. In this latter is found a faculty of one hundred and thirty-four Japanese and sixteen foreigners, offering instruction in five colleges—law, medicine, engineering, literature and science. In these five colleges are twenty-nine courses of instruction, each of which extends through three years, except that in medicine, which requires one year more.

Small tuition fees are charged, but the main expense is borne by the government, which appropriates annually $3,400,000 (United States gold) for this purpose.

Numerous private schools, under the patronage of individual Japanese, or of missionary bodies, supplement the work of the government schools, and provide opportunities, not provided by these, for the higher education of girls.—Foreign Mission Journal.

"Whom Shall We Send? and Who Will Go for Us?"

Yes, "for us?" That is the word. Since the removal, or "transfer," to heaven of our dear Dr. J. W. Lambuth we of Mississippi and Louisiana have no direct living representative in the foreign field under the auspices of the Parent Board. Our sisters are doing better. But where are the men from our heaven-blessed commonwealths to till the soil and gather the harvest in God's wide, fallow field? Among the young and strong, the cultured and qualified, the well-mated sons of the gospel among us, are there not some who in this crisis of our missionary work abroad will answer quickly and gladly, saying, "Here am I; send me—send me?"

We know it is a solemn question—one which should be answered "reverently, discreetly and in the fear of God." It ought to be a question of life-conservation. If all our preachers and people will bow low enough and look high enough, the Lord of the harvest will soon point out the man or men. But let us be sure to look around and within.

In the science of medicine, as in chemistry and physics, a result once attained is attained forever, and the record, if accurate, will be found equally applicable to all future manifestations of the same result or event.

Certain results have been obtained in hundreds of cases from the use of Mansfield's Magic Arnica Liniment, and what it has done over and over again in such a variety of cases with so many individuals it will do again. It relieves pain no matter in what part of the body it exteriorly manifested, and it stops suffering as quickly in an animal as in man. Such nervous affections as neuralgia and sciatica, and ordinary headache, it not only relieves, but cures, and some of the worst cases of rheumatism have yielded to its treatment, resulting in complete recovery. If one can only have one medicinal preparation in the house, Mansfield's Magic Arnica Liniment should be that one. Mansfield Drug Company, Proprietors, Memphis, Tenn.

Contentment abides with truth. And you will generally suffer for wanting to appear other than you are; whether it be richer, or greater, or more learned. The mask soon becomes an instrument of torture.

When the hair begins to fall out or turn gray, the scalp needs doctoring, and we know of no better specific than Hall's Vegetable Sclerian Hair Renewer.

Mercy is like the rainbow which God set in the heavens as a remembrance to man. We must look for it after night; it shines not in the other world. If we refuse mercy here, we must have justice in eternity.—Jeremy Taylor.

Boys and girls from Maine remember Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. Now don't deny it.

Humanity seems to be very unequally divided between those who can't stand prosperity and those who can't stand adversity.—Binghamton Leader.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

It is said that anybody can lead the hosts of God to victory provided they unite. This is said in depreciation of the work of evangelists. It may be true; but if so, why don't anybody unite them? The man that will unite all Christians and keep them united will take the world. The evangelist knows this; hence his first work—uniting the churches—opens the door to victory.

Did you know that if all the churches would pay their missionary assessment in full, there would be no debt? Well, it is a fact. The assessment on the churches amounts to $352,750, while the appropriations amount to $259,966. So if all the churches will pay up their assessments, there will be $92,784 to go on the debt! The thing to do is simply to raise the assessments and the debt is extinguished!

The length of the sermon depends! The absence of personal interest in the hearer will make any sermon long. Apathy in the pew will lengthen a sermon almost interminably. If, however, the momentous questions and the grave issues involved are considered, the question might be, "Why are sermons so short?" The hearer who is "hearing for life" is not bothered by the length of the sermon, but by its shortness.

Richard Irby, secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, writes us, May 23:

Our college completes sixty years of work this year. Of the living Methodist colleges in America, it is the oldest by its charter, and the oldest in active work of all but one. Its history has been one of great tribulation in peace and war, but, poor as it has been, it "has made many rich." It is now providing for a larger number, male and female, with its Central College here and adjuncts at Bedford City, Front Royal and Lynchburg.

Louisiana Avenue Meeting.

A delightful meeting was closed last Wednesday night at Louisiana Avenue Church. One dozen sermons were preached by the city pastors, large congregations were in attendance and good results were had. There were a number of professions and some additions and the church was greatly revived. On last Sunday the Louisiana Avenue Church started their mission school in the neighborhood of Constantinople, and Jersey streets. Bro. Harry W. Rickey is the superintendent, and, with his corps of devoted teachers and an open field before him, he confidently expects rich results. The Epworth League of Louisiana Avenue Church has assumed all the expense of the mission school. The building of the new church is making steady progress. All things are encouraging at Louisiana Avenue Church.

Editorial Correspondence.

The Meridian District Conference convened at Waynesboro, Miss., May 21-23. En route we stopped a few hours at Enterprise with Bro. Chambers, and spent the night at Shubuta with Bro. Drake, reaching Waynesboro, Friday, May 20, at four P. M. Our home was with Bro. Smith. We were much impressed with the beautiful towns along the line of the Mobile and Ohio railroad. They were small, ranging from 250 to 750 inhabitants each, but were built in magnificent groves of water oak, and when land was not a consideration. At Waynesboro we were in the midst of the turpentine region, and were piloted around by those familiar with the workings of this industry; so had the process fully and accurately explained. The pine tree is tapped late in the Fall or early in the Winter. The gathering begins about the first of May. The crude turpentine—the uninitiated, of whom the writer was one, call it rosin—is dumped into the still, leaves, chips, dirt, all together, to boil. The turpentine and what water may be in the "crude" rises in a steam through pipes which pass through an immense tank of cold water, and out into a reservoir, where the water sinks to the bottom while the turpentine rises to the top and flows into the barrels in which it is shipped. The rosin is also drawn off, strained, barrelled and shipped. An industrious man can make from $600 to $1,000 per season gathering the "crude."

The District Conference was opened Saturday, at nine A. M., by the presiding elder, Rev. T. L. Mellen. Bro. L. C. Brown, of Meridian, was elected secretary. It took but a short time for the Conference to become organized and get down to hard work. At eleven A. M. Dr. Andrews preached on the subject of foreign missions, and for three-quarters of an hour not only forcibly developed his text, but gave the audience some facts connected with our missionary work calculated to put all to thinking. At four P. M. Bros. Drake and Chambers very ably presented the domestic feature of our missionary work. The blank form of reports was used, so that by the close of the evening session all the charges had been heard from, and the reports were in the hands of the several committees. This manner of reporting is recommended for four reasons:

First. It does away with the long, tedious, unsatisfactory reports usually heard in District Conferences. Second. The facts connected with each charge are brought out in a tangible, intelligent manner. Third. The committees are enabled to present in their reports the real state of affairs in the district. Fourth. It gives all needed time to religious services and discussions on important subjects.

We confess to knowing more about the real state of affairs in the Meridian district than of any district in which we have yet been.

Three missionary points were spoken of as lying within the bounds of this district. One territory, nine hundred square miles, between the Mobile and Ohio and New Orleans and Northeastern railroads, is without preaching at all, except one or two missionary Mormon elders. When these facts were brought before the Conference, $200 was raised, and Bro. E. P. Breland was appointed to serve the mission until Conference, by which time it is hoped the field will commend itself sufficiently to the Board of Missions to justify them in making an appropriation to that work. Why can not all our District Conferences be aggressive—do something? Then would they rise in importance and to the dignity properly belonging to them.

Sunday, at eleven A. M., Bro. Mellen occupied the pulpit, and the church recently built was dedicated. A debt of $800 rested on the building; but within ten minutes the full amount was covered by reliable subscriptions, and the house formally set apart to the worship of God. We can not forbear emphasizing one remark made by the presiding elder just before pronouncing the beautiful dedicatory service: "Don't spit on this floor." Why will men calling themselves respectable do this? Nothing better would be expected of a Hottentot; but for a sensible Christian gentleman to make the house of God look as if he had taken an emetic just before leaving home, and creating a stench calculated to make any sensitive woman feel that she was nearer a hog-pen than the sanctuary of the Lord, passes understanding.

This church is one of the most beautiful of its kind: A cut of it appears in another column. Bro. Penn has been indefatigable in his work, and has the esteem and confidence of his members.

The District Conference closed Monday evening, but Bro. J. A. Bowen, of Aberdeen, was on the ground to continue the meeting. B. F. L.

Opening of Millsaps College.

It will be grateful intelligence to the thousands of friends of our great educational enterprise that the prospects for the initial term are most encouraging. The election of our president, the Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., has been generally and generously endorsed, not only by the Methodists in Mississippi, but throughout the connection wherever he is known. The son of Rev. Wm. Murrah, D. D., himself a man of great gifts and for a generation a conspicuous figure and distinguished leader in Southern Methodism, and the favored son also of the Southern University, he comes to his high position with the best religious and scholastic training and traditions. A gentleman by inheritance and instinct, scholarly in taste and manner, broad and varied in culture, devout, dignified, self-poised and firm, he has ample equipment for the headship of such an institution. He will be a faithful guide and guardian for the young men of the State. Under his administration the college will begin a career of great prosperity.

The other professors-elect are young men of culture, specialists in their chosen field, full of enthusiasm as educators, practically conversant with the best modern methods, and ambitious to make our new college fulfill the most liberal prophecies of its most ardent friends. Other vacancies in the faculty will soon be filled and a full corps of instructors selected capable of doing thorough collegiate work. Our purpose is to make the sons of Millsaps College its best advertisement and furnish the strongest argument for its continued existence and increasing patronage.

Our main building, beautiful in architecture and singularly well appointed for academic purposes, nears completion; and in a few days the last touch of the paint brush will be given to "Williams Hall," one of our "Students' Homes" being erected on the campus. Other needed improvements and equipments will follow at once, and everything be in readiness for the grand opening day soon to be announced.

Almost every mail brings letters from young men or their parents in every part of the State and out of it, making inquiry about the college and its curriculum, terms, time of opening, etc. One asked for a half-dozen catalogues for himself and four friends, all of whom desired to enter the first term. A young preacher of promise, with a family, wishes to make arrangement for the completion of his education in our classes. And, if possible, he shall be accommodated. Such pluck and purpose make men of power and are worthy of all honor. Unless "all signs fail" we will have a gratifying patronage and, I trust, do a work that will graciously tell upon the eternities.

President Murrah is here today studying the situation and getting his hand upon the helm. In a few days he will issue a prospectus which will contain the amplest information for all contemplating admission into the college.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY,
President Board of Trustees.

"I Fall at My Post. Send More Men."

The last words of the dying are always treasured as above rubies. Especially is this so with Christians. As time with them merges into eternity, as mortality becomes clothed upon with immortality, as earth is being changed for heaven, the shout of victory thrills the soul to its very depths. Moses, the leader of Israel, after repeating to his people the Lord's commands, looked out upon the tents of Judah and of Benjamin and of Issachar with their brethren, and exclaimed almost with his dying breath, "O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end."

Dr. J. W. Lambuth, the great forerunner of Southern Methodist missions, after having spent nearly forty years, in heathendom, cried out with his latest breath: "I fall at my post. Send more men!" This grand missionary patriarch, while the chilly billows were rolling over him, and his feet bad all but touched the golden shore, seems not to have thought of the visions of glory already bursting on him, but of the perishing millions by whom he was surrounded, and shouted back to the church, "Send more men!" He seems to have thought not only of the rest awaiting him over there, not only of being with Jesus Christ his Savior, in whose cause he had spent his life, but of a heathen world to be redeemed, and this great church, counting its wealth by the hundreds of millions, giving only thirty cents per member for this great work. In the supreme moment his heart still went out towards these perishing millions, and he paused at the pearly gate just long enough to make one last supreme effort towards arousing the dormant energies of Christendom by shouting back, "Send more men!"

O, that this call would echo and re-echo throughout the length and breadth of Southern Methodism until every heart became thrilled and every dormant energy were aroused to "send more men" and money. Should we raise every cent of our foreign missionary assessment and no more, the Board of Missions could comply with this dying request. What brother in Mississippi, North Mississippi or Louisiana will stand up in open Conference, next December, and read out his collections short.

In the Northern General Conference the proposition to remove the time limit in the pastorate was defeated by a large majority.

Purgatory—No. J.

The great apostle said, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." The impression made upon me in this statement is that St. Paul believed in a state of immediate conscious happiness after death, that he could have been no believer in a purgatory of torture through which all have to pass before they can enter into heaven. From the fact that St. Paul never alludes to a purgatory when he speaks of the future state, it seems an inevitable conclusion that he knew nothing about it; and if he did not, there is in fact no such state at all.

We propose in several brief numbers to consider this doctrine of the Roman Church. We don't propose to quarrel with, or abuse, or pervert the views of our Romanist fellow-citizens; we have neither the right nor the disposition to do so; but as the Romish Church holds the belief of the doctrine of purgatory as an article of faith, and authoritatively says through the Council of Trent, "Let those who do not hold to and believe in purgatory be accursed," and that such can not be saved, we feel that it is due to ourselves to say why we do not and can not believe in the existence of any such place or state as purgatory. I am the more inclined to this because we have many young people, not to say old people as well, who are not posted on this doctrine of the Romanist.

We are told its meaning is, "I cleanse"—purgatorium from purgus, "I cleanse." The catechism of the Council of Trent, drawn up by its order, teaches, "There is a purgatorial fire where the souls of the righteous are purified by a temporary punishment, that entrance may be given them into their eternal home where nothing that is defiled can have a place." Cardinal Bellarmine, a distinguished Roman authority, says: "Purgatory is a certain place in which, as in a prison, the souls are purged after this life, which were not fully purged in this life—to wit, so that they may be able to enter into heaven, where no unclean thing can enter." He further states "that the fathers teach that the pains of purgatory are most severe, or terrible."

The argument for purgatory assumes that no human creature in this life can escape the guilt and pollution of sin, and that, therefore, there is an imperative need of a further cleansing in the purifying fires of purgatory; that we must go through this purgatory before we can secure a clean bill of spiritual health.

Let us look a little into the history of this doctrine. Romanists sometimes ask as though the question might be embarrassing: "Where was your religion before the days of Luther?" Our simple and easy answer is, "In the Bible, for the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible is the religion of the Protestants." But when we ask them, "Where was your doctrine of purgatory during some several centuries after the ascension of Christ and the martyrdom of the apostles?" we are told (and it is all that can be told), "It was in the writings of the heathen poets and philosophers."

The first Bishop of Rome who published this doctrine was Gregory, generally called "the Great," nearly four hundred long years after the birth of Christ. Various fathers held it; but it was not held as an essential article of faith until so declared by the Council of Florence, A. D. 1439. Plato and the Greek philosophers held to the innate depravity of matter, and that the soul was contaminated by living in a material body. These philosophers held that men were divisible into three classes: The positive and perfectly good, and at once saved, and immediately blessed after death; another class, the opposites of these, and hopelessly lost; and the third class too good to be lost, and yet not good enough for the society of the immortal gods. They needed a spiritual quarantine by purification in purgatorial fires. When these heathen embraced Christianity, they sometimes brought with them into the church some of their old theories. So purgatory was brought into the church.

Some of the ablest Romanist writers—for example, Father Trevern, Bishop Aire in France—say they do not rely upon the Holy Scriptures for the proof of this doctrine. The chief taken from an apocryphal book II. Maccabees xii, 43, 44 and 45. The Jews rejected this book from the catalogue of their inspired books, and Christ and his apostles, who make more than 800 quotations from the old Testament Scriptures, never quote from the apocryphal book or in any way recognize them as of any authority in matters of faith. The doctrine of purgatory gradually, with the increasing darkness resulting from the overthrow of Rome by the barbarians, came into the church; and, as we have said, was never formally finally adopted as a doctrine until 1,400 years after the ascension of Christ. Such is the rise, history and adoption of this heathen error.

J. B. WALKER.

NOTES.

On the subject of skeptical philosophy an exchange has this true and pertinent sentence:

It is not uncommon with such theosophical philosophers, after having chattered religion and morals out by the door and windows, to surprise us by bringing them back down the chimney through a trap-door in the floor.

To our dear sisters who are bothered about servants we commend this:

A Washington woman recently remarked, "I've had trouble with one of my servants, and I suppose may always expect trouble." Her neighbor replied, "I ain't never had no trouble with no niggers; dat was lookin' for service places."—Washington Star.

It is a fruitless question: "Is the world growing better?" We can help anybody by asking it, and the range is too wide to answer it satisfactorily. The question to ask is, "Am I growing better?" Here the sphere is small enough to explore thoroughly, and maybe some good will come to somebody by asking it sincerely!

"Our Tchoupitoulas Street Mission is the name of a Methodist work in New Orleans. The Virginians never patronize the mission, for they could not pronounce the place or their money there."—Richmond Dispatch.

If any of our Virginia friends want to "patronize the mission," we pronounce the outlandish word and receive the cash with gratitude. Don't stand back on pronunciation. By the way, that is a very plain word in Louisiana nomenclature.

The Salvation Army believes printer's ink and uses it freely, that accounts, in part, for their success. It publishes 31 weekly newspapers and 5 monthly magazines, an annual circulation of 43,000 copies. In these days no business, secular or religious, can succeed without a liberal use of the type. This paper of ours had a circulation of 25,000, anybody can see that the people of the church it represents would be trebled in Mississippi and Louisiana. And that is the number it would be if our people were really alive to their interests!

Scientific analysis of a glass of beer. Rev. Dr. Peters, it is stated, been making an analysis of the glass of beer he could buy in New York, and found that it contained: pepper, ginger, vinegar, capsaicin, cream of tartar, acetic acid, citric, tartaric, sulphuric, and phosphoric acids, nitric, sulphuric, and other acids; spirits of niter, ether, cloves, japonic extract, bitter orange root, grains of paradise, juice, black ants, dried cherries, orange peel, coriander seed, white bark, tannic acid, fennel seed, cardamom seed, wormwood, opium, sulphates of iron and copper, licorice, opium, gentian root, quinine, etc.

Of course, our readers will drink more beer "while the world stands."

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The Nashville Advocate announces the death of Rev. Dr. J. B. West, at Clarksville, Tenn., May 22.

Dr. Beard, of this city, will dedicate our new church at Daisy, on the Lower Coast mission, next Sunday, June 5.

The editor had a good time walking to and from his office during the car drivers' strike; but now he prefers to use the car.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly, at Memphis, have decided to admit women to the ruling-eldership of that church.

Dr. J. F. Berry, who has so ably conducted the Epworth Herald for our brethren North, has been re-elected editor of that bright paper.

We see from Vicksburg papers that Bro. Lewis, of Crawford Street Church, is having a good revival meeting. He was assisted last week by Bro. Joe Nicholson.

We call special attention to the call of Bishop Wilson and Dr. Morton, in another column. This is a very important matter, and we trust our readers will respond quickly and enthusiastically.

We are glad to note that Bro. Campbell, of the Texas Advocate, is again at his post. He has had a long and severe spell, and we rejoice with him that it is about over, and that he can again resume his trip.

We are requested by Rev. J. Ivy Hoffpaul, presiding elder of the Alexandria district, to say that the District Conference which was announced to convene in Columbia, June 30, has been postponed on account of high water.

Rev. H. Armstrong, of Lafayette, La., has a full set (5 volumes) of the Comprehensive Commentary for sale at $12; right new; original cost, $25. They belong to a colored Methodist preacher who wants to sell. If you want such a book, communicate with Bro. Armstrong.

Rev. T. B. Holloman writes from Canton, Miss., May 26: "We buried Sister Skipper, wife of Rev. V. D. Skipper, of Mississippi Conference, at Sharon today. A more complete triumph over death I have never witnessed." We extend to Bro. Skipper our sincere sympathy.

Prof. Wm. Rice Sims, of the University of Mississippi, must be a popular man. He has made addresses at West Point and Water Valley, and is to make addresses at Byhalia, June 17, and at Summit, June 21. No one is more competent than he. We have heard him and know.

The closing exercises of Edward McGehee College will embrace Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, June 12-14. The annual sermon will be preached on Sunday, at 11 A. M., by Dr. J. M. Weems, and the annual address will be delivered on Tuesday, at 11 A. M., by Rev. Frank N. Parker, of New Orleans.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, P. E., writes: "Our handsome new church, after Plan 112, Board of Church Extension plans, was dedicated at Waynesboro, Miss., May 22. The church is a thing of beauty. God has accepted the offering. His glory has filled the house; scores of souls have been converted; many have joined the church. Bro. Penn, the faithful pastor, has been assisted by Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Aberdeen. God is with us. Whole families gloriously blessed."

Church Dedicated.

On Sunday, May 22, I dedicated a church at Learned, Miss. The house was filled to overflowing. A collection was taken for the purchase of an organ, lighting apparatus, etc., and a sum nearly or quite sufficient for the purpose was realized. Methodism is in its infancy in this place, an organization having been effected only a few months since by Rev. N. J. Roberts, of the Utica charge. This house of worship is quite creditable to the liberality of the community. The dedicatory service was the first service held in the house. Our people have hitherto been indebted to our Baptist brethren for a place in which to worship.

Doctrinal Methodism.

Rev. G. H. Hayes, D. D., of the Louisville Conference, has given us in his tract of forty pages the most philosophical and logical presentation of doctrinal Methodism this writer has ever seen in so small a compass. "It is a gem in parvo." This valuable tract is worthy of a place in every library, and of a close and thoughtful reading by every Methodist preacher and layman, that the symmetrical and sublime proportions of our Methodism may be seen in their relations to the foundations of divine truth. Columbus District Conference.

This Conference convened at Shuqualak, Miss., May 12, 1892; Dr. T. C. Wier, P. E., presiding. Twelve of the fourteen pastors of the district answered to their names; the other two being absent on account of sickness. Ten of the fifty-two lay delegates were present. We are sorry indeed to record the names of so few of our lay brethren, as this order of Conference is a means from which they can derive much information and spiritual benefit.

The first day was given to the discussion of subjects pertaining to Sunday-school work. The questions—"Brief History of the Sunday-school;" "The Design of the Sunday-school;" "The Influence of the Sunday-school;" "Sunday-school Statistics;" "Preparation of the Sunday-school Lessons;" "On the General Conduct of the Sunday-school;" "The Sunday-school Teacher before the Class;" "The Sunday-school and Pastor;" "How Can the Sunday-school Be Rendered More Effective in the Conversion of Sunday-school Scholars?" "How Can the Sunday-school Be Conducted through the Winter Months?"—were discussed with profit to all that were present.

The second and third days were devoted to reports from pastors. These reports show that the district is on the advance, and that the laborers are awake to all methods that have a tendency to increase spirituality, strengthen the church and encourage educational interests. Reports show that 160 Nashville Advocates, 140 New Orleans Advocates and 26 St. Louis Advocates are taken in the district. All Methodist Sunday-schools use our denominational literature.

Our genial brethren, Revs. J. W. McLaurin, agent for the American Bible Society, and A. F. Watkins, agent for Millsaps College, came up the morning of the fourteenth, and both made interesting addresses in the interest of the work represented by them. (I append herewith a copy of Report No. 1 on education to show how heartily we are in accord with Methodist educational interests of our State.)

H. W. Foote, D. Lipscomb, R. M. Smith and W. V. Connell were elected delegates to the North Mississippi Conference. S. B. White and James Marrah were elected alternates. Mayhew was selected as the place to hold the next District Conference.

Religious service was held each day at eleven A. M. and eight P. M. Communion service was conducted by Dr. T. C. Wier after Sunday morning, preaching service was over. At four P. M., Sunday, children's services were conducted by Revs. A. F. Watkins and J. D. Newsum.

The members of this Conference will ever remember the generous hospitality of the good people of Shuqualak. All took part in our entertainment without regard to denominational lines. Conference adjourned on Sunday night. W. V. CONNELL, Sec. Mayhew Station, Miss.

REPORT NO. 1 ON EDUCATION. MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

As a District Conference, we would reiterate our former expression of deep interest and sense of gratification at the prospect of soon having a Methodist college for white males in the borders of our own State.

The Christian education of our young men is becoming more and more needful; and this need is becoming more and more apparent; hence we rejoice to learn that the Board of Trustees of this college have reached that point in the progress of this important enterprise in which they can elect a faculty and announce with certainty the opening of this noble institution in the coming fall. In all the officers elected we feel, of course, a brotherly interest, and welcome them to their new and highly important field of labor; but to Dr. W. B. Murrah, the president-elect, a highly esteemed member of our Annual Conference, reared in the bounds of this District Conference, we would especially extend fraternal greeting, and hereby express our confidence in his intellectual and spiritual qualifications for the exalted position of usefulness to which he has been called; and in response to his address to the Methodists of Mississippi we adopt the following:

Resolved, That, as a District Conference, we hereby endorse the action of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College in their selection of a faculty, and in their plans for the early opening of the college.

Resolved, That we pledge our sympathy and our aid to the worthy president and his co-laborers in their efforts to make this institution a means of blessing to Mississippi Methodism.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to Dr. Murrah, and that a copy be also sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication. J. D. NEWSUM, Chair'n Com. on Education.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption. When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, rashes at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address: Dr. H. James & Co., 103 Race Street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Our Bishops.

We take pleasure in announcing that we settled with our Bishops in full of their salaries for their fiscal year ending the first day of the present month, as would also the preceding year. We congratulate our noble church on this fact, and make our acknowledgments to our preachers who have so faithfully looked after this important matter. And now, brethren, remember that a considerable time will have elapsed before sessions of the Annual Conferences, when the largest payments are usually made; and if we are to make monthly remittances to the Bishops, as the law directs, we will need funds. Therefore, brethren of the ministry, allow us to kindly urge you to take your collections for the support of Bishops monthly, or take the whole amount at once, and send it to the treasurers of your Joint Boards of Finance, who will remit it to us. Let no individual send money to us, but send it to the treasurer of the Joint Board of Finance in your own Conference.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Woman's Anti-Lottery League, held on Thursday, May 19, it was unanimously resolved that we should express to you our grateful appreciation of your never-failing courtesy to us, and our sincere and hearty thanks for your many kind services, as well as for the encouraging sympathy that you have always given to our organization.

To the Methodists in the Meridian District.

Dear Brethren: Rev. Henry G. Hawkins greatly desires to leave Nashville, Tenn., June 15, with Bishop Key, Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Bro. Yoshloka, and others. He needs $200 to defray his traveling expenses to Japan. There he will be employed to teach in the government school at Matsuyama. He will do good missionary work even while acquiring the Japanese language. I want the Methodists in the Meridian district to contribute the $200, and entrust every preacher to interest himself in this behalf. Let it be by special free-will offerings as unto the Lord. Make all remittances to me, and send the money to me just as soon as possible. The Lord is blessing us very abundantly this year, and has honored us by calling Bro. Hawkins to labor in Japan. T. L. Away with the wash-board

Use Pearline

As long as you use the old wash-board there'll be hard work and waste. That's what goes with it, and can't be taken from it. That's what it was made for. It's the rub, rub, rub, on it that ruins the clothes. It's the wash-board that wears you out. You don't need it.

Away with wash-day! You don't need that, either. You don't set apart a day for washing the dishes. Wash the clothes in the same way, with no more work, a few at a time.

But you'll have to use Pearline to do it. Pearline only can rid you of wash-board and hard work; with it you can do your washing when you like. And you can do it safely, too. Directions on every package.

Away with the peddlers and prize givers, who say their imitations are "as good as" or "same as" Pearline—IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled and has no equal. Sold by all grocers.

The Greater Responsibility.

I use this caption because it more readily calls attention to the matters I wish to discuss, and not because I have been able to discover in any relation to the facts it is supposed to represent. I have felt from the beginning that this discussion was unwise, and would result in great hurt to the spiritual life of the church, and retard the spirit of liberality that was being developed in mission work. But now that it is before the church, it must be disposed of according to the facts in the case, if they can be discovered, and thus prevent a threatened evil.

The charge, at least, by indifference, that the surplus of the result of bad management of the funds entrusted to the women is as wide of the facts as the assumption that it comes of their superior methods over those of the Parent Board. Those who advocate these theories are doubtless true, and yet dangerous, friends of a great and sacred cause; for their indifference can only result in hurting the confidence of the great body of the church in administration, while it affords no assistance to those charged with the responsibility of administration. The earnest observer of the signs of the times has cause for the belief that thoughtful speech and immature reasoning on the facts connected with the financial state of the two Boards are far more hurtful than are the facts themselves.

Any attempt on the part of either party to this unfortunate, if not unequalled, controversy to justify their state or condition by any suspicious reflection upon that of the other, will not only not lie in the judgment of the church, but must prove decidedly hurtful to the side of both parties to this controversy in the end. Our women are too wise to assume that they have attained their most marvelous success independent of the influence and active co-operation of our preachers, who are the active agents of the Parent Board. And they are too prudent to assume that they could maintain their success for a twelve-month, if by any means that influence and co-operation should be withdrawn from them. And it is equally true, shown by the figures and known to every observant worker among us, that we can as easily afford to dispense with the influence and labors of the women in our work. What they have done in the way of educating and developing a more liberal spirit of liberality in the support of the missions of the church, and a higher state of Christian life, more than justifies their right to be as they are, and warns us to touch them but lightly with adverse criticism.

I am persuaded, both from observation at home and in the mission field, that wise and judicious legislation by our next General Conference, looking to closer and less independent relation and administration of the two Boards, both at home and in mission fields, is a necessity. But I am willing to trust the providence of God, and the pious judgment of those who are more directly charged with the responsibility of adjusting the relationship, for whatever is needed, and decline a further discussion of the matter at this time.

The women assign two reasons for the existence of their surplus: One is that the single men sent out by the Parent Board marry the single women sent out by their Board, and their salaries stop. To those who are accustomed to seeing a man and his wife working, one for one Board and the other for the other, here at home, this would seem a strange reason for dropping the matter. While to those who are laboring in the mission field, and know the amount and value of the labors of preachers' wives along the very lines of the women's work, wonder why they do not utilize these women, and thus save expense to both Boards. This would solve many questions that some who will read this are perplexed over, and it will be done some day. They tell us that the young women of the church are not offering themselves for the foreign work. This is, indeed, an alarming sign of the times! It has not always been thus; and how are we to account for this state of their need now? It is not, I assert, that there is less of consecration among the women now than formerly, but from some cause traceable to the trend of things which always develops the answering spirit. When the women gave themselves wholly to the foreign work, they were never in need that acceptable young women did not respond; but when they called off their forces and directed thought and effort along the lines of home work, the money came in, but the Holy Spirit did not honor it and send out needed recruits. Think on these things!

I have some things to say about that debt; but this article is too long. If I live, I will write again of these matters. J. M. WEEKS, Brookhaven, Miss.

Help Our Tilters in Japan.

The Board of Church Extension authorized a special appeal to be made for $5,000 to build a church in Osaka, Japan. The need is urgent. The case commends itself to the interest and sympathy of all who feel any concern for the extension of the Lord's kingdom and the success of our mission in that fruitful field.

Osaka is a great commercial city about twenty miles by rail from Kobe, the headquarters of our mission in Japan, and nearly the same distance from Kyoto, the old capital of the empire. It has a population of well-nigh half a million souls, strongly marked with all the characteristics of that industrious, thriving, self-asserting race. With the exception of the comparatively few who have been rescued through the agency of Christian missions, the city is wholly given to idolatry. Yet it gives promise of large results to the work of faith and labor of love.

Two of our brethren have striven, not without success, under serious disadvantages, to give the knowledge of the truth to this people. Their greatest hindrance has been the want of a building. They have been compelled to rely upon rented native houses of small dimensions and unsuited to their uses. The advantages of a building of sufficient size, and furnished with the conveniences for their work, can hardly be overestimated.

The damage done by the earthquake, which devastated all that region in October, of last year, affected our missionaries in their work and made more imperative their need of a house entirely under their own control. They can not expect any help in this matter from native sources. Our members are doing their utmost to meet urgent requirements in other directions and have as much upon them as they can bear. It is a small thing that the church in this land should furnish the $5,000 called for to enable our brethren there to carry on the work with greater facility and promise of larger success.

Will not all who read this respond until the necessary sum shall be in the hands of the Secretary of the Board of Church Extension?

A. W. WILSON.

The above appeal from Bishop Wilson explains itself. Our plan is to secure biblical offerings from all our people to this good cause. This Leap Year, and everybody has a birthday. Let all our people, in grateful acknowledgment of their indebtedness to God for preserving their lives to this date, send something to aid in the erection of this, the first church our Board has ever undertaken to build outside of the continent of North America. With the organization of this Conference, which Bishop Key goes south to effect, we wish to set up our first church edifice in Japan. The amount asked for will enable us to do this in the most important commercial center of the empire. One thousand persons, by sending five dollars each can put us in possession of the money to be used by Bishop Key.

Let all our friends in Louisiana and Mississippi forward to you any sum that they may see fit to offer for this purpose, and will you, Mr. Editor, be kind enough to receive all money sent to you and acknowledge same in your paper from week to week and remit to me at this office on the first of June, and again on the fifteenth, what has been received by you.

Those who may wish it more convenient, can send the money direct to me. All sums received by me from individuals or through the church papers will be acknowledged in the Nashville Christian Advocate.

Woman's Work.

The District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society, Sardinia district, North Mississippi Conference, convened in Batesville on May 11, 1892, at 9 A. M. Conference was opened by Scripture reading from Matt. xxviii by Rev. J. Ritchey, and song by the choir. On motion, Mrs. W. H. Wall was elected secretary. Roll of auxiliaries and juvenile societies were called and responded to by five delegates from adult and five from juvenile societies. Welcome address was delivered by T. E. Mosley, president of "Reapers," of Batesville, and responded to by Maggie Bellentine, of "Bonds of Promise," of Sardinia. Annual address by our district secretary, Mrs. S. M. Thomas. On motion, Mrs. T. H. C. Strong, vice-president of North Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society, was invited to seat on platform. After reports from delegates of auxiliaries and juvenile societies were favorably received with a beautiful recitation by little Bernice Belle Short, of "Olive Branches," of McCreche's Chapel.

Question of how to elect our district secretaries, whether by vote of our delegates at district meetings or by vote of our delegates and delegates from other districts, at our Annual Conference meetings. This was discussed at length, after which the following resolutions were offered and adopted:

Resolved, That this District Conference believe it to be the duty of our work; that the district secretary should reside in the district over which she presides.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this body that the district secretary should be elected by the delegates to the District Conference. Therefore to this end we hereby instruct and authorize our delegates to our next Annual Conference, to be held in Aberdeen in June, to ask for a memorial to our Woman's Board of Missions, asking that the law be made to correspond to these expressions, embodied in said resolutions.

On motion, the secretary of this Conference was instructed to present these resolutions to our next session, a prayer meeting was led by Mrs. J. W. Malone, which was a season of rejoicing to many who testified for Christ. Papers were read by Miss Sallie Ritchey, of Sardinia, and one written by Mrs. J. A. Hooper, of Sardinia, was read. On motion, this paper was requested to be printed in our NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. The paper was read by Miss Tighe, of Camo. On motion, by Mrs. Wall, delegates be invited for their next district secretary and alternate, subject to ratification of our Annual Conference. Mrs. R. M. Short, of McCreche's Chapel, was elected; Mrs. T. H. C. Strong, of Aberdeen, alternate. These resolutions were read and adopted.

Resolved, That the sincere thanks of the Woman's Missionary Society of Sardinia district, North Mississippi Conference, be tendered the kind people of Batesville for their generous hospitality, which they have so cordially extended to us.

Resolved, That we invoke the choicest blessings of our heavenly Father, in whose name we come, and that we may prove as great a blessing to you as you have to us.

Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to the choir for their sweet music, which has added so much to our meeting.

Resolved, That we return our sincere thanks to our brothers for their advice and encouraging words, and pray that our Father may bless them wherever they may go preaching "His" Gospel.

Resolved, That we would not forget to return our heartfelt thanks to our beloved district secretary for her untiring efforts to lead us in the right path. May God spare her many years to teach and help us in our work for Christ!

After praise meeting, conducted by Mrs. Strong, on motion the Conference adjourned.

Mrs. W. H. WALL, Sec'y.

To the Women of the Sardinia District.

I received about two weeks ago a card from our district secretary, Sister Thames, requesting me to prepare a paper to be read at this meeting, and suggesting two subjects, "All the world for Christ," and "What do Christian women owe to the gospel?" I may be peculiarly constituted; but I never could, even in my school-girl days, write on a subject proposed by anyone else. It must have its origin in my own head, or I can do nothing with it. Sister Thames was kind enough to say that I could use either or neither, as I might choose; but, at any rate, to write something. I thought of first one subject and then the other, and became convinced that I had not time to do justice to either, as my hands were already full.

I suppose no one present doubts that the world must be won for Christ, nor that Christian women owe to the gospel not only the blessings of the life that now is, but the hope of that which is to come. While pondering these things, a question presented itself to my mind: What are we, the professedly Christian women of this district, doing to bring the world to Christ? This question at first seemed pointed and practical enough; but on further consideration I found myself disposed to take comfort from and feel satisfied with the fact that our district bears the banner of the Conference society, and that we might be excused for indulging to some extent in self-congratulations. In the stillness of the night a more searching question came to me. (I believe it was brought by the Holy Spirit and implanted as a heavenly seed, and the thoughts it has awakened have grown in my heart, while my hands have been busy with other things.) What am I doing to bring the world to Christ? Is the question which I believe was divinely lodged in my heart for my benefit, and for yours, ye Christian women of the Sardinia district. Let each one who hears these words take the question to her heart and keep it there: What am I doing to bring the world to Christ?

While I accept the truth of the maxim, "In union is strength," I think there is danger that, in this age of leagues, unions, and societies, we may lose our identity, fall to keep our personality, or, at least, shrink our individual responsibility. The last most of us are prone to do. We think less of what I ought to do, and what is my place which no one else can fill, than we think of what our society should do, or of the aggregate strength and success, never bringing home to our hearts the question, Have I contributed my quota to this success, or has all my strength been cast in the balance with my society to weigh against ignorance, vice and corruption? Individual responsibility is the root of the whole matter, and unless we can bring ourselves to feel this, we will never do our whole duty. What am I doing to bring the world to Christ?

Beginning with the home, where the woman's holiest work—the home which Christ raised from a miserable hovel to a heaven—let us ask ourselves, What am I doing there to bring my children to Christ? What am I teaching them, and others through them, by my life and conversation? Their tender hearts are the choicest ground for sowing the good seed; their little hands are always willing to carry help to the suffering; it is mother only shows them how their unwearied but best would, never tiring of going to all within reach and telling in living accents of the lovely Christ-child, who came to earth, if mother would only teach them patiently what to say and bid them go. O, if Christian women had only done their duty to their children, the world would have long ago been brought to Christ!

In social intercourse, what am I doing to bring the world to Christ? When I visit a friend, or have one visit me, am I ready always to speak the word in season to those who may be earnestly seeking the way of salvation? Do I talk earnestly with and not at the unconverted? Am I ready to speak of Jesus as of absent human friends? Am I fluent in speaking of robes of righteousness and crowns of glory? Am I in discussing the latest styles of dresses and bonnets? I fear that few of us can answer these questions in the affirmative; yet why should it be so? Let us each give an answer to her own conscience. It has been said by some one, "that we are never fit for much in the service of God until the world calls us crazy," and I think that the dread of being called lunatics often keeps our lips sealed on sacred subjects. But I am fully convinced the failure to realize our individual responsibility causes us to fall short of our duty more than any other one thing. Let us keep in mind the question, What am I doing to bring the world to Christ?

Then the teeming heathen world, how shall that be brought to Christ? It must be done, for the Father has said, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance." Some may say, "Well, I don't believe in missions at all," others say, "I believe in home, but not in foreign missions." To all such I would say: If you are really conscientious and want to know your duty, "search the Scriptures," and you will soon find the wished-for light. We have no right to be governed by our beliefs and feelings unless we are sure they are in accord with the revealed will of our heavenly Father.

I read, not long since, at one of our mission teas, a little leaflet giving the relative numbers of heathen and nominal Christians. I have forgotten the title of the leaflet—in fact, I have kept but one fact which it disclosed clearly in mind, viz: that every woman who professes Christianity has two hundred heathen women looking to and depending upon her for a knowledge of the Savior. Famine, thirst, cold, and heat, and all the horrors of the "Bread of Life" weeping, moaning, waiting in piteous accents for help, helpless, hopeless life, and I, only I, can help them. I can't call upon you, for your two hundred depend all your time and effort. You can't call upon your neighbor to share your responsibility, for she also has two hundred looking to her. O, my sisters, with these facts before me, I can but ask, What am I doing to bring these heathen women to Christ? Our lives may be so full of work that we think there is not a moment for anything more; we may find so many needs for our money that we feel we have not a cent to pay; we may feel so incompetent that we can neither talk nor write to help the cause of missions. Still these two hundred women are looking to you, two hundred are looking to me, and we are ready to ask in despair, What am I to do? If we have really reached the point where we feel our personal responsibility in the matter, if we really feel that this burden of souls is more than we can bear, we have only to take it to the Savior, who will bear it for us and teach us what to do.

What am I doing to bring the world to Christ? Take the question to your homes, to your places of private devotion; let it ever abide with you until the world is won for Christ, or until you join the triumphant host who have done all they could to bring the world to Christ.

Mrs. J. A. HOOPER.

Come West, Young Men.

This is the advice of a young man to young men, especially to young preachers. These are the young men, Oklahomans the West to which you should come. After four months' residence and close observation, it is my sincere, candid opinion that this country has inducements that very few new countries have. The people are here. Churches to build. Work—much work to be done. Thousands need the gospel. Many are calling for the ministers of Christ to carry them the glorious gospel. Some church will hear their cry, enter the field, organize churches and possess the land for God. Why can not our ministry do this? The harvest is indeed great. Let us cast our sickle and garner the sheaves. Now is the time. Wait, and the field will be lost to us.

The Methodist Church has a better right to this country than any other. Our men were here first. Our church has spent more money here than any other. The first sermons preached to the moving thousands were by our preachers. But at this time we have not the men to meet the demand. Young men, come West. Come and help to spread the story of the Cross over this new land. Come and help to save the mighty multitudes who are here, and coming here every day. This is the chance for Southern Methodism. Now is your opportunity to do a great work.

I am not overdraw. There is nothing illusory in these statements. Read the papers. Thirty thousand people taking homes in one day. In a few weeks considerable townsprings up. In three or four years many of these farms will be waving fields of wheat and corn. Some of these towns will very soon develop into cities. The country settled three years ago demonstrates this. There was more corn made here last year than was consumed at home. It found quick sale and brought a good price. Good Oklahoma City, El Reno and Kingfisher are towns ranging from five to ten thousand inhabitants, and have a healthy, steady growth every day. Many beautiful residences are being erected. Substantial brick and stone business houses are being built. Men of push and enterprise are here. There is life in the land. It is inspiring to be here. I mention these things to show the wonderful possibilities of the country. What we see here today is a true prophecy of great things to come in the near future.

We need men—men with an undying love for souls—men of sense, strong young men, in every county and town in the Territory. Young men, come West.

I hear some one say: "What about the support?" I answer: For two or three years the salary will be small; but you can get a living. After that time the appointments, I believe, will average and in many instances go ahead of the older conferences. I write what I firmly believe. I have never seen people attend church better anywhere than here. The churches in the towns and school-houses in the country are generally crowded with eager, attentive people. Many are saved. People get happy and shout in the good old Methodist way.

Full notes, brethren, from the apron-string of your mother Conference, and come West—in Oklahoma. Come with the faith, courage and heroism of a true soldier of Christ and help us take this land for God. The multitudes of the few here now is: Oklahoma for God and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

W. WINDLEY.

OUR CURIOUS LANGUAGE.

Remember, though box in the plural makes the plural of ox should be oxen, not oxes. And remember, though fleece in the plural is fleeces. That the plural of goose isn't geese, not geeses. And remember, though house in the plural is houses. That the plural of mouse should be mice, not mouses. Noise, it is true, in the plural is noises, not noises. But the plural of house should be houses, not huses. And foot, it is true, in the plural is feet, but the plural of root should be roots, not reet.

Mr. Editor: As you were so kind to publish my last letter, I will write again. We have moved since I wrote last. We are living in Senatobia. I like to live here very much. I go to the Blackbelt Female College. My teacher's name is Mr. Snider. I also go to the Methodist Sunday-school. My teacher's name is Miss Corn Ratford. I like her very much. She is so good and sweet. She has offered a prize in her class, and I am working for it; but have missed several Sundays, for I was sick. I belong to the Temperance and Juvenile Missionary Societies. We have had some awful weather. We had big times during the snow. We snowballed our teacher. I will answer Bessie Courtney's question. The fifth president of the United States was James Monroe. I will now ask a question: Why was Gen. Jackson called "Stonewall" Jackson? Mr. Editor, I do not know whether you like history questions, but I think they are very interesting. I will close, with best wishes to you, I am, Your friend, TROY TRIBLE.

Senatobia, Miss.

Mr. Editor: As this is my first effort of writing you a letter to be published, I will try not to be discouraged before I finish it. I am going to school, and like my teachers very much indeed. We have seven teachers—four ladies and three gentlemen. I attend the Methodist Sunday-school. I like to go very much; but to-day it rained so that I could not attend. I disliked it very much, because I had to miss. Mama takes the dear old Advocate, and I am the first to read the news of the late day! I enjoy reading the children's letters. My dear friend, Lizzie Harris, died at her home in Sibley; but I am not at all uneasy of Lizzie's future, for I know she has gone to join her mother in heaven, although I hate to be parted from her. I will close by asking a question: How many times is the word "and" found in the Bible? I remain, Your little friend, LILIA ROBERTS.

Monroe, La.

Mr. Editor: I am a little girl nine years old, and I thought I would write to your valuable paper. My papa takes the dear old Advocate, and I like it very much. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Papa is my teacher, but he hardly ever goes. I have been going to school, but I have quit now. I go to church at Father every second Sunday in each month. Our preacher's name is Mr. Wm. Sullivan, and I like him very much. I am a member of the M. E. Church, South. We are going to get a public school at Gorman, and I will have to go. I will answer one of the little cousin's questions: "Where is snail-shells found?" It is found in Exodus xxv, 38. I will ask a question: Where is "grazing stock" found? Your true friend, OZIE STYVET.

Gorman, La.

Mr. Editor: As I have never seen a letter in your valuable paper from this part of the country, I thought I would write a few lines. I am a little girl eleven years old. I attend school at the Gihland Collegiate Institute. Prof. G. L. Wren is the principal of the school; also superintendent of our Sabbath-school at Gihland. Rev. J. F. Fuster is our pastor. We love him very much. He made us a visit a short time ago, which we all enjoyed very much. My grandpapa, Rev. T. J. Opton, is preaching at Lake Charles this year. I will answer the question asked in the last week's Advocate: "How many sons had Jacob, and which did he love the most?" Jacob had twelve sons, and he loved Joseph the most. Your little friend, BETTIE RHODES.

Gibland, La.

Mr. Editor: I have seen so many letters in the Advocate from little girls and boys, I thought I would write, and hope it will not go to the waste-basket. I live near Jacksonville, on the L. W. R. R. I like to live here very well; only I miss going to Sunday-school so much. We lived in Vinton, and had such a nice Sunday-school, and I loved my teacher very much—Mrs. Davis. Papa says when he gets his rice gathered he will move back. I have four brothers and two sisters. I will close by asking a question: Who climbed up a tree to see Christ? Wishing the Advocate success, I am, Your little friend, SUE FAIRCHILD.

Jacksonville, La.

Mr. Editor: As I have not seen any letters from this part of the country, I thought I would write. We live on the Abbeville circuit. Liberty is the name of our church. Bro. Anderson is our pastor. He has but one arm. I have a sister (Julia) going to the Malone College, Holly Springs. I had a brother (Alex) going to the University of Mississippi. He died in February. I will close by answering one of the cousin's questions: "Beware of dogs" is found in Phil. iii, 2. I will ask a question: Who lay on an iron bedstead? Your friend, ALMA HALL.

Noah, Miss.

Mr. Editor: As my sister, Mary, is going to answer the question about the shoemaker, I thought I would answer the one beginning, "Who broke the ten commandments?" It is found in Exodus xxxii, 19. Moses found all Israel dancing before a calf, and in breaking up the dance, he broke all the commandments; but the good Lord excused him for breaking the commandments. When he burnt the calf and ground it into powder he made the dancers drink it; then behead Levi and his sons and killed off 3,000 calves, and the plague was stayed.

Doctors disagree. They have to. There are differences of opinion among the best; there will be so long as knowledge is incomplete. But there is one subject on which all physicians are completely in accord, and that is the value of cod-liver oil in consumption and scrofula; and many other conditions in which the loss of fat is involved. And cod-liver oil has its greatest usefulness in Scott's Emulsion. There is an interesting book on the subject; sent free.

Scott & Bowne, Chemists, 213 South 2nd Avenue, New York.

Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

Within the last month the immense business of King's Royal Germetner Co. has been more than doubled and large orders are pouring in from all directions. On February 20th I. L. Lyons & Co., of New Orleans, gave them a cash order for seven thousand and two hundred bottles to be delivered at once.

It means: 1. That when such men as General Longstreet, General Turner, Governor Hubbard, Colonel Avery, Rev. W. G. E. Cunningham, Rev. J. B. Hawthorne and Rev. Sam Jones try a medicine and give it their unqualified indorsement the people believe them. 2. That Germetner has done all that its most ardent friends have decided that it would do. 3. That it has mastered La Grippe, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, Nervous Debility, Insomnia, Kidney Trouble, Asthma, Summer Complaints and Catarrh wherever it has been tried. 4. That the discovery of Germetner is the most valuable contribution that this century has made to medical science.

As a spring medicine it has no equal; it invigorates the stomach, aids digestion, tones up the system, and thus brings health and happiness. In this respect no other remedy can compare with it. Germetner is not a nauseous compound, but as pleasant to take as a glass of lemonade; the patient loves it and looks forward with pleasure to the time of taking it. For sale at $1.00 per bottle by all druggists.

INGHAM-LINDAUER.—At the residence of the bride's father, Rev. H. Johns, Algiers, La., May 25, 1892, by Rev. H. Johns, Mr. William S. Ingham to Miss Carrie H. Lindauer, all of Louisiana.

OBITUARIES.

WARD.—Mrs. SARAH E. WARD (nee Evans) was born in Greene county, Miss., Oct. 13, 1851, and died in Moss Point, Miss., April 18, 1892.

The subject of this sketch was in the meridian of life, and in the high noon of happiness and usefulness, both in the home and in the church. She was married to Mr. W. M. Ward, on May 10, 1877. Their union was made joyous by the birth of three children, one of which died in infancy, and was tenderly consoled in the keeping of the Good Shepherd. Two little girls, aged, respectively, ten and twelve years, are left behind to revere her precious memory, and comfort the saddened and chastened heart of their fond and loving father.

Her sufferings were long and painful, but were endured with more than ordinary fortitude and Christian resignation. She was scrupulously careful about the use of anodynes, and desired until her sufferings were too intolerable to be borne. Everything that medical science and surgical skill could suggest to arrest the fatal disorder was cheerfully resorted to in order to prolong her valuable life, but to no avail.

On her return from the city of New Orleans, some months ago, where she had undergone a most painful and arduous operation, when she realized that no permanent benefit would accrue therefrom, she said to the writer of these lines: "I felt it my duty as a Christian to make every possible exertion to recover my health for the sake of my husband and my little girls. The effort has been made, and I feel this peaceful consciousness as a reward for the sufferings endured. I have done my duty. The thought of death does not alarm me. God's grace will be sufficient for me."

Truly it may be said of our lamented friend and sister beloved, that she was a helpful and a devoted wife, a self-sacrificing and a devoted mother, a gentle and loving sister, a warm and faithful friend, a thoughtful and considerate neighbor, a devout and trusting Christian. She has gone from us; but we know where to find her.

May the chastened mourning of the disconsolate husband reveal unto him Christ Jesus, the Lord, who is the resurrection and the life! May the liberated spirit of the glorified mother hover over the pathway and preside over the destinies of the bright little girls, Martha and Mabel! Let us look to the great Sympathizer, who knows what it is to weep over the grave of loved ones, and who has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows.

Her pastor, C. A. POWELL.

MCLAIR.—Mrs. CATHARINE E. MCLAIR was born June 21, 1811, and married to Mr. Daniel E. McLaure, of Wayne county, Miss., June 6, 1830. She lived for many years a widow in the pleasant home of her son-in-law, Mr. Wm. K. Britton, of Clarke county, and her much-loved daughter, Sister Marian Britton. Here, after a long and painful illness, she peacefully passed away Jan. 25, 1892.

Sister McLaure did not join the church till the year 1862, chiefly because there was no church accessible in her home whose teachings she could endorse fully. In the M. E. Church, South, she found such a congenial home. She was quiet and undemonstrative in her nature, but her tears often welled up from her heart to her eyes as she listened to preaching and to sacred song. As long as she could attend the country church near her home, it was her frequent delight to do so.

Soon after her eightieth birthday her strength became labor and sorrow, even as the Psalmist prophesied that it shall be, as a rule. With patience she endured as seeing the invisible. The last time her pastor was privileged to visit her she was suffering much pain, but without a murmur. With tears standing in her eyes, she said, "Pray for me."

The universal outpouring of her neighbors to pay the last rites at the quiet country graveyard, on a wintry eve, attested the high esteem in which she was held by those who knew her best. There may trees and grass and flowers adorn her earthly bed till the trumpet of God shall summon her mortal part to put on immortality, and become like Christ's own glorious body.

J. P. DRAKE.

MCCLELLAN.—On April 30, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Charles Coltharp, near Millikin's Bend, La., Mrs. NANCY MCCLELLAN, wife of Samuel McClellan, aged seventy-four years two months and eight days.

She was born near Rocky Spring, Claiborne county, Miss., where almost all the years of her life were passed, having moved to Louisiana only a few years ago. She joined the Methodist Church in early life, and was ever a consistent and faithful member.

It is with diffidence I give this brief sketch of the life of the deceased, for I feel that no words can do justice to the noble life so lately ended. Always modest and retiring, it was only in the home circle among loved ones that her admirable traits of character could be seen and appreciated.

She was the mother of eleven children, ten of whom she reared to years of maturity. They were her pride and joy, and she considered nothing a sacrifice that promoted their welfare; yet she was called upon in her old age to part from many of these, who were dearer than life. First one, then another, until only four are left to mourn her loss. All of these sorrows she bore with Christian fortitude, at all times adhering to that firm faith in her God which enabled her under all circumstances to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

For years a great sufferer from bodily afflictions, yet her indomitable energy remained with her till the last, ever planning and executing some work of love for her husband, children or grandchildren. In all of these years the "Divine Sculptor" has been chiseling the model, and now that he has it in perfection, "he takes it for a pillar in his temple."

GASKINE.—Another one of our best young men has been called home. LEVIN ELIAS GASKINE, son of L. E. and M. A. Gaskine, was born Jan. 28, 1873, joined the M. E. Church, South, under the ministry of Rev. W. R. Hinds, in October, 1887; was happily converted in October, 1888, under the ministry of Rev. H. D. Howell; died at his father's home near Caseyville, Lincoln county, Miss., March 31, 1892, aged nineteen years two months and three days.

He was one of our best young men. He was no obedient son, kind and affectionate brother, tender and sympathetic among his associates. He loved God and his church and did what he could to help on the good cause. His work is done, and well done. He is now at rest. Weep not for your blessed early dead. Meet him no wander. H. P. LEWIS.

HAYS.—JAS. L. HAYS was born Sept. 29, 1858, and died March 18, 1892, at his home in Neshoba county, Miss., near Scotland Chapel.

Bro. Hays was just in the prime of manhood, being thirty-three years of age. He was the son of Rev. Harrison Hays, a local preacher in the M. E. Church, South, who died some years ago. His mother is still living. He was reared in the lap of Methodism, professed religion and joined the M. E. Church at Scotland Chapel in 1873, under the ministry of Rev. J. B. K. Smith, and lived a consistent and useful member until his death.

Bro. Hays was an energetic young man, being "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." He was happily married to Miss Clinney Hooper in the year 1881, and leaves a wife and four children to face the cold charities of the world. He had an attack of typhoid fever, which ran into pneumonia, and in eight or ten days resulted in death. The condition of his mind was such that he did not talk much of his approaching dissolution, but he did speak peacefully and calmly, and with a smile upon his face he passed away, leaving a widowed mother and quite a number of brothers and sisters (besides his wife and children) to mourn his loss. He was kind, generous and upright in his dealings with his fellow men, and will be greatly missed in his community as well as in the church to which he belonged. This writer preached a funeral discourse to his memory to a large audience (larger than the church would hold), and then laid his body in the grave with the burial service provided by our church. May God bless and care for his widow and orphans!

Walnut Grove, Miss.

FISHBURN.—Died, in the town of Jackson, La., May 2, 1892, T. J., second son of Mr. W. Fishburn, after only a few hours' illness.

Again our town has been visited by the silent hand of death. Pure, fair lilies are often suddenly torn from their stalks by hands of thoughtless flower-gatherers. Our dear little T. J. may, in a degree, be compared to this lily flower; but the hand that plucked him from the garden of life was that of a kind and loving Father, who, as the evening shadows gathered round the earth, tenderly bore our little friend upward to his home, where he is now transplanted amid flowers that neither fade nor decay and the blighting dews of death never fall.

We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family. May they find comfort in the hope of meeting him in his bright home! For some time T. J. has been a member of my Sunday-school class, and a sweeter, better, purer child a teacher never had the privilege to instruct. He seemed to take pleasure in listening to words of instruction from the Book of Life. His face lent added charms to the recitation hour, and now—ah! how we will miss it in days to come! Sleep on, dear one, in thy bright home. May we meet thee when our career has been finished here in the heavenly home above, where glorious anthems of praise will continue to swell throughout the endless cycles of eternity. Farewell!

ROSA TABORA.

AUSTIN.—Mrs. M. C. AUSTIN (nee Reames), wife of L. S. Austin, was born Feb. 4, 1855, and died April 4, 1892.

Sister Austin identified herself with the M. E. Church, South, when quite young, and consecrated a life of many days to the service of her Lord and Master. Having in view her pure character, unflinching faith and exemplary life, we may well say, she "being dead, yet speaketh." On account of some infirmity of the thigh, which caused intense suffering at times, she was deprived of the comfort of communion with God's people in the sanctuary; but in humble resignation she offered the sweet incense of prayer upon the home altar.

These ills of the flesh are more than compensated in ascriptions of praise to God and to the Lamb. We tender our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family.

J. T. LEWETT.

DUNNING.—Mrs. L. F. DUNNING, wife of R. Dunning, was born Nov. 11, 1861, and died March 8, 1892.

She joined the Methodist Church in her sixteenth year, and lived consistently to the end of her life. She spoke calmly of death, and seemed to have no fears, her only regret being that she must leave her loving husband and four little children. May God, who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, be ever merciful to the loved ones she has left behind! May they always feel that they have now a greater interest in heaven than ever before.

G. A. GUICE.

CONERLY.—Miss CORINNE A. CONERLY was born in 1845, and died in Avon, Miss., March 12, 1892. She professed religion and joined the church in her thirteenth year, and lived a consistent life to the day of her death. She exhibited her faith by her works. We believe she is better off in the world above. A FRIEND.

SEE WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT IT.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone.—Rev. Jas. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp-meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tune. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Westlake's Herald.

After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the notation of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Westlake's Herald.

From Nashville.

Only last week our city was much surprised to read in the morning papers that the Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., had been elected regent of Belmont College. Dr. Young has more than a continental reputation as a preacher, lecturer, platform speaker, traveler, scholar, author. Belmont College is the youngest of the full-fledged colleges for the higher education of young ladies in Nashville. It owns and occupies the old "Cheatham Place"—mansion and grounds—one of the handsomest "places" in this city of splendid suburbs. In ante-bellum times this Cheatham Place was the home of wealth and refinement. It is two miles from the public square, and crowns a wooded eminence with a stately mansion, surrounded by ample grounds beautifully laid off in walks, drives, terraces and beds, and ornamented with summer-houses, bowers, lakes, fountains, statuary, shrubbery, flowers and forest trees, having its own conservatory, waterworks and gas. About two years ago this property was purchased and converted into a college for young ladies, and was crowded from the start, with the Misses Hood and Heron in charge, and Capt. W. T. Glasgow, business manager. The election of Dr. Young as regent crowns him as the reigning sovereign of the "lady college," as the young people call it. He will add ample and ornamental buildings, and remodel the old mansion and convert it into one of the finest colleges in the South, with every modern convenience and fixture, making it not the city as a massive pile of architecture grand in its proportions, and "high and lifted up" above surrounding objects.

From the opening of the next Fall term Dr. Young will devote his whole time to the college, superintending its every interest, and doing such teaching and lecturing as may be provided for in the schedule. He will have a large, well equipped lecture hall, where he will lecture on history, literature, language, travels, the manners and customs of peoples, etc., in courses through the seasons, and do such other work as will help forward the higher education of the young ladies. We are sure him from the pastorate. His engagement is for ten years. This will be a fitting crown and finale to his glorious life. No man is better qualified to fill such a place, and no place is better suited to fill out such a life.

Rev. Joseph B. West, D. D., died in Nashville, Sunday night, May 22. He had been a member of the Tennessee Conference nearly fifty years, and had filled about all of its appointments. This was his second year in the Clarksville station, where he was greatly beloved. He had filled the presidency of two of our colleges, and was a marked success as an educator; but the pulpit was the throne of his power. As a preacher, he had few superiors. His mind was massive, clear and incisive. His preaching was textual and topical, in a style elevated and ornate, shading sometimes into the quaint, the humorous, the graphic, and often with a tender pathos that was melting and moving. He was one of the most fascinating writers that we had, though his pen was not at all prolific. He was genial and social to a degree, and no man had more friends than he. He was tenderly sympathetic and personally magnetic, and a man of convictions, courage, heroism, faith, power. He ranked up well with the great men of former times, whose pulpit eloquence and forensic power made the "old Jerusalem Conference" famous. Though quite feeble for some months, he literally "fell at his post," full of faith and of the Holy Ghost. The ranks are growing thin at the front, and the giants are passing, one by one, into the light. But the rear ranks are being built up, and the hosts are pressing to the front and pushing the battle to the gates. We shall miss him, and see but few of his like again.

VANDERBILT.
We lose three professors from the Vanderbilt University this year. Prof. Lewis goes to the great Chicago University to fill the chair of economics; Prof. Deering goes to the University at Cleveland, Ohio, to fill the chair of economic languages; and Dr. A. Coke Smith goes back into the pastorate, having been appointed by Bishop Doane to Granby Street Church, Norfolk, Va., to fill out the unexpired term of Dr. Evans, who goes into the Episcopal Church. We are sorry to lose these men from the university and from Nashville. They are each capable and successful in their specialties. The two former will put new life into the institutions to which they go, and the latter will preach the Word with power and marked ability to the "City by the Sea." Dr. Coke Smith is a great favorite in the pulpits of Nashville, and his going from us is deeply regretted; but, then, he may return. In the evolutions of the itinerant wheel we know not where the periphery will touch.

THE LOTTERY.
I have wanted to cheer your grand State and throw up my hat over the great victory your citizens were able to achieve, by the help of God, over the infamous lottery. All honor to Louisiana!

And think of Bishop Keener's golden wedding! How does the silly question, "Is marriage a failure?" look in the light of a honeymoon of fifty years, with three sons and a daughter in the ministry, and an eternity of nuptial bliss before them?

And your great Seashore Camp Meeting. How I want to be there this Summer! And I may.

"The Greater Responsibility."

The women should not abate a tithe of their energy and efforts to raise money for missions. The cry of earth's millions of perishing souls, and the responsibility God has laid upon us of taking them the Word of Life, are all too great for anyone to hold back for any cause, real or imaginary. If they have a hundred thousand dollars on hand, let them plan largely and pray mightily to God to give them the needed missionaries, and the answer will come. "Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." Then, if they should ever have one or a hundred thousand dollars, for which they have not immediate need, and the Parent Board should be in distress, let them say, "Here it is, without interest, till we need it." This will give them the heart of the church, which will be worth more to them than a hundred per cent. interest on a hundred thousand dollars for a hundred years. Let the women alone for a while. They are our mothers, wives and sisters.

So the Parent Board has no surplus, but is a hundred thousand dollars in debt! Well, have they nothing to show for it? Did anybody steal it? No. Did they put it in it had securities, and lose it? No. Then what did they do with this money?—and what account can they make of it? Let us suppose it was all sent to Mexico, and I will answer the question. For every seventy dollars, or about that sum, a soul was converted and joined the church, and is either now in heaven, or joyously on the road. Mind, this seventy dollars was for all purposes—preaching, salaries, building and repairing churches, education, taxes, printing, etc. Can any home Conference show a better record? Was ever a hundred thousand dollars more judiciously or successfully used? Does the church, or any member thereof, complain and feel indisposed to take part in this investment? If so, oblige your part up to the brave men in that field. They will pay it. They can not put the dollars and interest in the bank at Nashville, but they will satisfy the Lord Jesus Christ. How? By giving their lives in the effort to do the work that justice could only ask of three times their number. I thank God that I have a large interest in that debt, and I have paid a premium on every dollar I have in it. When I left Mexico last December, I thought I was coming home to die, but no man's money could have bought my interest. I had a letter from Mexico the other day, telling me the health of Bro. Grimes had failed, and he had gone home for a season. He has been there for ten years, without a day's absence, and though he may have come home to die, all the wealth of Tennessee, with the bank that holds the note against the Board, could not buy him out. Dr. J. W. Lambuth has given Japan a large credit with his life; and unless the church hurries up reinforcements, the salaries of men whose health has failed, or who have died, will soon cancel the debt. Does the church, or any member thereof, wish to settle it that way? If so, the men in the field will pay the last dollar with the last six cents of interest.

I am of the opinion that our foreign mission fund can and should be relieved of a burden it is forced to carry. I refer to the work, exclusive of the Indian Mission, it is forced to do in the United States. More than one-fifth, or $59,493 out of a total appropriation of $259,966, made at the last meeting of the Board is for this work. The money for this branch of the work should be drawn from the domestic mission collection in the several Annual Conferences, which amounted last year to $129,507.23.

If the next General Conference would make this change, and our Bishops would see that no missions were formed in the Conference, and the local Boards would refuse to appropriate money, except to such, and the amounts, as were recommended by the District Conferences, as the law requires, it would take but little more than the present collection to meet the necessities of both. This could be done without the multiplication of a single office or officer in the administration, as it would only change the source of the receipts, and not of the outlay of a single dollar. At the same time it would emphasize the importance of the domestic missionary collection, and allow every dollar contributed to foreign missions to go where it should go—into foreign fields. Let us think and pray over these things.

Seashore District Conference.

The District Conference of the Seashore district, Mississippi Conference, for the current year, was held at Purvis, Miss., May 12-14, 1892. Rev. John A. Ellis, P. E., opened the Conference; but was unable, on account of great weakness (not having fully recovered from a severe illness), to remain in the chair continuously. At his request, several of the brethren occupied the chair during the session. The attendance was unusually large. There were twenty ministers and a large number of laymen present. The occasion was made pleasant and profitable by the kind and brotherly spirit that prevailed, and by the gratifying reports from the pastors on the work and interests of the church in their charges. These reports evinced the fact that very decided advancement had resulted from the faithful labors of the earnest preachers and consecrated laymen of the district.

Revs. A. F. Watkins, J. W. Chambers and J. W. McLaurin were the visitors. Their presence, speeches and sermons were enjoyed by all. Bro. Watkins addressed the Conference in the interest of Mississippi College and the Epworth League movement. Both addresses were replete with fine thoughts, delivered in fascinating rhetoric. The Epworth League speech was particularly good. It provoked a vote of thanks from the Conference.

Bro. Chambers spoke for the Joint Board of Finance in behalf of the Conference claimants. He made some very gratifying statements concerning the practical workings of the plan adopted at the last session of the Mississippi Conference for quarterly payment of the assessments for the superannuates, and widows and orphans of the deceased preachers. Many were delighted to hear Bro. Chambers state that it was the purpose of the Joint Board to faithfully endeavor to increase the collections until every deserving claimant should have a comfortable support—every preacher $400, and every widow $200.

Bro. McLaurin spoke in behalf of the American Bible Society. He asked, in the name of the society, for the appointment of a permanent committee, whose duty it shall be to secure the co-operation of the Sunday-school superintendents throughout the district in an effort to put the Bible into the hands of every child. Rev. R. B. Downer was appointed to this work. Let every Sunday-school superintendent in the district take due notice thereof, and govern himself accordingly.

John A. McLeod, J. L. Dantzler, Rev. H. J. Harris and S. S. Cope were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. W. K. Ramsey and J. P. Carter were chosen as the alternates. Dr. E. F. Griffin, W. A. White, J. L. Dantzler and J. P. Carter were elected trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground. By resolution the Conference expressed its gratification at Bro. Ellis' improvement in health, and requested him to desist from all labor until he had fully recovered from his recent severe illness. It is to be hoped that all the pastors of the district will remember and be governed by the resolution.

Purvis entertained the Conference handsomely. Pastor Howell can not be surpassed in constant and kind attention to his guests.

Next session will be held at Pearl-ington. T. W. ADAMS, Sec.

Your Committee on Bible Cause submit the following as their report:

We note with gratification the commendable, as well as prodigious, undertaking of the American Bible Society to put a Bible into the hands of every child in every Sunday-school in the land that can read.

The society, through its district superintendent, Rev. J. W. McLaurin, asks the appointment of a permanent committee in the Seashore district, whose duty it shall be to enlist the co-operation of the superintendents of all the Sunday-schools in our church within the bounds of the district in bringing about this happily-conceived and devoutly-to-be-desired consummation.

We nominate and recommend the appointment of Rev. R. B. Downer to this position.

In order to insure the success of this enterprise, be it

Resolved, By the members of the Seashore district, in Conference assembled, that we, both pastors and laymen, will give Bro. Downer our hearty sympathy and support in the prosecution of this part of the Master's work.

Meridian District Conference.

Conference convened at Waynesboro, Miss., Saturday, May 21, 1892, at nine A. M., and adjourned on Monday, May 23, at half past five P. M.; T. L. Mellen, P. E., in the chair. Seventeen preachers, representing as many pastoral charges, and twenty-five lay delegates answered to roll-call. Written reports and systematic adherence to business rules not only expedited matters, but gave time for the discussion of the most important needs, besides giving the Conference and congregation the benefit of three sermons daily. There was an absence of acrimony, and each seemed anxious to get at the bottom facts. The district evidenced zeal and aggressiveness on part of presiding elder, and the earnest desire for faithful work on part of preachers. The church-buildings erected, even in the midst of "money dearth," are modern, and reflect much credit. Missals College and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE were, of course, ably represented, respectively, by Revs. A. F. Watkins and B. F. Lewis. The brethren are not only perpetual wanderers, but seem to be reaching out after ubiquity. East Mississippi Female College was shown to be doing excellent work. C. W. Anderson, its president, was present as a lay delegate. Blinnville and Daleville schools were favorably mentioned. The resolutions of condolence to the wife and home of J. W. Lambuth, deceased, in Japan, were prayerful and tender. The preachers and laymen for, at least, one District Conference were all present on Sunday, and it, indeed, proved a Sabbath of delight. Services that day were as follows: Bible study, half-past nine A. M., by L. P. Brown; sermon, eleven A. M., by T. L. Mellen, P. E., followed by an $800 collection, and the dedication of the beautiful, commodious new church-building; love-feast, three P. M., by Rev. J. W. Chambers; sermon, half-past four P. M., by Rev. B. F. Lewis; sermon, eight P. M., by Rev. A. F. Watkins, followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

The following were elected as delegates to the Annual Conference: T. P. Bell, L. P. Brown, D. S. Harmon; alternates, J. S. Turner and T. C. Harmon.

The hospitality of the people of Waynesboro was of a genuine type, and prayers will linger in the hearts of many of the entertained for an altar in each home.

J. V. Penn, P. C., has certainly done a fine work in the speedy erection and furnishing of such an edifice without debt or questionable entertainments, and all indications at this hour point to a very early great spiritual ingathering.

Scoboa was unanimously selected as the place for the holding of the next Conference.

While the Conference was largely attended, and exhibited positive growth, and, by close comparison, will prove second to none in the Mississippi Conference, yet a few accurate statistics should serve to arouse every thoughtful reader, both within and beyond its pales.

Members of the church, 5,556; accessions on profession of faith since last District Conference, 428; congregations with no prayer meeting, 51; congregations with no class meeting, 72; family altars, 230; church papers taken, 389; members who lead in public prayer, 523; Sunday-school membership, 2,182; Sunday-schools fully supplied with Bibles, 3. About 4,000 sermons (minimum). Sunday-school machinery, evangelistic labors, pastoral visitation, church schools and all other helps brought into the church only 428 souls—far below the natural birth-increase. About 1,112 membership homes and only 230 family altars. Sunday-school membership more than fifty per cent. under the church membership.

These are only some of the plain facts. Dearth of Bibles, neglected class meetings, scarcity of church papers, extinguished family altar fires, and, alas! lack of power in the pulpit and in the pew, are all unmistakably plainly indicated. "West Wayne Mission" was established, Elbert T. Breland was at once appointed to the work, and the money for his support was raised in the District Conference.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. J. Smylie, P. C., May 30: "On the fourth Sunday in May the Sunday-school at Slaughter, La., celebrated Children's Day. It was a red-letter day for Slaughter. The church beautifully decorated, the children well drilled upon the programme, the pastor present with his children's speech. Everything passed off nicely, reflecting great credit upon superintendent and teachers. Wish we could have more of these occasions during the year."

Rev. W. T. Griffin, Terry, Miss., May 26: "We have just closed a meeting at this place, with gratifying results. The church much revived; four accessions. The cause of God has been brought before the people with another earnestness as to accomplish much good. We are indebted to Bros. Burton, Cammack and West for efficient and faithful work, the former having once been pastor here; Bro. Cammack, with his usual earnestness, and Bro. West, who gave us of his storehouse of religious truths. Our work is moving smoothly, and we are on the upward grade."

Rev. T. W. Lewis, Holly Springs, Miss., May 28: "Just returned from Potts Camp, where Bro. Edmondson has a tremendous meeting in progress. A number have been converted, old troubles settled, and the whole town stirred. I have organized a Sunday-school at a school-house two and a half miles north of Holly Springs, and appointed John B. Johnson, an Epworth League of Holly Springs, to superintend the Sunday-school. Have thirty members to begin with. Have received thirty-three into the church here since Conference. Have 215 in Sunday-school and 75 in Epworth League."

Rev. J. F. Evans, P. C., North Mississippi Conference, June 1: "Our meeting closed last Sunday at Durant, after three weeks' duration. We had a fine meeting. We trust much good was done. The church revived, several conversions; eight joined the church on profession of faith, and four by certificate. The most of the preaching, after the District Conference adjourned, was done by J. R. Roberson, of Newport; L. D. Worsham, of Ethel, and R. A. Burroughs, the presiding elder of Kosciusko district. Many thanks to the brethren. Our church at Durant is in fine working trim. A fine Sunday-school and spiritual prayer meetings."

Rev. H. Armstrong, Lafayette, La., May 19: "As we have no big cards at our office now, will you not accept a note from this charge on a half sheet? We preach twice here every Sunday, except once a month we and our congregation go to Dr. Fraser's Church at night (Presbyterian). Our prayer meeting is led by this pastor, and our faithful presiding elder, Bro. J. A. Millor. We have a Ladies' Aid Society and a W. C. T. U., which was organized by Miss Belle Kearney a few weeks ago; and this week Miss Ida Hopkins, an accomplished and devoted member of our flock, organized a Band of Hope under encouraging auspices. Miss Maggie Jamieson, one of our faithful Sunday-school teachers, aided in the organization. What could any of us do without the encouragement and work of the ladies? We do not believe the men would do half as much if it were not for the ladies. In consequence of the recent children's service on Easter Sunday, we have deferred 'Children's Day' exercises until the first Sunday in June."

Rev. J. M. Cowan, Martin circuit, June 1: "I have been waiting for something to 'turn up,' so that I could write to the ADVOCATE, and, sure enough, it has. On last Monday evening the good ladies of this community, under the leadership of Sister W. R. McDonald, came with baskets and buckets filled with such things that always make the prophet and his dear wife feel good. Call this a 'ponding,' as you may; only suffice it to say, the pantry was replenished. Condition of this charge moderately good. At Martin, after a hot fight, prohibition reigns. At Cane Ridge spiritual progress slow, but steady. At Rodney many good people; church doing well, considering a few difficulties; high water, no house of worship; have to depend upon kindness of Presbyterian brethren. At Russum spirituality and finances at a low ebb. Expended on our parsonage this year, $35.50."

Rev. W. M. Sullivan, Franklinton, La., May 20: "We held our second Quarterly Conference on the thirteenth. Our beloved presiding elder was at his post. We are moving on smoothly here. The people are very kind to us. We have in cash and good subscription the most of the collections ordered by the Conference. The general state of the church, we think, is better than when we came here. We have three regular prayer meetings; there were none when we came. Fourteen accessions; seven infants baptized; removed, six; no deaths this year. We are forced to use the pruning-knife in our church. We are arranging for revival meetings. We are in a nice little country town, and these people here do not storm or pounce their preacher (we like this), but they are constantly sending such things as will gladden the hearts of the preacher and his family. We have a nice little school. It is taught by Miss Lewis. She has given universal satisfaction. She is a good teacher, a conscientious Christian. Her influence is for good always. We are very glad to learn that she is to teach another session for us."

Rev. J. J. Smylie, P. C., Clinton, La., May 30: "As there has been nothing written to the ADVOCATE from Clinton this year, a few notes may be of interest to some, at least. We recently closed a revival of great power. It is said to be, by those who know, the best meeting that has been held here since the war. There were between thirty and fifty conversions; some as bright as I ever saw. Thirty joined the church. Taking everything into consideration—the lack of interest in the salvation of souls on the part of the majority of the church members, the world and the devil in every shape and form imaginable—we had a glorious meeting, a wonderful victory. Glory to God for salvation! Our church is in a better condition, spiritually, than for years. The devil contended every inch of ground desperately. There were only a few of us in the fight; but we determined, by the help of God, to have a meeting. The Lord honored us, the Holy Spirit came, and we won. The glory and praise to God. The pastor did the preaching for almost the first week. Then Bro. N. B. Norwood came to his relief, preaching twice daily for about two weeks. His preaching was with wonderful power; sharp, pointed, practical. Often while speaking his countenance would be luminous with the Holy Spirit. Bro. Sam Hodge and Bro. George Anders were with us, doing good work. Bro. Anders preached for several days, closing the meeting for us. Pray for us, that the good work may continue. It is a hard fight."

Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D.

We regard the present as an opportune time to publish the following paper, which has been in our office for some time. We received it from Rev. J. M. Rollins, Kobe, Japan.

Kobe, Japan, May 1, 1891.

The following is a faithful account of my conviction of sin in early life, and my conversion to God more than forty-one years since; and I pray God to bless the words spoken to the good of all who are seeking the way of salvation through Christ Jesus, the Savior of all men. Many persons desire to become Christians, but they know not the way. Some think when they have been baptized with water that they are true Christians, and are, therefore, safe. Some think there is nothing more for them to do but to be regular at church and observe all the outward forms of Christianity. But this is a great mistake. A sinner can do that, yet know nothing of the love of God in his heart. Many are deceiving themselves, and are still in their sins. This was my condition for many years. I thought I was a Christian because I was regular at church and observed all the outward forms of Christianity; but I was deceiving myself—I was being deceived by the devil. I thought a profession of Christianity was sufficient, but Paul says: "The kingdom of God is not in word, but in power." (1 Cor. iv, 20.)

But I knew nothing of that power when I joined the church at the age of eight, and I relate my experience while a stranger to God. I will also give the facts of my conversion, hoping that it may be the means, by the blessing of God, to help some to seek and find this saving power through faith in Christ. "The Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (Heb. iv, 12.)

On the second day of March, 1850, I was born in the State of Alabama, in the United States. My father and my mother loved me, and did all they could to make me pleasant for me. I had everything that I could wish for in this life. While very young I was taught to pray and read the Word of God. I was often reminded of the love of God, and I soon learned to love the name of Jesus. My father and mother told me of the love of Jesus, and why he came from heaven, suffered and died; and it made a deep impression upon my mind. My grandfather and my father and my brother were all preachers. At the early age of five I loved to be with God's people, and I was very fond of singing Christian hymns. One of the first verses in the Bible which I learned was the sixteenth verse of the third chapter of John. When eight years of age I felt that I was a sinner, and was led by the Spirit of God to seek by prayer for the forgiveness of my sins. It was then I joined the church, but I knew nothing of the power of true conversion. I knew nothing of the blessed and sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit. I knew nothing of the love of God, and of the love of Christ as my Savior. I knew nothing of the true joy of the Christian whose sins are pardoned. I was still in my sins, and was a Christian only in name. I went with the people of God, and met with them for worship; but to me it was all an outward form, for I knew nothing of the power of Christianity in the soul. I was "dead in trespasses and sins." (Eph. ii, 1.) I thought, if I belonged to the church, that was sufficient, and I would at last be saved. I had been troubled in my conscience on account of my sins, and mistook conviction for conversion.

There was one thing I could not understand. I saw many Christians rejoicing and praising God, and they said they were happy, and had an inexpressible joy in their hearts. I was astonished at this, and I asked myself many times what all this meant, and seeing this, I was made miserable. The more I thought of it the more certain I was that they possessed something in their hearts which I did not possess. They could praise God, and their rejoicing was not only a mystery to me, but it condemned me and made me miserable. This greatly troubled me, and I felt I was deceiving myself and deceiving others.

When I was ten years old I went with my father to many meetings in the State of Tennessee, and then I saw hundreds and thousands of persons made happy by the forgiveness of their sins. There I heard Rev. Fountain E. Pitts preach, and it seemed he could read every thought of my heart. This was the Word of God piercing my very soul. At that time I heard Rev. J. B. Walker preach one night, and his sermon so impressed me that I told my father I saw a great light come down upon his head. He is still a faithful minister of Jesus Christ in the city of New Orleans. At one of these meetings my brother, Alexander, was converted and made happy in the forgiveness of his sins, and he praised God; but I found no peace to my burdened soul. I continued to be a member of the church, but not a happy Christian. The burden of sin pressed heavily upon me, and I often wept over my condition. Year after year I continued in this state, and knew not how to get rid of this burden of sin which was pressing me down. The thought of being a Christian only in name weighed heavily upon me. I possessed no joy as other Christians seemed to have, and I could not understand it. I remained in that state for twelve long years, seeking the forgiveness of my sins, and utterly devoid of any peace in my heart. I observed all the outward forms of Christian worship, and I tried to come to Christ for pardon, and renewing grace; but I fear I rested too much in the form without knowing anything of the spirit.

At the age of twenty, when I was at the University of Mississippi, there was a great revival among the students, and many of them were converted to God. The Word of God was "quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing and dividing my soul and spirit," and I felt condemned before God. Deep conviction took hold of my soul, and I felt that hell, with all its terrors and everlasting destruction, was before me, and I knew not how to escape. For twelve days and nights the burden of my sins pressed upon me, and hell seemed ready to swallow me up. My suffering was intense, and I prayed as I never prayed before, for the Spirit of God was striving with me. I felt that the anger of God rested upon me, and in great agony of mind I prayed for the forgiveness of my sins. Judge Longstreet was then president of the university, and a Methodist preacher, and he saw my distress of mind. Dr. Wadell, a Presbyterian minister, was then professor of languages, and still lives, a faithful servant of God. He, too, saw my great distress. Dr. Burney, the Cumberland Presbyterian preacher in Oxford at that time, saw my condition. He still lives to labor for Christ. All of these servants of God took a deep interest in me, and tried to lead me to Christ. Many earnest Christians, seeing my great distress, prayed with me, and tried to show me how to trust in Christ, and give my heart to God. All was dark before me, and it seemed there was no hope for me. I felt that God was justly angry with me for my sins and the hardness of my heart, and I could see no way of escape. Kind Christian friends continued, without ceasing, to point me to Jesus, the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world. My distress became so great I could not sleep, and my appetite was taken from me. I could not continue my studies in the university, and asked the professors to excuse me from my classes, that I might give myself to the reading of God's words and prayer. I prayed in my room, and, finding no comfort, I went into the field and in the grove, where I could be alone with God; and then, falling on my face before God, I poured out my soul in prayer to him. As I prayed, I pleaded his great love for sinners. I pleaded the promises of the Lord Jesus Christ to all who believe in him, and I pleaded his suffering, death, resurrection and ascension. It seemed the more I prayed, the more intense my suffering became, and I felt the weight of my sins rushing me down to hell. The sufferings of St. Paul under deep conviction could not have been greater than what I suffered. I attended church, and the Word of God seemed to pierce my very soul. The judgment and condemnation of God seemed to rest upon me. Again and again the people of God prayed for me, and I began to feel there was no hope for me. I was on the very verge of despair, so great was my distress. God's Word, like an arrow, pierced my inmost soul, and for twelve days great distress and agony of mind overwhelmed me, and I cried to God for mercy. I was then brought to the point when I could hold out no longer against the command of God. I cast myself into his hand and yielded all for him to do with me as he saw fit. Yes, my whole soul and body I gave a living sacrifice. Nothing short of that would satisfy God. Self and self-interest had reigned supreme in my heart, and I had been unwilling to yield all to God, and let him reign supreme in my heart; but I knew it not.

It was the Sabbath day in the afternoon when a few of God's people had assembled in church for prayer. I went there, too, to pray, and to try once more to give my heart to God, and to pray that my load of sin might be taken away. These Christian friends saw my agony and distress, and prayed earnestly for me as I knelt in the church. The words of Jesus, in Matt. xi, 28, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," seemed to have a new meaning to me. I think I had been engaged about half an hour in earnest, agonizing prayer to God, when suddenly a great burden of sin rolled away and unpeakable joy filled my soul. I felt this great weight of sin roll off from my soul as sensibly as though a great mountain had been removed, and I realized the presence of God's Holy Spirit, and for the first time I understood, from happy experience, what it was to be baptized with the Holy Spirit. I had never before experienced such a change, and inexpressible joy filled my soul. It was then, for the first time, I knew of the power of his grace upon the heart. It was then I knew, for the first time, what the love of Jesus Christ was in all its depth and height, which caused him to die for our sins. Then I could understand something of the blessings of the Holy Spirit witnessing in the hearts of Christians. Many times since then have I praised God that he did not cut me off in my sins, but in great mercy revealed himself to me in love, and for the sake of Christ, my Savior, pardoned all my sins.

Oh, how I have loved and prized the Word of God since that time! It was his Word, through the blessing of the Holy Spirit, that brought conviction and conversion to my soul. I saw plainly at that time, and since then, that I had trusted to my prayers and outward form of worship. It was pride in my heart that kept me away from God. I was ashamed to have people see me humble myself and seek the forgiveness of my sins. It was pride and love of sin that kept me from humbling myself before God and yielding all to him. I was unwilling to give up self and self-pride and self-interest, and humble myself before God. Unless we do this, we need never to expect the forgiveness of our sins and the gift of God's Holy Spirit. We must yield all to God and let him bless us in his way, and not as we would have it. We must cease from the exaltation of self, sink in ourselves, and rise in God, and turning our hearts heavenward to him, before we can expect his blessing.

The humbling of self before God is the first step toward receiving his blessing, which will surely come if we continue in that state of mind and heart. Humility before God brings true repentance of sin, and will surely secure the blessing of God. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Matt. xxiii, 12.) "Believe and be saved." What can be plainer than this? True conversion makes a universal change within us. It makes a new man a new creature in Christ. Trust not in self or good works, but look to Christ on the cross, and trust in him, just as you are, with all your sins, and God will forgive you, and fill your soul with unspeakable joy and peace.

A sinner "saved by grace through faith." (Eph. ii, 8.)

Easter.

I have read with much interest the articles pro and con on this subject by the brethren and sisters. Heretofore I have felt no desire to take part in the controversy, either one way or the other, although I have all my life protested against the innovation of Easter. However, since several have written on the subject, and many have become interested, I will join the ranks of writers, not merely to "see my name in print," but to give a helping hand and hand to our time-honored institutions, and to enter a protest against a heathen innovation.

I think Bro. Mellen correct in his views as regards Easter; and I further think that it is the duty of every person who loves the simplicity of the Methodist doctrines to raise a voice in support of these doctrines and cry aloud against the tendency which we, as a church, have of aping others.

Let us examine this word "Easter." It matters not whether Easter Day and Easter Sunday are the same or not; Christians should not be concerned with either, if our authorities are correct in their definition of the word.

Watson, Schaff-Herzog, and McClintock and Strong all define it about alike. They say: "Easter is a word of Saxon origin, and imports a goddess of the East, Eostre, in honor of whom, sacrifices being annually offered about the Passover-time of the year (Spring), the name became attached by association of ideas to the Christian festival of the resurrection which happened at the time of the Passover." Here we see that Easter is a heathen idol, and that the name "became attached to the Christian festival of the resurrection" simply "by the association of ideas." It is not a scriptural term, nor in any way of divine origin. It is a word that was never used by our Lord or the inspired apostles, as we will have occasion to notice later on.

Adam Clarke says: "The term 'Easter' (referring to the St. James' translation of Acts xii, 14), inserted here by our translators, they borrowed from the ancient Anglo-Saxon service books. . . . The Saxon Easter, Eastre, Eastre and Eastren are different modes of spelling the name of the goddess Eostre, whose festival was celebrated by our pagan forefathers in the month of April; hence that month in the Saxon calendar is called Easter month. Every view we can take of this subject shows the gross impropriety of retaining a name every way exceptional and palpably absurd."

These authorities can not be questioned. Dr. Watson was a standard theological writer of our own church, and his works are now text-books for our students. Dr. Clarke was also of our church and an authority for us. His Commentaries are not only recommended by our Discipline, but used by our preachers. Schaff-Herzog and McClintock and Strong are celebrated writers, whose deep piety and correct judgments, so far as I know, have never been doubted. They are authorities recognized by our church.

As for John Kehle, who has been quoted by some of the supporters of Easter as authority, he does himself admit that "Easter is derived from a Saxon word," although he suppressed the larger part of the truth. He was a High-Churchman, and in very close proximity to Romanism. He held to tradition. But as to his teachings, we will let McClintock and Strong explain. In their Cyclopædia we find: "John Kehle is noted also as the leader of the original band of Oxford scholars and divines who began the so-called 'Puseyite' movement in the English Church. He contributed to the famous 'Tracts of the Times,' and it is to Kehle's influence over Newman that the latter ascribes his conversion to Romanism, dating it from July 14, 1832, when Kehle preached his sermon on 'National Apostasy.'" But what did "Puseyism" and the "Tracts of the Times," of which Kehle was the leader, teach? McClintock and Strong say: "Apostolical Succession, Priestly Absolution, The Real Presence, the Authority of the Church, and of Tradition." Says Kehle in one of his sermons: "Consistent patristical tradition is the record of that oral teaching of the apostles which the Holy Spirit inspired." By this patristical tradition, which these tractarians extolled as an infallible interpretation of Scripture and test of doctrinal truth, they understood the voice of Catholic authority, or the voice of the theologians of the Nicene age, of the fourth century; and yet a majority of them at one time were devoted to the Arian heresy. I do not consider such a man a safe guide for Methodist people. Schaff-Herzog does not show him up in any better light than McClintock and Strong. All show him to be buried in Romish superstition and idolatry. No wonder that he drove Newman, his friend, into the Romish Church! Those were the doctrines he taught, and those were the means he used as far as he was able. He would gladly have made Roman Catholics of Methodists too; but Methodism was too pure in those days. It was just as it were, from the plastic hand of God. Were he living now, doubtless he could convert some so-called Methodists—those who have left the teachings of Wesley, Clarke and Watson—to Roman superstition and heathen idolatry; but he could never change an old-time Methodist who loves Jesus Christ too well to mock him by paying homage to a heathen goddess on the day of his resurrection.

"Kitt's Popular Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature" nowhere mentions Easter, although it contains a considerable article on the Passover. "We say Easter Day, Easter Sunday, but very improperly; as we by no means refer to the festival then kept to the goddess of the ancient Saxons." ("McClintock and Strong's Cyclopædia.") According to this we improperly use the word "Easter," which I contend that we do, and should cease doing so, or else we substitute the heathen idol Easter, Eostre, or Ostara, which imports licentiousness and indecency, for the true Christian Passover. Or, in other words, we are worshipping and offering sacrifices to Baal and not to Christ, our Lord. It would be well for some of the brethren and sisters to read carefully Gal. iv, 9-11.

"The commemoration of the death of Christ was called pascha staurōstōn, or the Passover proper. The commemoration of the resurrection was called pascha anastōstōn, and afterwards Maester. . . . The Christian Passover naturally grew out of the Jewish Passover, as the Lord's day grew out of the Sabbath; the paschal lamb being regarded as a prophetic type of Christ, the Lamb of God slain for our sins (1 Cor. iv, 7, 8), and the deliverance from the bondage of Egypt as a type of the redemption from sin. It is certainly the oldest and most important annual festival of the church, and can be traced back to the first century, or, at all events, to the middle of the second." (Schaff's "History of the Christian Church.")

We learn here the object of the festival, as well as its history. It was first known as Passover, the scriptural term; "afterwards Easter." This was the legitimate child of heathenish tendencies—a desire to serve the devil rather than God. Then as Easter afterwards came in, it is an innovation unless commanded in the Bible.

Let us attend to this point. Schaff, in his "History of the Christian Church," says: "Nevertheless, the translation 'Easter' for 'Passover' in the English version—Acts xii, 4—is a strange anachronism (corrected in the revision)." McClintock and Strong, in their Cyclopædia, say: "The occurrence of this word (Easter) in Acts xii, 4—'intending after Easter to bring him forth to his people'—is chiefly noticeable as an example of the want of consistency in the translators." They further say that everywhere else in the Bible the word is translated "Passover." The revised translation renders Acts xii, 4, "Passover." Wesley, in his "Notes on the New Testament," translates the word in this passage "Passover." Adam Clarke, in commenting on this verse, says with reference to the King James' translation: "Perhaps there never was a more unhappy, not to say absurd, translation than that of our text."

Without any doubt Easter is an innovation, heathenish, and it is wrong to use it. History teaches us that vital religion always gives way to forms, displays, big words, innovations and worldliness. We, as Methodists, are rapidly tending toward this. Let us call a halt and face about before it is too late. Spirituality is what we want, what we need and what we must retain.

It is useless to argue that because we have larger crowds and raise more money on these days, that the Spirit of God is in the work. A theatrical troop or circus may have a larger audience and raise more money than a Christian service, yet I can not believe that that advantage is due to the Spirit of God being present. There are other things that I might mention in this connection; but I trust this will suffice.

Then let us drop the idolatrous name. We could with equal propriety call Christ, Baal. Cling to the Bible and its teachings; carry Christ in our hearts, regardless of other churches or the world's opinion; and then the star of Methodism—true Christianity—will never set so long as there remains a fragment of eternally.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—June 12, 1892.

By Rev. W. H. LA PRADÉ.

The Den of Lions.

Daniel vi, 16-28.

TIME.—About B. C. 540.
PLACE.—Babylon.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"No manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God."—Verse 25.

Daniel was now between eighty and eighty-five years of age, having been in Babylon about seventy years. The mighty Nebuchadnezzar was dead, and the Chaldean dynasty had passed away under the reign of his disolute and weak grandson, Belshazzar. The Medes and Persians, under the leadership of Cyrus (the nephew of Darius the Mede, and general-in-chief of his armies), had conquered Babylon, and Darius was reigning at the date of our lesson.

The great ability, unquestioned integrity and divinely-bestowed power as a seer which characterized Daniel, had secured to him prominence and safety all through the changes that had come to Babylon, and Darius made him first president of the one hundred and twenty satraps through whom he governed his realm. This honor stirred the envy of the satraps, and they planned his downfall.

His ability as a statesman and his constant fidelity to his trust were too well known for them to hope to successfully attack him at either of these points. After considering the matter their conclusion is recorded in verse 5 of this chapter.

No higher praise could be given Daniel than this admission on the part of his enemies. To the law of his God he would be true, come what might. That matter was settled, not only in his own mind, but in the opinion of the public. What a rebuke to many who claim to be Christians!

With great cunning the satraps appealed to the weakness of Darius, and persuaded him to issue a decree prohibiting prayer or supplication, except to himself, for a period of thirty days, on the penalty of being cast into the royal den of lions.

Daniel knew of the decree; but he honored God more than he feared the king, and continued his prayers, making no change as to period or place. A less manly man—one too conscientious to cease praying, but who did not have God's honor at heart—would have gone to some secret place and prayed there. A man of great courage, but little dignity of character, might have prayed openly five or six times instead of three times daily, as a sort of reply to the decree of the king. Daniel simply continued to honor God and refresh his own soul "as aforesaid."

Vers. 16, 17. The decree could not be changed, not even by the king. So the order was, and Daniel was thrown into the den. No doubt Darius had heard the marvelous history of the grand old man, and spoke honestly when he said, "Thy God will deliver thee." The stone was sealed with the king's signet and with the official signet of the satraps; neither could cause the den to be opened without discovery.

Vers. 18, 19, 20. Darius, too weak to resist flattery and too weak to deliver Daniel, was nevertheless deeply affected. Very bad men are very tender at times. Mere display, however, does not argue nobility, nor does it change character or consequences. Remorse, or suspense, or both, worked upon him, so that his customary pleasures had no charm for him.

The same anxious, troubled spirit came into him to go at early dawn to see the outcome of it all. His cry to Daniel, full of agitation, had in it a tone of hope also. He had heard of Daniel's friends and the fiery furnace.

Vers. 21, 22. Daniel honors God, he had delivered him. But he emphasizes right-doing; he claims that God had respect to his own innocence.

Ver. 23. The king was relieved, was glad, and, no doubt, thought himself virtuous because he rejected just as many think themselves full of charity because they weep at an imaginary scene of woe. He was a base, corrupt man, for all his change of sentiment.

Daniel, we must remember, would have gone quietly along and would have done right, even had he known that the lions would have torn him to pieces. God does not always deliver his servants from bodily harm, or financial distress, or social ban. John the Baptist was beheaded; so was Paul the Apostle.

Ver. 24. This was retributive justice, with Oriental injustice mingled with it. The wives and children were innocent. The record is given, not because the whole action was right, but because it was done.

Vers. 25, 26, 27. This decree did not prohibit idolatry, but simply placed Daniel's God among the gods whom the Persians and Medes were to worship undisturbed. The king did not become a true worshiper himself, though he admitted the wonderful power of Jehovah.

Ver. 28. Prospered "because an excellent spirit was found in him. He started right. When he "posed not to defile himself," he made his deliverance possible all along. Such characters as Daniel are made by ecclesiastical machinery; God power, and his obedience to the wronged together, and the grand old man was the outcome.

Grenada District Conference.

TEMPERANCE REPORT.

Your committee to whom was referred the subject of temperance submit the following report: The growth of the sentiment in favor of not only restricting, but prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors is steady and satisfactory. We rejoice at the success with which the law of temperance workers has been crowned in the past and the bright outlook for the future.

The recent session of our District Conference gave us a law which in many respects is far in advance of anything we have ever had; and under which we are sure nearly all the counties of our State can free themselves of the curse of the open saloon.

Not only have they given us a better law than we have ever had, but they have secured us against being brought under the dominion of Alcohol in towns and counties where the sale of liquors was prohibited before. Surely we have abundant reasons to thank God and take courage, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as ministers and laymen of this District Conference, will by precept and example do our best to rid our land of the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Resolved, That we will be diligent in enforcing the law of the church against members who violate her rules on this subject when we have the opportunity.

Resolved, That it is a shameful compromise of Christian character and aim of general rules for any member of our church to sign a liquor petition, vote for the sale of other liquors, or endorsement to the whisky traffic.

Resolved, That we endorse the work of the good women of Mississippi in their noble efforts to free our State of the liquor curse.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Conference for publication.

Respectfully submitted,

G. W. GORDON,

For Committee.

Knowledge can not be acquired without labor and application. It is troublesome, and like deep digging for pure waters; but, when you come to the spring it rises up to meet you, you quaff it eagerly.

Our Mother.

MRS. SUSANNAH P. H. DRAKE.

She was born, April 2, 1811, in Jefferson county, Miss., at a country home where grew luxuriantly specimens of almost every tree and plant indigenous to that fertile soil and semi-tropical climate. Here, a few years earlier, her father, James T. Magruder, had settled. He had plowed the high seas as ship's captain for a number of years, and having made a voyage of experiment and inspection up the Mississippi river as far as Natchez—believed to be the first trip of an ocean vessel ever accomplished to that point—he found a resting-place between the old Spanish Fort Rosalie, and the (then) young English town of Natchez. The place where his "ark" Natchez, he named "Mt. Ararat," for he was a Christian seaman of Episcopal faith and training, blessed also with a most pious Methodist wife—Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Magruder. Their new home was in the "cane-brake country," afterward known as "Maryland Settlement," because its earliest settlers—the Magruders among the rest—were from that State. Most of Mississippi was then inhabited by Indians.

Capt. Magruder chose for a building spot a plateau-like ridge, drained in every direction and well covered with most variegated growth. A lover of nature, he segregated and added to his natural bowers so tastefully as to secure a marvel of sylvan beauty.

Born amid such rural scenery, it is no wonder that the little maiden—the first of three children who lived, and grew up—was touched with an interest in all that is beautiful in nature—a love whose ardor was not cooled by the flight of years nor quenched by many waters of affliction. She always delighted in the country, and particularly in that part of it where she first saw the light, where the music of the feathered songsters greeted her infant ear. The scenes of her childhood were ever dear to her heart through the eighty-one years of her earthly pilgrimage; therefore, we fondly linger on this feature of the picture.

Her early education was chiefly from parental instruction and the loving care of two brothers whose affection was lasting as life, and shall continue to strengthen through eternity. The sturdy principles of modest virtue and unswerving truth instilled into that young heart must have emanated from a faithful mother, taught of God. The preaching and prayers of such zealous itinerants as Lorenzo Dow, Thomas Griffin and William Winans made deep impressions on her young heart. Yet her vivacious disposition led some of these saints to suppose her giddy and wildly. Soon after entering her teen years she was sent to Elizabeth Female Academy, at Washington, Miss., the first school of high grade for girls ever established in the South. Here she acquitted herself with much credit in scholarship and deportment, graduating at her sixteenth year. She ever dwelt with fond affection on Mrs. Sanderson and Mrs. Thayer, "Uncle and Aunt" Burruss, as prominent instruments in God's hands in directing her mind and heart aright. No lapse of time ever dimmed the vision of delight. For at that school, when about fourteen years old, she gave her young heart to God in a bond never to be broken; "a vow renewed from day to day, till in life's latest hour she bowed and blessed in death a bond so dear."

She loved to sing and to talk of "the stuporous height of that holy delight which she felt in the life giving blood." Her conversion was bright; her Christian course was the "path of the just, growing brighter and brighter unto the perfect day." For since we have known her, she seemed to love with all her heart, mind and strength, and her neighbor as herself. She was daily growing in grace—reaching higher to perfection's height, sinking deeper in the depths of love and peace.

How she cherished the memory of the schoolmates and friends who parted with her of that gospel feast—when heaven-decended revivall. Most of them crossed the river before her, and helped to welcome her to everlasting habitation. She often remarked with joy the steadfastness with which these converts maintained the faith.

At the age of sixteen and a half years, Oct. 4, 1827, she was happily wedded to Rev. B. M. Drake, a member of the (then) young Mississippi conference. She often modestly apologized for such seeming haste. There were weighty reasons connected with the vast itinerancy of the day which justified so early a marriage. Of the thrillingly romantic courtship she retained too modest to divulge much. Her glowing expressions of a most ardent lover she ever kept and pondered in her heart—too sacred for other ears.

Though warmly attached to home, the young bride cheerfully went forth to share the itinerant's lot. She faithfully filled the delicate position of a wife in town, city, school and country home for thirty-three consecutive years. During all this time she never once discouraged her husband from filling any appointment or discharging fearfully any duty. Indeed, if she erred either way, it was in a too heroic self abnegation. The true interests of the church and the salvation of souls was her all-absorbing passion. High and low, rich and poor, master and servant, found her always ready to speak a word in season; of exhortation, instruction or edification, as the case might demand; for, notwithstanding her extreme modesty (amounting to shyness), she was held as a lion to speak for the Master.

Not many years after her marriage, while her husband was filling the Natchez district, Providence seemed to dictate the building of a small country home very near the place of her birth, that she might help to nurse her mother, who was in declining health. The continuance of similar appointments, the utter lack of district parsonages, and a rapidly increasing family resulted in the temporary residence becoming permanent. Here she tarried at home, caring for the children and servants during the long and almost constantly recurring absences of the head of the family. Such brave endurance of toil, anxiety and danger has seldom been equalled—we believe never excelled.

Twelve children were born to our parents; of whom seven grew to mature age. The training of six sons and one daughter necessarily devolved chiefly upon the mother. That all became moral and religious is some index of the character of her government. It was sufficiently loving, eminently faithful. She watched, she prayed, she worked for the welfare of her children in every way; but placed the moral and spiritual far above any material or temporal good. Fire was kept burning continually on the family altar, as well during father's absence as when he was at home. Each child had a special night on which, retired from the rest, prayer and loving converse was held with him individually. Oh! the hallowing influences of those hours of sweet communion! And then the hours she spent in secret prayer—withdrawn to her closet, or to the vine-sheltered end of the garden—gave strength for the administration of such discipline as boys generally demand, in a spirit so calm and sweet that none could ever suppose there was a touch of anger in that faithful, loving heart. She never boxed or hangered us, nor would she use the switch till hours after the offense. Thus there was time for due deliberation. In this, as in all things, she acted from principle, not passion.

She was only a little less solicitous for the welfare of the slaves (inherited from ancestors and reared by herself) than for her own children. Every Sabbath they were brought to the gallery, and there instructed in the Word of God and in the catechism. She watched for their souls "as they who must give account."

In May, 1860, God saw fit suddenly to deprive her of the human arm on which she had leaned so lovingly for thirty-three years. Though so little prepared for the blow, she bowed in meek submission, confident of a joyous meeting "over there." Having always been frail in body, she expected to linger behind only a few more years at most. But the Author and Preserver of life decreed differently, so for nearly thirty-two years she trod the lonely path of widowhood.

During the storm of war that swept over and devastated our Southland, she developed an unsuspected degree of patriotism. Though, like her husband, warmly attached to the Union idea, and deprecating all war, yet when the crisis came she gave all her exultant sons to the service of her country. Throughout she showed such a spirit of determined resistance to what she deemed unwarranted encroachment on inherent rights as to put to blush many who had advocated secession. She would accept no compromise, however flattering, in the way of cotton sales to the other side, contrary to the Confederate policy—though she and many others saw no wisdom in such policy. In this she lived according to the thirteenth chapter of Romans from first to last. The threats of hostile raiders served her not a hair's breadth.

In the darkest and loneliest of these perilous times she and her daughter, isolated from all human help, were attacked by five armed ruffians. It was at the hour of dusk, which, as usual, found her at the mercy-seat. She came forth empanopied in prayer, and, raising her hands in earnest supplication to the widow's God, the five robbers were so overawed that they vanished quickly in the darkness and returned no more.

The war being over, she clung to the wreck as long as anyone could remain with her for company and protection. The "breaking up" from the home and neighborhood where nearly seventy years of her life had been spent caused many a heart-pang. For ten years she had dwelt alternately with her two only living children, making occasional visits to her brother, Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, to whom she was most tenderly attached.

To the households of her sons her presence has been a rare benediction. One promising son died in the service of his country at the dawn of manhood. The daughter and three other sons fell while bravely fighting the battle of life, each leaving a family behind. These repeated sorrows weighed heavily on her heart, but never exorted a word of murmuring. The will of the Father overruled complete submission from her. Tender and watchful solicitude for the orphaned grand children filled one of the most pathetic and beautiful pages of her history. For these she planned and prayed with strongest outpour of soul.

The last month of her earthly tabernacling were spent in the parsonage home of her youngest son. Here she manifested more than ever such perfect patience, such sweetness of spirit, as drew everyone to her with silken cords of love. She seemed to be surrounded by a holy atmosphere which could be felt by all in her presence. Though some have thought her views of Christian rectitude austere, yet none could associate with her and fail to feel the sweetness of her loving spirit. Her mind, too, continued marvelously strong and active till she was full fourscore and one year old. Just before that birthday she was taken with a violent catarrhal bronchitis which no strength could withstand and no medical skill overcome. In nine days she breathed her spirit back to the Giver of Life. From Shubuta, Miss., at dawn, April 11, 1892, her soul ascended to that realm where "the night dissolves away into pure and perfect day." Here life and death unite in saying, "Meet me there!" Kind friends ministered to her and decked the sacred dust with beautiful flowers. The casket was tenderly laid beside the loved ones gone before in the spot dearest to her of all the earth. White and colored joined equally in paying the last loving tribute. She sleeps not here—she has waked in heaven, where fadeless flowers are blooming ever.

Thus we have sketched an outline. Who could fill in the details and tint with fitting color such a picture—with its mingled lights and shades, and over all the mellow radiance reflected from the brighter world? Before the task we shrink abashed! While living she asked not—she would not permit—just praise to herself, so saturated was she with the spirit of humility. Now she is no longer with us; she can not forbid this tribute of love and admiration.

Asking ourselves and each other earnestly, What was the most striking trait of her character? we hesitate to answer in view of so well rounded a life. She often pointed to II. Peter ii, 5-8, and to I. Cor. xiii, with Christ's sermon on the mount, as sufficient teaching on the important subject of sanctification. This she declared to be a pearl to be irreverently handled. "She thought the brethren sometimes generated more heat than light on this subject. She never professed this, or any high degree of grace, but all who watched her course through life unite in the belief that she lived the doctrine. Even the worldly recognized the fact that with her religion was the chief concern. She delighted in the 'communion of saints,' but spoke often and earnestly to others of the way of life. We believe that many sweet surprises await her in the mansions above, when this one and that shall say, 'It was your godly admonition and example which turned my wayward feet to tread the heavenly road.'"

When we reflect on the ceaseless labor she performed for others to the very last—writing letters of comfort, copying good hymns, old and new, making abstractions from "King's Primitive Church," besides many household duties—we think surely that industry was her prominent trait. When we remember how little she ever indulged herself in fine clothing, dainty food, or any aesthetic pleasure, we conclude that unselfishness was her leading feature. Observing how she stood in the old paths, and called for the spirit of the fathers to rest upon this generation, we imagine that old-fashioned Methodism symbolized her character. Considering her unceasing and fervent prayers, day and night, in sickness and health, we write down devotion as her watchword. Reviewing her every-day speech and action, we incline to give womanly modesty the chiefest place in the diadem of praise. Recalling her heroism in confronting dangers and putting to flight fierce enemies, and in raising her voice always and everywhere for truth, cost what it might, courage was the brightest link in that necklace of pearls. Recollecting her marvelous store of appropriate texts of Scripture, we decide that knowledge of God's Word flashed forth more brightly than any weapon of her warfare. But when we ponder the rugged pathway of grief she trod, and how in all she said from the heart, "Good is the will of the Lord," we are confident that "above all" gleamed the "shield of faith." Surely fidelity to every trust marked her way through life. To our loving hearts only one word can express in fullness the great goodness of her character; that word is integrity.

What Next?

Bro. T. L. Mellen, in an article in the ADVOCATE, of May 12, headed "Some Further Reasons," says, "After Easter, what next?" A very significant interrogatory indeed! Verily, if we conform to Catholicism in one particular, why not in toto ? I am heartily tired and disgusted, too, with the idea of moving along so quietly, so smoothly hand in hand with a sworn enemy, as though it were a friendly ally.

I see almost every day demonstrations of a spirit of indifference that is most deeply painful. The disposition to conform to Catholicism seems to be growing. Our people are patronizing Catholic schools. Right before my eyes daily members of my own church are sending their children to a Catholic school. If consistency is a jewel, some so-called Methodists are certainly of the original type—they do not wear jewels.

How much further can we afford to go along this line, or when put on the brakes? If we are Methodists, in the name of the blessed Master let us show our colors and not compromise with the enemy.

In his specifications of the multiplicity of machinery at the expense of spirituality, if Bro. Mellen will allow one addition—viz, holding Quarterly Conferences on Sundays—I will say a hearty Amen to all.

Some one says, "Who can show evil in celebrating Easter when the smile of the Father is upon it?" I am glad to know that the blessed Lord smiles upon all good deeds upon whatever day performed and by whomsoever performed, and not only upon the deed, but upon the performer as well. The Lord's blessings are not confined, and all Methodists know it, to certain days, persons and places. J. H. BROWN.

The excessive use of grease and oil in dressing the hair is a common error, and one that is responsible for many cases of deficient hair and baldness. There is a natural oil secreted by the hair, which in a healthy state should supply the requisite amount of moisture. When this is defective the hair becomes dry and harsh, though the artificial application by clogging up the pores may prevent the supply of natural moisture from being communicated freely to the hair.

A preparation that is purely vegetable, and contains no oil nor any mineral substances is Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, considered by the best judges the surest remedy for baldness, and the safest stimulant and moist dressing for the hair yet prepared. Its ingredients are the same as are used by the beautiful Creole women of the South, and no doubt whatever exists that any lady by its use can have a luxuriant growth of hair, and preserve its natural color long past middle life. It is used by some of the most eminent society ladies of the country. Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.

The mind must daily feed on heavenly thoughts if the heart be led daily to desire spiritual gifts.

If the hair is falling out and turning gray, the glands of the skin need stimulating and color food, and the best remedy and stimulant is Hall's Hair Renewer.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass. N. B. Be sure to get only

Commencement at Centenary College.

The closing exercises of the sixty-seventh session of this institution began on Sunday, May 29. It was known for several weeks that Bishop Hendrix, who had been elected to preach the commencement sermon, would not be present to perform that service. By a fortunate conjunction of circumstances a man equal to such an occasion was secured, and the splendid audience on Sunday was given a rare treat in a magnificent sermon by Bishop Galloway. The Bishop was in excellent trim, and preached to the delight and edification of all present. The depth of his thought, the elegance of his diction, the charm of his manner, the clear ring of his voice, all combined, produced a lasting impression upon his eager hearers.

The Young Men's Christian Association held their anniversary meeting on Sunday evening in the Methodist Church, when appropriate addresses were made by Bishop Galloway and Dr. C. F. Evans, of Baton Rouge. This association has done much in the past for the moral and spiritual benefit of the students of the college, and gives promise of greater good and larger usefulness in the time to come.

Monday evening was devoted to the exhibition of the preparatory department. During the session just closed this department has been under the supervision of Prof. C. C. Miller, and the manner in which his boys acquitted themselves made the impression that if they had succeeded as well in all their studies as they did in their recitations and the oratorical contest, he and they had done a very fine year's work. There were five contestants for the Pharr Oratorical Medal. The five did admirably well. The voice was good and well managed, the gesture was appropriate and expressive and the attitude graceful and pleasing; but the youngest and smallest carried off the prize. This was Frank Godcheaux, from Abbeville, La.

Tuesday morning was devoted to the graduation of four young men from the Union Literary Society. The speeches of presentation of diplomas and badges were well done, and the response was equally good. Several visiting gentlemen were called on for impromptu speeches, and responded in easy, off-hand style to the gratification of the members of the society and the delight of the large audience.

The evening exercises consisted in the oratorical contest between the two literary societies. The speakers were: R. S. Ellis, A. H. Gay, S. M. Collins, S. B. Beall, N. E. Joiner, J. M. Carter. The speeches of these young gentlemen evinced considerable training of mental forces and were exceedingly well delivered.

So well did the young men acquit themselves that the audience were held in doubt as to which one had won the medal. The judges after careful inquiry decided that N. E. Joiner was entitled to the prize. This young preacher also carried off the medal for being the best Greek scholar in his (Junior) class. We congratulate our young friend on his success, and we congratulate our church on having the promise of the life and work of such a young preacher. Mr. E. S. Fagg, of White Sulphur Springs, Va., who has been a frequent visitor to our commencement occasions, offered a beautiful medal to that member of the senior class who had the highest grade in all studies. This medal was awarded, in a neat speech by Prof. Sullivan, to W. M. Drake, son of Rev. J. P. Drake, of the Mississippi Conference. Taking it altogether, this exhibition was one of the best and most satisfactory we have witnessed at Centenary for a long time.

The Franklin Institute held its closing exercises early Wednesday morning. Three young men were graduated from this society, and the exercises were similar to those held in the Union Literary Society the day before. Everything passed off pleasantly and everybody left in a good humor.

At eleven o'clock a large and brilliant company assembled in the college auditorium to witness the graduating exercises of this session. Seven young men were graduated—five to the degree of Bachelor of Science and two to the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Their names are: J. M. Collins, D. A. James, J. J. O'Brien, R. E. Rutledge and J. L. Scales, B. S.; and H. N. Pharr and W. M. Drake, B. A. These young graduates acquitted themselves well. W. M. Drake delivered the salutatory in Latin, which, of course, was highly appreciated by the audience, and H. N. Pharr made the valedictory. Dr. Hunnicutt gave a brief and sensible baccalaureate address, and delivered the diplomas with grace and dignity, after which Bishop Keener gave some remarks on the prospects of the college.

The evening exercises consisted in a debate by members of the graduating class upon "Free Trade." It was participated in by Messrs. Pharr, O'Brien, Scales, and James; Pharr and Scales representing the Franklin Institute, and affirming; O'Brien and James representing the Union Literary Society, and arguing for the negative. Twenty minutes each revealed the fact that these young gentlemen were thoroughly conversant with the subject. It was one of the finest debates we have ever heard at Centenary. The committee decided that the affirmative had the best arguments. The two medals offered by the societies were won by Dan James, of the Union Literary Society, and John Scales, of the Franklin Institute. We congratulate these societies upon their fine exhibition of the oratorical and argumentative abilities of their graduates.

The Board of Trustees held several meetings in which all the interests of the college were carefully considered. It was found that the general condition is much improved. During the past year $27,000 have been added to the endowment fund, which now amounts to $89,775. The agent, Rev. Robert Harry, has raised over $20,000 of this amount during the last four months. This speaks well for the diligence of the agent. Of this amount the sum of $5,000 in cash was given by Andrew H. Gay, of Plaquemine, La. The Board found the grounds in fine order and the buildings in good condition. The session just closed has been a prosperous one, and the conduct of the students most admirable. Altogether, affairs are in a better condition than at any time previous in the history of the college, and everybody seemed to be in a more hopeful state of mind than ever before. The old college is again afloat in deep water with her colors streaming from her masthead, and all her friends wishing her a bon voyage. The Board of Trustees and the faculty conferred the degree of Doctor Divinitatis upon two worthy members of the Louisiana Conference—Rev. W. H. LaPrade and Rev. John T. Sawyer. We lift our hat to these brethren and wish they may long enjoy the doctorate.

Millsaps College—Announcement.

The announcement of Millsaps College is now in the hands of printers and will be issued from the press in a few days. The session begins September 29, 1892, in new, commodious, admirably arranged buildings, and with a full faculty of which Rev. W. B. Murrah, D. D., is president. The college will be well-equipped, ably officered, and in every way be ready to do first-class work.

The Board of Trustees has taken a new departure in abolishing tuition. All students will pay a matriculation fee of $25, and an incidental fee of $5. Provision has been made, however, for the payment of these fees in the case of young preachers and the sons of preachers. This plan will enable poor boys to secure a college education.

Our boarding arrangements are excellent. Two "Students' Homes," known as "Asbury Hall" and "Williams Hall," are ready for boarders. Besides these, several cottages will be provided in which young men can live at trifling cost. Board in "Students' Homes" will be from $10 to $12 per month. Each home will be in charge of a Christian family. Our determination is to furnish board at the lowest possible rates.

The discipline of the college will be firm. Young men unwilling to respect wholesome government are not desired and will not be retained.

College mails will be distributed on the campus, thus providing against the necessity of personal visits to the postoffice.

The most watchful, unremitting care will be given to the moral conduct and religious culture of students. Special advantages will be afforded young students for the ministry. My greatest desire is to elevate the educational standard and enlarge the collegiate opportunities of those called of God to the work of preaching the gospel. As much as possible, I purpose giving them personal attention and assistance in their preparatory labors. For this reason I am glad my residence is so near a school of the prophets.

And now I urge the hearty co-operation of all pastors in the two Mississippi Conferences in making the initial term of our college a signal success. You have all worked for it, prayed for it, and given your money to it. All things will soon be ready for its work to begin and make you some return. Send young men to its halls—Write either to the president, Dr. W. B. Murrah, or the agent, Rev. A. F. Watkins, at Jackson, Miss., and send names of those contemplating a college education.

Duty calls me across the sea for two months or more. I leave in a few days. My only regret in going is being bereaved of the privilege of further aiding in the successful launching of an enterprise upon which I am sure the divine blessing will richly rest, and in which the church, militant and triumphant, will have occasion to greatly rejoice.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY,
President of Board of Trustees.
Jackson, Miss.

Those who build churches and seat them should note that one of the most prominent secular journals in this country says: "If theatre chairs were as uncomfortable as church pews, actors would starve."

Purgatory—No. 2.

After having given the Romanist statement concerning purgatory, and glance at the history of the doctrine, we will now give some of the reasons why, as Protestants, we can not accept the doctrine as divine and true.

There is not a single clear and positive scriptural proof of the existence of any such place, or state as purgatory. The name, the word, is not in the Bible; it has nothing more than a mythical and speculative existence; an ideality, not a reality at all. There is not a solitary text in the Book that says prayers were, or were ever to be, offered for the dead. The rich man in torment did not ask anyone to pray for him, or intimate that he expected deliverance, but only a slight mitigation of his tortures. There is no scriptural proof that ever sacrifices were offered for the dead, or that gifts were made to Paul and Peter to say prayers or offer any sacrifice for the souls of departed men.

It seems to us that if the doctrine of purgatory is true, and that it is possible to deliver men out of that dolorous prison-house of woe, the apostles must have known it, and that they must have had as much power in this direction, as much power as the long-robbed gentlemen of our time, and must often have been applied to to render that important service. But there is not a shadow of proof that they ever were. The inference to our minds is irresistible that the early church and the apostles never heard of purgatory, and knew nothing about it. If they did know of purgatory, and their tremendous power to deliver tortured souls from this woe of woes, it is utterly inexplicable that they have said absolutely nothing about it.

Next we remark that the writings of the earliest fathers contain no mention of purgatory, not an intimation that it was a doctrine of the church. Polycarp, a disciple of St. John, and Ignatius and Irenaeus, all wrote in the first Christian century, and speak only of two states beyond the grave. They also wrote on the resurrection of the dead, but said nothing of purgatory. Justin Martyr, who wrote in the second century, declares "that immediately after death there is made a separation between good and bad men; that the good are carried into paradise." Cyprian, who flourished in the middle of the third century, says: "When once we have departed hence there is no longer any place for repentance, no longer any effectiveness of satisfaction! Here life is either lost, or held; here we may provide for our eternal salvation by the worship of God and the fruitful of faith. Let not anyone then be retarded, either by signs or length of years, from attaining to salvation. To a person while he remains in this world repentance is never too late. Those who seek after and understand the truth may always have an easy access to the indulgence of God. Even to the very end of your life pray for your sins, and by confession and faith implore the one only true God. To him who confesses, pardon is freely granted: to him who believes, a salutary indulgence is granted, from the divine pity: and immediately after death he passes to a blessed immortality." We might quote many of the early fathers. Let one more suffice. Chrysostom, in the fourth century, in his second homily on Lazarus, says: "When we shall be departed of this life, there is then no room for repentance: nor will it be in our power to wash out any spots we have contracted, or to purge away any one of the evils we have committed."

Bro. Mellen on the spot appointed Rev. E. T. Breland to go in and possess the land for Christ. He will start immediately to organize and evangelize "West Wayne" Mission. We are filled with hope for the result, especially as efforts will be made to send teachers also into the same region. It is "tall timber," but well worth the working.

Again, your assistant editor, who favored us with his genial presence, offered the young missionary to send our ADVOCATE gratis into many worthy homes within this "new ground" field. This will intensify the light of truth which we hope may reach many hearts before Conference. We commend this kind of work to other District Conferences within our borders. It is eminently practical and far more practicable than our little "faith work," which is so far successful. With $100 put into this good work, is it any wonder fire from the Lord comes down to the altar at Waynesboro?

Not long after this date, and in later times, many writers make more or less mention of purgatory. But if in the first century, and the second century, the apostles and holy fathers did not mention this doctrine, which, according to the Romanist view, is so important to every soul of man, then we can not evade nor escape the conclusion that they did not hold the doctrine and, in fact, knew nothing about it. We know that there are some six or eight texts that are quoted by Romanist writers, which, they assert, inferentially teach a purgatory—none of them, however, explicitly and positively. The strong text and chief authority is the quotation from the apocryphal book of Maccabees, where mention is made of prayers for the dead. We have examined these few texts with some care. We believe these quoted texts are glaringly irrelevant and really have no reference to purgatory at all.

In opposition and reply to these misquoted texts we could fill a column with Scripture quotations flatly contradicting, or, at least, plainly teaching doctrines utterly incompatible with the Romanist doctrine of purgatory. We will present the scriptural teaching, and it will be clear that it can not be harmonized with the purgatorial idea.

J. B. WALKER.

Good Missionary Work at Meridian District Conference.

We met at Waynesboro, and had a warm and pleasant time despite the cold-weather wave. Our secretary, ever competent, L. P. Brown, will write it up. Some one will be sure to tell of the beautiful new church and the appropriate and successful dedication services. Our presiding elder, T. L. Mellen, always alive to every interest of Zion, and specially missionary in spirit, gave most of the first day to this great subject. After an able and unctious sermon on foreign missions by our Dr. Andrews, a voluntary offering of $40 was made for the successor of Dr. Lambuth in Japan. An hour or two was given in the afternoon to the discussion of home missionary work in its various phases.

Later on in the proceedings, in connection with a practical report on missionary territory by Bro. B. S. Rayner, he and some others of us from adjacent works raised in pledges $200 for the support of an active young preacher to enter a section of country lying in between the railroads and covering a thousand or more square miles, in which the gospel according to our Methodism is not preached, and is very much needed.

Bro. Mellen on the spot appointed Rev. E. T. Breland to go in and possess the land for Christ. He will start immediately to organize and evangelize "West Wayne" Mission. We are filled with hope for the result, especially as efforts will be made to send teachers also into the same region. It is "tall timber," but well worth the working.

Again, your assistant editor, who favored us with his genial presence, offered the young missionary to send our ADVOCATE gratis into many worthy homes within this "new ground" field. This will intensify the light of truth which we hope may reach many hearts before Conference.

We commend this kind of work to other District Conferences within our borders. It is eminently practical and far more practicable than our little "faith work," which is so far successful. With $100 put into this good work, is it any wonder fire from the Lord comes down to the altar at Waynesboro?

Yours for the work,
J. P. DRAKE.

NOTES.

Doctrine that sounds well is not always sound doctrine.

A word in the ADVOCATE's Summer poets and poetesses: You can't bite Pegasus at a lively stable.

Robert Hall says: "In matters of conscience first thoughts are best; in matters of prudence last thoughts are best."

A writer on public speaking says: "In fifty cases out of fifty-one, a man with a temperament which is highly oratorical is incurably lazy!"

One of our papers puts forth the idea that some of our young ministers give as much attention to the upper lip as to their "fain hung by a hair."

Some people stumble at the miracles of Jesus; but it seems in us that the character drawn in the Gospels would be irrational and inexplicable without the miracles!

Mr. Webster is reported, as having said that a good evidence of the divine origin of Christianity is in the fact that it survived being proclaimed from box pulpits.

Let every preacher remember, that however large or small his personality or "hired house" may be, there is always a large room—for improvement, and he ought to occupy it as much as possible.

If you are acquainted with the author of a clever book, that acquaintance adds much to the favor and appreciation of the book. As we become acquainted with God, we shall the more appreciate and enjoy his book—the Holy Bible.

The Methodists have begun the work of union. The African Methodist Episcopal and the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Churches have united. By a nearly unanimous vote the two bodies selected for the new organization the name, "African Methodist Zion Church." This new church has nearly a million members.

We understand that one of our prominent preachers recently remarked that "you never knew of a person being converted in a prayer meeting." We have no disposition to deny the statement, but have the curiosity to know if any of our readers were converted in a prayer meeting! Let us hear! We understand that it means the ordinary week-day or night prayer meeting.

It will not do to insist upon the divinity of Christ if denying a field where Godhead and it alone can fill. A prophet can preach with ardor and eloquence; a martyr can witness through suffering and death to love and fidelity; but only the Son of God can offer a sacrifice for the sins of the world. Palestine is central in the early history of the Word; Jerusalem is its capital; the temple its acropolis; and the altar sanctifies the whole. Either we must admit the doctrine of a sacrificial death, or introduce a divine person without any logical necessity. The atonement is the necessary corollary of the incarnation.—Lambert.

This, from an exchange, is for the preacher in a drowsy congregation:

It was the communion Monday at Kettle Relief Church, and many were sleeping. The preacher took the measure accordingly, and introduced the word "hyperbolic" into his sermon; but he paused and said: "Now my friends, some of you may not understand this word hyperbolic. I explain it. Suppose that I were to say that this congregation were asleep in this church at the present time, I would be speaking hyperbolically, because (looking round) I do believe much more than one-half of you are sleeping." The effect was instantaneous.

Floods, floods, floods. The "great river" still holds its threatening course. Thousands of acres of land have been flooded and hundreds of people are suffering from the effects. The water has run the top of the levees all along the line; several breaks have occurred and much damage anticipated. Nothing can be done on any line, except wait the water as long as this condition of affairs prevails. The problem of the whole country is, how can we control the Mississippi river? The man who answers this problem successfully will be the greatest benefactor of the country, except the man who solves the race problem.

The proposition of the Grand Jury of this city to the Legislature, to license gambling houses for revenue to support the Charity Hospital, is most monstrous and wicked proposition. The reason given for making the proposition is as childish as the proposition is iniquitous. To say that because the law against gambling is not executed, therefore, let us license it for revenue for charity, is to encourage wickedness and puerility in a most extraordinary way. Apply this to any other crime or vice, and what will we be? Surely the jury did not think what it was doing! We trust the Legislature, which is composed largely of men who aided in the throw of one form of gambling, will not make itself ridiculous by licensing another form of it. A Legislature to make laws for the good of the people, not for their demoralization and debasement.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

The next session of the Jackson District Conference goes to Edwards. Dr. W. B. Murrah, president of Millsaps College, was a visitor to the District Conference, and made a short, but very fine speech on Christian Education.

Rev. C. G. Andrews preached the commencement sermon at Mont Rose High School, last Sunday, at 11 A. M., and on Monday Rev. J. A. B. Jones delivered the annual address.

Rev. J. P. Drake, in a missionary address at Waynesboro, classed the objector to missions, especially foreign missions, along with Judas Iscariot. Is there not a pertinency in this comparison?

A glorious revival is in progress at Waynesboro, Miss. Up to this writing over one hundred have been converted, and over a quarter of a hundred have been added to the church, and still the good work goes on.

It may not be generally known that Dr. J. W. Lambuth was the son of Rev. John R. Lambuth, who was our first missionary to Mobile, Ala., and held the first Methodist Church in that place in 1827, called in later days the "Old Bee-hive." His grandfather was also a minister of the gospel.

An invitation to attend the closing exercises of Grenada Female College lies on our table. It is tastefully and beautifully gotten up, and promises a feast of fat things to those who will attend. We had hoped to be able to attend this commencement, but our duties call us to another part of the State at that time.

The Jackson District Conference held a most impressive memorial service in honor of our Dr. J. W. Lambuth, who died in Kobe, Japan, on April 28. Bishop Galloway was the principal speaker. A suitable memoir was drafted, which will be forwarded by the secretary of the Conference to his widowed wife in Japan.

The Jackson District Conference adjourned last Saturday evening after a delightful session of two days. Bishop Galloway presided the first day, and Bro. Moulter measured up to the standard of duty admirably the second. We endeavored to make the branch office headquarters for the brethren, and appreciate their practical acceptance of our invitation to this effect.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to attend the commencement of Lea Female College, Summitt, Miss., under the presidency of Rev. Chas. E. Oken, LL.D. The commencement sermon will be preached by Rev. L. H. Anding, of Crystal Springs, Miss., and the address before the Alumnae Society will be delivered by Rev. Wm. Rice Sims, Ph.D., of the University of Mississippi. There will be six graduates this year.

A few Sabbaths ago the Minister from China at Washington attended service for the first time since his residence there. Immediately upon adjournment many hastened to take him by the hand and express their gratification at his presence. Some one asked why he had not attended before. He replied that he had never been asked, and did not know that his presence would be acceptable. There is much food for thought for you, brother Christian, in this remark.

The General Minutes of the M. E. Church, South, for 1892, will show an increase in membership for the past year of 48,001, making the aggregate 1,300,562. The increase in Sunday-schools has been 30,939, making a total of teachers and scholars 841,305, while the monthly and quarterly issues of our literature, having increased 29,000, now aggregate 910,556. This is a fine showing for one year's work. Can we not do better this year? There is always room ahead.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

There were eight young preachers and twelve preachers' sons attending Centenary College last year.

Gov. Foster says that wherever he went in the late campaign he found Centenary boys in every department of life's work holding up the banner of manhood and striving for the best interests of Louisiana.

Bishop Keener, in his talk on commencement day at Centenary, said he believed the last political victory in Louisiana was due in a great measure to the influences sent out from the old college.

Our little friend, Blanche Roberson, of Arcadia, La., has our thanks for an invitation to attend the commencement exercises of the E. A. Seminary, of her town, June 12-15.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, May 25: "Waynesboro is being swept by a mighty revival. The Holy Spirit is being poured out upon us. The glory of God fills the new church. Nearly 100 conversions and reclamations. The work goes on."

A letter recently from an aged superannuate, Rev. P. H. Dieffenwerth, Largo, Florida, says: "I still linger on the shore, looking for the time of my departure. I have great cause for thankfulness to my heavenly Father, that he is lowering me so gently toward my resting-place." Like most of our superannuates, Bro. Dieffenwerth is in exceedingly straitened circumstances, but he says, "Shall I not cheerfully accept the situation which my Master voluntarily assumed?"

A Letter from Mrs. Dr. Lambuth, Japan.

The other day Bishop Galloway received a letter from Mrs. Dr. J. W. Lambuth, from which we are permitted to make the following extracts. This is one of the first, if not the first official communication which has been received concerning his death. The name of James W. Lambuth has been a household word for nearly half a century in Mississippi, and this letter will be read by all with much interest.

This is to tell you that your brother, J. W. Lambuth, of the North Mississippi Conference, has gone from his work in Japan to God. The spirit left his body April 28, after having been sick with pneumonia for two weeks. Jesus manifested himself plainly to the patient sufferer, and he had great comfort, saying, "Jesus is here, close by me." "All is well." "Mourn not for me."

"Tell the church at home that I die at my post; we have much to do; send more men."

"The funeral services were largely attended, and every possible attention was given by the various members of the mission, the native church and friends everywhere. All these things are evidences of much appreciation and Christian love, for which my heart is truly thankful. But my own loneliness is only known to the bereaved."

East Mississippi Female College Commencement.

The annual sermon was preached, Sunday, May 29, in Central Church, Meridian, by Rev. I. W. Cooper, D. D. It was a delightful gospel discourse based on Num. xi, 17, second sentence. The art exhibition, Monday night, was a decided advance on former exhibitions. The address by Rev. T. M. Hartmann, D. D., of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, was very eloquent. Tuesday night the musical concert was quite extended, but highly commended by competent critics. Wednesday, June 1, the degree of "M. E. L." was conferred on the following young women: Katie Myer, Lillian Keeto, Linda Soule, Emma Sims, Lida Row, Sallie Whitfield, Eleanor Perry Mellen—seven in all. The annual address was delivered by Rev. T. B. Holloman, of the Mississippi Conference, and was, of course, all that such an address should be. President C. W. Anderson has been unanimously re-elected.

Publishing House.

It is important to the interests of our Publishing House for it to have a recognized and active agent in every station, circuit and mission in the Church. The House is the property of the preachers, and they have a preferred claim to such employment. But there are pastors who have no leisure for such work, and some who think themselves wanting in tact for it. Where this is the case other agents for the distribution of our literature ought to be provided. Wherever there is a Conference Colporteur the appointment of such local agents as are herein indicated rests with him. In the Conferences that have not adopted the Colporteur system prescribed by the General Conference we beg our presiding elders and pastors to assist us in finding local agents for the sale and distribution of the publications of the House. The town and village bookstores might be made of much more service to us than they are. Wherever one of these stores is kept by a Methodist he should be specially urged to keep our catalogues and a few of our books, and to receive subscriptions to our periodical publications. Many subscribers to these publications delay to renew their subscriptions because of the inconvenience of securing a check or postoffice order, and many are lost by continuing such neglect till they are dropped from our lists. Local agents that would keep a record of these subscriptions and look after their renewal would do us immense good. And the distribution of our catalogues and circulars among the people would acquaint them more particularly with our publications, secure us many small orders, cultivate interest in the House, and work for it strengthening and beneficial results. Give us your help, brethren; we believe you will. This House is yours. You have a pride in it. It has cost you much. You want to see it expand and grow. Its growth and expansion largely depends on the hands that have brought it whatever prosperity it now has—the hands of the itinerant ministry. Of course, we do not expect either preacher or layman to give time and labor to the House gratis. The usual commissions will be paid for all work done in its behalf.

Since I began the use of it I have entirely recovered from my previous condition. My appetite has been entirely restored, my general condition greatly improved, and which I attribute to the use of your well water. NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Texas was visited by a cyclone last week, and much damage was done in almost every portion of the State.

The Hatch Anti-Option bill was passed in the National House of Representatives, on June 6, by a large majority.

The National Republican Convention, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for President of the United States, met in Minneapolis, on June 7.

A break occurred in the New Hope levee, on the right bank of St. James parish, eleven miles below Donaldsonville, last week. The crevasse was 150 feet wide. It has been closed.

The balloting for a United States Senator in the Louisiana Legislature still continues. All of the candidates remain in the field, while their supporters continue faithful, and a deadlock has ensued.

The Louisiana State Medical Society has offered in the Legislature a bill requiring that every person practicing medicine or surgery in this State must submit to an examination in the various branches of the profession by a medical examining board.

The Deep Water Convention met in Mississippi City last week. A permanent organization was effected under the name of the Mississippi Sound and National Waterway Improvement Association. A memorial was adopted for presentation to Congress.

With the public interest concentrated on Minneapolis only a small share of attention will be bestowed upon the proceedings of Congress this week, and in consequence it may be safely assumed that the doings of both Houses for the most part will be marked by apathy.

The Nicaragua Canal Convention met in St. Louis on June 2. The convention was called for the purpose of encouraging the construction of the canal and to interest, if possible, the national government in the enterprise. Delegates were present from nearly all the States and Territories.

Mr. J. G. Blaine, on June 5, tendered to the President the resignation of the Secretaryship of State, to take effect at once. President Harrison accepted the resignation promptly. The action of Mr. Blaine is taken as conclusive evidence of his candidacy for the presidential nomination against President Harrison.

Arrangements have been made for a purchase of the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas railroad (Mississippi Valley road) by the Illinois Central, provided the stockholders of the latter named company approve the proposition. The stockholders will meet on June 18 to consider the matter. It is said the great majority of the securities of the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Railway Company can now be bought on a basis of paying for all such securities $5,000,000 in money and $30,000,000 in Illinois Central 4 per cent. gold bonds.

The oil regions of Pennsylvania were devastated by fire and water on June 5. The constant rains had converted all the small streams into torrents, and, added by a cloud burst, the floods overcame all boundary and swept away a great amount of property, including a number of oil tanks. The floating oil became ignited, and death and destruction ensued. It is said that 600 lives have been lost. The property loss will reach in the millions. At Titusville the loss is estimated at $1,500,000; Oil City, $1,500,000; Corry, $600,000; Meadville, $150,000, and surrounding country probably a million more.

The last session of the British Parliament virtually closed on June 3. The desire of a section of the Cabinet, strongly supported by Mr. Chamberlain and the Unionist party, to oppose the Irish local government bill, so that they would go before the constituency with the Irish pledges redeemed, had failed to prevail against electoral agencies.

Last year more than three and a half million pounds of German sugar were exported to America from the consular jurisdiction of Berlin. This year not a pound. The Germans say that the sugar trust is trying to bear their sugar, hoping to get it very cheap in the end, but they say that they will maintain prices, and when the trust is forced to buy, they will raise the price.

Goes the story of the excellence of Hood's Sarsaparilla and what it has accomplished, and this is the strongest advertising which is done on behalf of this medicine. We endeavor to tell honestly what Hood's Sarsaparilla is and what it will do, but what it has done is far more important and far more potent. Its unequalled record of cures is sure to convince those who have never tried Hood's Sarsaparilla that it is an excellent medicine.

The Census Bureau has issued a bulletin on the subject of assessed valuation of property in the United States in 1890. The absolute wealth of the United States, according to the eleventh census, may be estimated at $63,448,000,000, or more than $1,000 per capita, against $61.45 per capita in 1880, $790 per capita in 1870, and $870 per capita in 1860.

The Book and Its Theme;

OR, THE BIBLE AND ITS MISSION.
By Rev. L. L. PICKETT.
230 Pages, Cloth. Price, $1.00.

This Book is two in one. Part I. shows why we believe the Bible. This is good to put in the hands of Infidels and skeptics, and will strengthen and give the faith of believers. It will make you know and love the Bible better.

Part II. gives us Holiness as the "theme" of the Bible, that is to teach holiness is the mission of God's Word. It explains the passages that seem to contradict the doctrine, and for this reason, if no other, ought to be in the hands of every worker. But it explains what holiness is, what it is not, how to get it, and its bearing on many other questions.

To Texas by Land and Water.

MR. EDITOR: Some time since I received an invitation to preach on the fifth of June before the Epworth League of North Texas Female College, Sherman, Texas. Being a believer in Bishop Keener's theory of "preparation," I started on the first. My experience on this trip vindicates the Bishop's theory. Had I not started ahead of time, I would, in the end, have been very much behind. Owing to the floods in Red river, it was impossible for the trains of the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific railroad to reach Shreveport. The railroad authorities, with their usual enterprise, arranged for transportation by water. The water route is from Sibley to Shreveport. The distance between these places by rail is a little less than thirty miles. The distance by the water route is one hundred and forty-five miles. When I reached Sibley, Wednesday night, I ascertained that I would have to wait twenty-four hours for a boat. I preferred to spend that interval at Minden rather than Sibley; so I took the Minden train, and, as the road is only five miles long, I was soon at its terminus. After a good night's sleep and a hearty breakfast at the Carter House, I found my way to the Methodist parsonage, where I spent a delightful day with Rev. J. W. Medlock and his interesting family. This was my first sight of Minden. It is a city set on a hill; has fine natural drainage, and ought to be a very beautiful place. It has very broad streets, which are delightfully shaded by majestic oaks and other forest trees of native growth. Its residences have ample grounds—a feature which might be limited with profit by larger places. I have always thought that this world is large enough for each family to have a little elbow-room. About dark I returned to Sibley, and was soon aboard the steamer Blue Wing, bound for Shreveport. She moved out about eleven o'clock, but in about three or four hours became enveloped in a fog so dense that she found it necessary to lie up until after six o'clock in the morning. The route is down Dorchest Bayou a few miles, then through Lake Blaneau about ten or twelve miles, then down Loggy Bayou into Red river, then up Red river. The distance from Sibley to the mouth of Loggy Bayou is fifty miles. This part of the route was one vast scene of desolation. With the exception of one or two hill-like elevations, the whole country was submerged. The houses were partly under water. Of some, only the roofs could be seen; of others, half the walls were visible. A few had the door covered only a foot or two. The farms were all deserted. Not a human being, or even a horse, cow or dog, could be seen. The only domestic animals visible were a few chickens perched on roofs and chimneys. After we entered Red river the desolation was not so great. Many of the houses had their floors above water, and were still tenanted, their occupants wearing that quiet, contented look which usually belongs to amphibians. Small patches of dry land were visible here and there; and these were occupied by herds of horses, mules and cows. Odd sights met our eyes occasionally. One house, with water all around it and up to the floor, had not over it, seemed to be owned by a dog. Two very gaunt, hungry-looking canines sat on the front gallery with an air of proprietorship, while no sign of their tenants was anywhere visible. Another residence, quite spacious and handsome, seemed to be the property of a fine specimen of the canine race. In the front hall stood a handsome bay looking out at us with an air of perfect nonchalance, as if there was nothing novel in his surroundings. Near Shreveport there were a few farms that had escaped inundation. This boat ride was a very enjoyable one. The officers of the boat were exceedingly courteous and attentive. They did all they could to make everybody have a good time. The passengers, almost without exception, seemed delighted with the novelty of the situation. Some ladies who were almost frightened out of their wits when they first learned that they were obliged to make a sea voyage, declared, before the voyage was over, that they "would not have missed it for anything."

ty-seven hours. In a little over an hour after reaching Shreveport, I was "all aboard" for Dallas. I took a sleeper, and hence saw nothing of the country until within a few miles of Dallas. Having nearly two hours in Dallas, I took advantage of the opportunity to see what I could of this famed Texas city. Young though she is, Dallas has quite a city-like air. She has many business houses of large dimensions, and supplied with all modern conveniences. Her streets are well paved, and she seems abundantly supplied with facilities for travel in the way of street cars. She has some buildings worthy of special mention—among them the court-house and the Oriental Hotel. The court-house is of immense size, tasteful in design, elegant in construction, and is said to have cost $250,000. The Oriental Hotel is one of the finest specimens of hotel architecture in the South. An idea of its magnificence may be obtained from its cost—$600,000.

I left Dallas about eight o'clock Saturday morning, and reached Sherman a little before noon. This is a part of Texas which I had never before visited. To say that I was pleased with it would be insufficient. I have traveled, more or less, in every Southern State except Florida, and in several Northern States, and I have yet to see any region which, for agricultural purposes, I regard as superior to this part of Texas. I was met at the train by the president of the college, Mrs. L. A. Kidd, and conducted to my apartments in one of the college buildings. Bishop Key, who was to preach the commencement sermon, was already on hand, and at the hour of my arrival was preaching in one of the churches of the city. As the Bishop was also the guest of the college, I had some social intercourse with him. I found him a most agreeable companion—urbane, communicative, highly entertaining. On Sunday I had my first opportunity to hear him dispense the Word. His sermon was clear-cut, well arranged, forceful, spiritual—an excellent discourse.

A large number of Texas preachers were in attendance upon the commencement exercises. This commencement was an eye-opener to me. I had been hearing occasionally, for the past two or three years, of the wonderful success of our gifted Mississippi woman, Mrs. Kidd, as a college president; but "the half had not been told me." In order fully to appreciate her success, the condition of the college at the time when she took charge of it should be known. It was emphatically a broken-down institution. It had suspended its operations for a year. It was burdened with debt. The trustees saw no way out of their embarrassment, and were willing to turn over the entire property in liquidation of the debt. This was its condition four years ago. Within that brief period a most marvelous change has been wrought. The debt has been provided for; additional buildings have been erected, which have more than doubled the capacity and the value of the college property; and a patronage has been secured which places this institution in the very front rank of Southern female colleges. During the session just closing its patronage reached three hundred. The pupils boarding in the institution number two hundred and eighteen. If there is another female college in the South which can make as good a showing for the current year, I know not where it is. Its musical department is especially noteworthy. This department has two hundred pupils. The principal musician receives a salary of twenty-three hundred dollars. Another member of the musical faculty gets eighteen hundred dollars; another fourteen hundred, and another thirteen hundred. This large patronage in the musical department has been secured in spite of an increase in rates of tuition. The old tuition fee was five dollars per month. Most of the pupils of this department now pay a tuition fee of eight dollars per month. Twenty-four places are needed to carry on the work of the department. Its art department is also very fine. I doubt if it is surpassed anywhere in the South. This department is under the management of Mrs. Lamar, of Washington, D. C., a daughter-in-law of Judge L. Q. Lamar. Mrs. Lamar has spent several years in fitting herself for such a position, and has had the very best facilities which the age affords. After studying in the very best art institutions in America, she spent several years in the great art galleries of Europe. The faculty of the institution now numbers seventeen. The college is supplied with electric lights, water-works, and all modern conveniences. It has the largest telescope in Texas. Its gymnasium is equipped in first-class style.

Mrs. Kidd has certainly won the heart of Texas. Trustees, pupils, patrons, preachers—all seem enthusiastic over the status and the prospects of this institution. Its patronage, however, is not confined to Texas. It has pupils from eleven States and two Territories. It turns out this year twenty-five graduates. I had to leave Monday in the midst of the graduating exercises. So far as I heard them, they were very entertaining, and, from all literary point of view, were worthy of this mammoth institution.

For an account of my return trip through Arkansas and Memphis you have no space at present; so, good-by until we meet again.

Dedication Services at Daisy, La.

Daisy is a postoffice and landing on the left bank of the Mississippi river, sixty miles from New Orleans, and equidistant between that city and Port Eads. Debarking from the steamer, which supplements railroad lack of service in this season of high water, we looked in vain for city, town or village, and only after we saw the beautiful church did we conclude that the place deserved a name, not to say the euphonic one with which the spirit of prophecy has graced it. The church, which was set apart from unholy uses there on Sunday, deserves anything complimentary in the way of title or description, and is a credit both to the community and the Church Extension Society, under whose auspices, in large measure, it was built. Costing the sum of fifteen hundred dollars, with the amount collected on dedication day, it is paid for, with an overplus of one hundred and sixty dollars in its treasury, which will be used, we are informed, in the erection of a parsonage. Nine members were received into the church after the sermon on Sunday, and these, with the number already obtained, raise the membership to nearly one hundred persons. The occasion of the dedication of this church is made historic by the fact that it is the first Methodist Church to be erected south of New Orleans in the State, and that it is on purely missionary ground, in a thickly settled and progressive community. Three times we preached on Sunday, emulating the example of the worthy chief pastor of the district upon his late visit, and to crowds of hearers who seemed eager for even crumbs. Some of the people traveled long distances, crossed the raging Mississippi in the season of flood, left inundated homes, and conducted themselves in such a way as to leave the impression that it was a great privilege, not to say rejoicing, to be present at these services. The pastor, Rev. J. R. Roy, is one of the "providential appointments" that we read about. He is in the succession of his Master, both as a carpenter, or skilled worker with tools, and as an able instructor of the people. When he is not hammering on shingles, he hammers on the dead consciences of sinners, and causes things to happen in both emergent spheres; and even where he is not skillful, he is resourceful, for, having no cunning with the brush, and no money in the missionary box either to buy material or to pay artisans, he administered the coat of handsome olive gray paint and brown trimmings, or, vice versa, necessary to the completion of the building, with his own fingers. With laud and some money already in possession, he will build a parsonage there this year; become, perhaps, God's apostle to the lower Mississippi; weep and sow in the near, and reap and rejoice in the remote. His predecessor, Bro. Scurlock, who labored here for four years, was much blessed of God in laying a sure foundation for these labors, which included not only a nucleus of church membership, but also the church-building which is the subject of this notice. We heard his name mentioned with affection by many.

The soil in this part of the Delta is very rich, and mainly devoted to orange and rice culture and truck farms, though oyster fishing in the adjoining bays is much followed. The writer passed through an orange farm of one hundred and fifty acres, whose crop of last year was sold for forty thousand dollars. Upon investigation, we learned that the sour orange, whose crop is worthless, matures in from three to four years, is a perennial and prolific bearer of fruit, and is absolutely proof against climatic rigors and the ordinary diseases that beset its species, while the sweet orange requires from seven to ten years to reach the fruiting period, frequently drops a year from its crop calendar, is exceedingly prone to decay, and goes down like prairie grass before desolating cold. Without presuming to moralize, may we not inquire, What is this but an effort of the diligent Rewarder to put even orange orchards out of the reach of the slug-gard?

Mosquitoes at this season are over this fair land in firmaments, horizons, clouds, by night and by day; large, brown in species, and venomous and bloodthirsty in mode of attack, and were the ore regret of our otherwise most timely and delightful visit. With mosquitoes to the right of us and mosquitoes to the left of us, we soliloquized, Why is every earthly paradise provided with these insect cormorants but to teach vain man to seek his heaven elsewhere? But if the upper firmaments abounded with living creatures, so also did the lower.

Walking to the back gate of our brother's premises on the morning after our arrival, an army of small land-crabs, known to the vernacular as "fiddlers," met us with astonishment great as our own, saluted precipitately, and then scurried into the grass and mud of an adjoining ditch. When we had recovered self-command sufficiently to smile back at this somewhat crabbed effort of nature to laugh at the intruder upon her secret haunts, we captured one of the miniature crustacea, and found it to consist of dormant claws large as that of the ocean crab, folded in ludicrous fashion above a body, and legs scarcely larger than that of an ordinary beetle, and possessing far less of strength. By long disuse and constant indulgence to amphibious proclivities, these noble members were no longer adapted to either feeding or fighting, and even the ridiculous little body in flight has acquired a sideways and furtive motion, which, to be laughed at, needs only to be seen. We looked at the deformity imprisoned between thumb and finger, whose impotent wriggle was plainly a wiggle—since, by a distortion of its powers, it can only move its attenuated form from right to left—and heard the Author of all saying, as plainly as we ever heard him speak in this lower realm, "Let every child of Adam both keep in his own element and stick to his own trade." The fiddler evidently lost both his sphere and occupation by straying and idling, and, warned by his fate, we must close this portion of our narrative with something like abruptness. But, in spite of mosquitoes and some other incidentals, this June visit to the kind people and beautiful country of the lower Mississippi Delta we have idealized and lucidated in a bright frame of retrospection, and before it we shall often stand watching the envious shadows sink into the solvent radiance, and asking ourselves if any effort of the memory could make this present to equal that past.

J. M. BEARD.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. White Davis, Black River circuit, Louisiana Conference, June 9: "The water is rising at the rate of four inches in twenty-four hours, and increasing. It is now in my yard, and in ten or twelve days will be in the house, unless it decreases in the rise. An overflow at this time of year will utterly ruin this country. Two more feet of water will leave very little land out, except the mounds. Church work at a complete stand-still."

Rev. G. H. Jacobs, Olive Branch, Miss., June 3: "I send my second report. Quarterly meeting over; presiding elder was on hand, and preached to the delight and profit of all. I propose. The only trouble was, he did not preach at other places, owing to previous arrangements. We are advancing. Sunday-schools much improved, congregations better, services more spiritual. Finances good for the times, as money is very scarce in this country. People raise cotton to buy corn and meat. We were very much impressed in reading Bishop Haygood's article. We need old-fashioned revivals all over this country, brought about in the old way. Come to our District Conference."

Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker, Bastrop, June 8: "Bastrop's future is brightening. We will soon have a railroad. At the coming of the road there will be an influx of people, an infusion of new blood into the veins of the community. Our church lost about thirty members last year by certificate on account of the decline of the town; but now we expect to gain some. Have received four by profession of faith. Have raised $1,000 towards the building of a church in the town of Mer Rouge. Want $2,000, and expect to get it if high water don't interfere. May God bless the work!"

Rev. Wm. G. Evans, Castor mission, May 31: "My second quarterly meeting has been held, and shows an advance except in point of finances. The times are very hard with us, otherwise this point would have been up to the standard. The church at Olla has doubled since its organization. On my last trip I took in three members there, and one at Ebenezer. Took in one at Masters yesterday. The prayer meeting at Mt. Parnassus is on the up-grade. I have done considerable visiting lately. In the last month I have walked eighty miles. It strains continue to show the way the wind blows, the prospects are for a glorious revival this year. We had Miss Belle Kearney with us at Masters Chapel on May 28. Her talk was of the usual high order. She organized a W. C. T. U. of twenty-five members. Pray for Castor mission."

Rev. T. L. Mellen, P. E., Meridian, June 9: "At Buckatunna, Bro. J. V. Penn has been assisting Bro. Tinnin in a protracted meeting in a new house of worship, which Bro. Penn dedicated Sunday, June 5. Results: 30 lukewarm Christians have professed a blessing; 23 have been converted, 16 applied for church membership, and many anxious penitents. At Scooba, Bro. N. M. Clark has been assisting Bro. Pugh, who writes, June 8: 'Our meeting is in good progress. There have been about 40 conversions. There is still a deep interest on the part of the people. It is now certain that we are to have a church here. . . . I am glad—yes, happy. God be praised.' And so Waynesboro answers to Blinnville, and Buckatunna to Scooba; and these glorious revivals are prophecies and promises to the remainder of the Meridian district. Let us fast and pray and have faith in God."

Rev. C. W. Perkins, Nesbit, Miss., June 2: "After a severe illness in my family of eight weeks, when all of my children and myself were down with slow fever, I have been permitted, by the grace of God, to attend the District Conference at Batesville, where we received great refreshing from the presence of the living God. Our beloved presiding elder is filling his new position with dignity and godly fear. He is attentive, loving and tender with all connected with him, and God is blessing his efforts. Notwithstanding the fact that my family and I have been called upon to pass through a fiery furnace heated seven times hotter than before, we have come out all right, for God was with us, and there is now a shower of blessings. I am moving up now on the enemy. Have taken in two members, which is simply the commencement of a glorious revival. It is the cloud the size of a man's hand that will soon become a mighty rain."

Rev. T. S. West, Wesson, Miss., May 31: "Here is my postal card report for May. Accessions, 13; by certificate, 3; on profession, 10. Prayer meetings at the church well attended; sometimes over a hundred are present. The members lead. I appoint a brother to conduct the meeting. He reads the Sunday-school lesson for the following Sunday, makes remarks on it, and asks others to do the same, restricting to five minutes; prayer and song interspersed, of course—all within fifty or, at most, sixty minutes. We begin on time, and, like time, wait for no man, much less a woman or a boy. May 28, at 7:30 o'clock, the Juvenile Missionary Society had an entertainment; songs and recitations. Mr. Weems and his little Mexican girl were with us. Receipts, $10. I send you a plo-ture of the president of our Juvenile Missionary Society to ornament your office. It explains itself. A dancing-master visited us last week. He left in disgust, pronouncing us cranky. He thinks our play far exceeds our brains. Some of the preachers here did not talk to suit him."

Rev. W. M. Stevens, South Warren circuit, June 2: "We have made some advances of an external nature, and we trust internally. Spiritually, our efforts have not been void of fruits. However, we shall not enumerate, in the one or the other particular, for the true results of our labors can only be revealed in that great day when the secrets of all hearts shall be made known. Our second Quarterly Conference is just over. Bro. Little was with us in the Spirit of the Master, presiding with ease, preaching with power and demonstration of the Spirit. We all feel refreshed by his visit. The death-angel has just swept over our land and left us very sad. We have endured what may well be called 'funeral week,' three having passed from among us during this brief space of time. Let me say to the young brethren who have preceded me here: Our dear 'grandma' (Mrs. J. A. Patterson) is dead. The parsonage question is being agitated, and, from present indications, we expect by Fall to have a comfortable home for the preacher on this work. Finances are considerably behind at present; but, without some serious, insurmountable difficulty, we hope to be able to report all in full at Conference."

Rev. H. O. White, P. E., Delhi, La., June 2: "We are in the midst of the overflow. Water, water, water everywhere. I suppose, at least, one-third of this district is under water, and it is still rising in some places at the rate of fourteen inches in twenty-four hours. I am trying to serve the district under great difficulties. Travel is very much interrupted by the water. The preachers are faithfully working away. Bro. Godfrey is trying to complete our church at Fleyd. The man who first undertook to build it seems to have known absolutely nothing about building; therefore, we had to tear it down after it was weatherboarded and the sheathing put on. It is costing much more than it ought. We will have a very neat building when it is finished. Bro. Godfrey is in great favor with his people. We are also building a church at Girard. I noticed that the frame is up. Money is very scarce in these parts. Only two or three of the preachers have received anything like a support in money, and the outlook for the future is not at all encouraging. How preachers manage to live on so little money is an unsolved mystery to me. Now, my dear brother, I hereby extend to you a most cordial invitation to attend our District Conference at Rayville. I don't know that we can do you much good, but you can help us very much. Come without fail."

Rev. G. R. Ellis, Eastabuchie, June 3: "Our second Quarterly Conference was held in Eastabuchie on May 21. A fair representation of official members were present. Our presiding elder was with us, but not able to preach. Continued the meeting till Thursday, May 26, with gratifying results. Bros. D. C. Rawls and M. L. White were with me in the Spirit of the Master. From Eastabuchie, Bro. Rawls and myself went to Prospect, an appointment eighteen miles distant, and held a two days' meeting. Received two members, baptized two children and one adult. On Sunday, at eleven o'clock, the congregation was so large that but little over half could get inside the house. At this point we expect to build a church before the close of the year. About $175 worth of improvements have been added to our church and parsonage property in Eastabuchie since the Annual Conference. Money matters are exceedingly tight in these 'low grounds of sorrow' at present, but think that there will be a relaxation after awhile. We have a great many noble Christian men and women on this work, while there are others in the church that are not worth three ohews of tobacco to it. I wish to extend thanks to Dr. C. G. Andrews, of Meridian, for a contribution of $10 for the painting of our church in Eastabuchie. Would be truly grateful if others would do likewise, as there is still about $30 behind on this work. Who will be the first to take stock? Pray for us."

"Stern-browed and somber seemed the silent guide
That took my listless hand, morn after morn,
And drew and lone the weary path he trod,
Thick set with loam and thorn.

Fair had it seemed where the green land lay, Spanned by the silver brooklets winding thru the Glad with the song of birds and gay with flowers.
Glimmered with the morning dew.

But still my grave guide kept her steadfast course,
Past all life's sunny fields and gardens fair, While with reluctant feet I followed on O'er hillside bleak and bare.

Nor knew the thorny path led up to God
Till earth's enchantment from my vision fell,
And in each footstep past I saw bloom forth
The starry immortelle.

Then to my waiting guide I turned again,
And lo! transfigured on the shining height,
She stood an angel fair, her radiant brow
Crowned with celestial light.

Death of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D.

"A grave on a heathen shore may be of more value to the cause of Christ than a pulpit in Christian lands."

The above is from the April number of the Missionary Reporter, and ere we had read its pages the Southern Methodist Church came into possession of such an inheritance in Japan. Hard by the shore of the beautiful Inland Sea, that he loved so well, and along whose borders he wrought so faithfully and so successfully, our dear father and brother, Dr. J. W. Lambuth, the first of our number to fall in this land, has found his grave. I write under the shadow of the greatest grief that has yet come to our mission; and, although we knew that he was sick, and seriously so, yet his death was as great a shock to us as it could have been to the church at home, when the cablegram of the twenty-eighth of April announced it to them.

Dr. Lambuth was ill less than two weeks. A cold, contracted at a child's funeral—at which he officiated—resulted in pneumonia of the left lung. This was soon seriously complicated by the return of an old trouble, which had been chronic, while he lived in China, caused by that malarious atmosphere. Everything within the range of human skill was done to save him. The physicians in charge of the case watched it with the utmost care; his wife, a most skillful nurse, was constant in her attentions, anticipating his every want, and doing her utmost to make him comfortable; while Dr. Kiu, of our own mission, was with him for ten nights, and was as devoted and solicitous as if she had been an own daughter; but it was not to be. He who doeth all things well willed otherwise, and our brother is not, for God has taken him.

It was my sad privilege to be with Dr. Lambuth much during his illness, being his nearest neighbor; to receive from him his last messages, and at death to close his eyes. The church at home will be anxious to learn about the death of their oldest representative in the foreign field.

He died "well." It could not have been otherwise. After nearly fifty years of earnest, devoted toil in the Master's service, we would expect nothing else. He who has promised to be with those who go forth in his name was with his aged servant even "unto the end." Several times during his sickness he said to those around him, "Jesus has come," "Jesus is here," "I know it is Jesus." The day before he died he greeted me in the morning, after a very trying night, with the remark, "God has been so good to me." After a brief conversation on the goodness of God, in which I quoted some passages of Scripture, and several stanzas of "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord," he turned to me, and said, "When I am weak, then am I strong." "Strong in faith?" I asked. "No," said he; "strong in Christ." This passage fully types his experience during all his illness. As he grew weaker he grew stronger. As the outward man perished, the inward man was renewed day by day, until, toward the end, so strong in Christ was he, that had his strength of body permitted, he would certainly have poured forth his soul in rapturous praises unto "God, who was so good unto him."

His was a triumphant death, a glorious "victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." His sick-bed was very near heaven. The angels of God were there ministering unto him, and there was the presence of another, and "the form was like the Son of God." Without doubt, Bro. Lambuth saw and heard things that it was "not lawful for man to utter." Had our eyes been "opened," like his, to spiritual things, and had our ears been attuned to heavenly symphonies, we, too, would, doubtless, have seen things that were not of earth, and been ravished with the music of the other world. During his last day he said to his wife: "I have views of things that are indescribably beautiful. Things that are opening up before me, coming and going, growing brighter and surer.

Jesus is with me; he is right here. I know it is Jesus." Still speaking to Mrs. Lambuth, he said: "I leave you with the Lord. He will take care of you; yes, and I will be waiting and watching for you and the children." May they all meet him in that day!

To the church at home he sent this message: "If I should be taken away, tell them I died at my post." This was literally true. His last church service was holding the Kobe Quarterly Conference; and, while in the chair, he had a chill, having had another earlier in the day. I urged him to go to bed, saying that I could not prevail on him to do so, and he remained until the end, suffering all the time. At its close he went to bed, never to leave it alive. Well might he say, "Tell the church at home I died at my post!"

"My body with my charge lay down,
And cease at once to work and live."

He sent another message to the church—one that shows how heavily the work lay on his heart, and how sorely he felt the need of this land. It was this: "We have a great work to do; send more men." Will the church at home, that he loved so well, and of which he was such a devoted servant, heed the last appeal of this noble veteran?—or will it be in vain? No words of mine can add any weight to it. The message came from the dying lips of your oldest representative in the foreign field, and surely it is fraught with all the weight and force that it is possible for it to have. What will be the answer of the church?

There were other messages, among them one to the Japanese Christians, containing an earnest exhortation; and another to the members of the Japan Mission, full of love and fatherly tenderness.

Others will write of the life of this noble servant of God, and of his work in China and in Japan. To me it has fallen to tell of his death. His life was one of supreme consecration to God. It was full of good deeds and of earnest service, and not till the records of the last day shall tell the story will we know it in its fullness.

"When eternally shall bind them,
A golden volume we shall find them,
God's light falling on the leaves."

We hurried him from the Kobe Methodist Church, of which he was the founder and first pastor; and, notwithstanding it was raining hard, the house was crowded. Much respect and sympathy were shown, and the floral tributes were numerous and beautiful. All the papers had very kind notices of his life and work, and the United States flag at the American consulate was at half-mast. The services were of the usual character. Dr. Dukes offered the prayer; Bros. Newton and Usaki and the writer made the addresses. It was a solemn occasion, and, no doubt, deep and lasting impressions were made. We hurried him as the shadows of evening were falling around us, and covered his grave with a mass of pure white flowers—fit emblem of his spotless Christian character. He sleeps "neath the pines of the Kobe Cemetery, where their sad sighings mingle mournfully with the solemn moan of the sea near by, and he sleeps well, for he sleeps in Jesus.

W. E. TOWSON.

Kobe, Japan.

Resolutions on the death of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D., adopted by the Japan Mission at a called meeting, April 30, 1892, at Kobe, Japan:

Whereas, In the providence of God, our senior member, Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D., presiding elder of Kobe district and chairman of our mission, has been removed from his labors on earth; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, in mission meeting assembled, do hereby express our deep sense of loss occasioned by his death, our profound respect for his godly character, and our love for him as a father and associate in the work of the Master.

Resolved, That our deep and tender sympathies are extended to the family of our deceased brother, and that our prayers shall be offered that the Lord may keep and comfort them in this hour of trial.

Resolved, That we hear testimony to Dr. Lambuth's ability as a wise counselor and an exemplary leader, rich in Christian experience and ripe in Christian graces. His devotion and zeal, based upon nearly forty years of practical Christian work in the East, constituted him at once the safest of guides in all the exigencies of missionary work. We shall sorely miss his words of wisdom and his kind advice.

Resolved, That we do herein subscribe most heartily to his message to the home church: "We have a great work to do! Tell them to send more men." If we can add any weight to the dying appeal of this noble veteran in the work, we say, "Gracious them!"

Resolved, That we appropriate his message to us, his brethren in the work. God help us to do and to die at the post of duty, faithful to every interest of our high calling.

Resolved, That we endorse his words to the brethren and sisters of the native church, and pray that the Holy Spirit may fill their hearts and ours unutterably full of glory and of God.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each member of the family, to the Missionary Reporter, and to all of the church papers at home.

Resolved, That these resolutions be engrossed upon a page of our Minutes.

The Light is Dawning.

In response to a demand made by me, through the columns of the Advocate, for the publication of the distribution of the home mission fund, the Rev. J. P. Dyrke, secretary of the Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, publishes in the Advocate, of last week's issue, the pastoral charges that received aid, with the amount paid to each charge.

But he does not publish the names of the preachers helped by this fund, nor the amount they received from the people they served. The ordinary reader of the Advocate can't tell from that imposing row of figures who were the happy recipients of $350 and $300 of the money supplied by the contributors to this fund, many of whom were served by preachers who were not paid that much by the people they served, and to whom no appropriation was made from this fund.

By your permission, Mr. Editor, I will turn on a little more light by publishing the names of the preachers helped by this fund, and to what extent, together with the amount paid them by the people of their several charges. This will enable the people who supply the money, and who were induced to give by being told that it would be applied to needy preachers that fall to get a support from the people they serve, a chance to see for themselves how their money is appropriated. I will not say whether these appropriations were judicious or otherwise; I simply want the facts published without note or comment.

We take four charges receiving the largest appropriations, and also several receiving small amounts, as a fair sample of the management of this fund.

To South Vicksburg was appropriated $350; served by Rev. F. M. Keen, who reports 146 members, from whom he received $392.65, to which add appropriation, and it aggregates $742.65. Bro. Keen is a young man, married, with one or two children.

To West Jackson was appropriated $300; served by Rev. B. F. Lewis, who reports 196 members, from whom he received $600—total, $900. Bro. Lewis is a young, married man, without children, and was supplied with a well-furnished house, rent free.

To Wesley Chapel, Natchez, was paid $300; served by M. L. Burton, who reports a membership of 283, from whom he received $500—total, $800. Bro. Burton is a young married man, with one or two children, perhaps.

To Meridian, West End, was paid $300; served by N. B. Harmon, who reports 340 members, which paid $535—total, $835. Bro. Harmon is a young man, and was single at the time the appropriation was made, and did not marry till near the end of the year.

To Meridian, East End, was paid $300; served by H. C. Brown, who reports 128 members, which paid him $400—total, $700. Bro. Brown is young, and was single until the first of this Conference year.

Now, let us give a few samples of men and places that got but little help:

Crystal Springs circuit, supplied by Dr. Beal, who reports a membership of 89, which paid $77; appropriated $100—total, $177.

To Fannin was appropriated $100; served by K. S. Enoch, who reports a membership of 164, which paid $195.95—total, $295.95. Bro. Enoch is a young man, and, I think, unmarried.

Hillboro circuit has a membership of 375, which paid $201; appropriated $100—total, $301; served by R. H. Barr, with a wife and seven or eight children.

Westville, Clarksburg and Decatur, each received $75. The Minutes show that Westville paid $261.05; Clarksburg, $143.60, and Decatur, $125. The last named was supplied by T. H. Rivers, with a wife and eight or ten children.

One more sample of the management of this fund, by way of concluding this article:

At the Conference held at Port Gibson in December, '89, there was appropriated to the presiding elder of a certain district, $300. The several charges of that district were paying the presiding elder at that time, and for several years preceding, somewhere between seven and eight hundred dollars; and at the end of that year the presiding elder who received that appropriation reported more than $800 paid by the district, which was over $200 more than was paid any pastor in that district. Some pastors in that district, with large and expensive families, to whom no appropriation was made, reported less than $300; and yet these same pastors took collections for home missions, with no suspicion that they were helping to supplement the salary of their presiding elder. This was not published, but I got it from what I supposed reliable sources.

Shall the Home Be Sold?

Dear Friends: The Summer brings to nearly all thoughts of rest, of recreation, and many are preparing for self-indulgence; but in your preparation I beg you will stop one moment to consider the case of a pioneer preacher. He was sent to a charge in the western frontier where house-rent is exceedingly high. Debt for house-rent staring him in the face, he went to work heroically to build the parsonage that was an absolute necessity. The scattered members of the charge did all that lay in their power. Rather than continue the waste of renting, he made himself personally responsible for the rest. A comfortable house was built. But creditors are pressing. Feeling they have done their best, he has at last appealed to the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, and writes either the house must be sold and lost to the church, or he must sell the horse and vehicle positively necessary, in the absence of other means of conveyance, to travel a circuit as large as a district in the old Conference. He has been in that field for years. His wife's health is falling under hardships, for on the wife falls the burden, and to see her suffer takes down a man's spirit. The time has come when he must ask help. If the parsonage, built with such a struggle, is lost, no preacher can live there; for in the cold, stormy land of blizzards comfortable shelter is necessary to life. The dues of our society come in at stated times, and there are many needy places waiting to receive those funds as soon as they reach our treasury. This case can not wait. It needs prompt attention. I state the facts to you, feeling that is all that is necessary. Help is needed now before it is too late. Remember that it is God's cause; that it is in his name we ask your help to keep the gospel in a place where after great labor over one hundred children have been brought into Sunday-school. We ask you will give at once. Send your contributions to Mrs. Geo. P. Kendrick, treasurer, 320 Fifth street, Louisville, Ky. Yours,

LUCINDA B. HELM,
Gen. Sec. Parsonage and Home Miss. Society.

Memoir of Mrs. V. D. Skipper.

At four o'clock, on the evening of May 26, 1892, we buried Sister Margaret S. Skipper, wife of our Bro. V. D. Skipper, of the Mississippi Conference.

How suggestive of the great and glorious work of the church of God in preparing souls for eternal happiness that this devoted, consecrated servant should be the first home from its altars. Just the Sabbath before Dr. W. C. Black had dedicated this new church to the service of God. The large and sympathizing congregation that assembled around the grave told of the esteem in which she was held and their love for her memory.

At the last session of our Conference her husband was appointed to the Sharon charge, and though she has been in poor health, and unable to mingle much with the people, yet all had learned enough of her to be satisfied of her true worth.

Sister Skipper was reared in Kemper county, Miss., where she was born March 18, 1850. Her father, Rev. J. H. Moore, was a local Methodist preacher. To him and the now widowed mother were added a large family of children, she being the fifth daughter.

At the early age of fifteen she was converted and joined the Methodist Church. She was a faithful attendant upon the Sunday-school and consistent always in her Christian profession. On July 14, 1878, she was married to the Rev. V. D. Skipper, and for ten years she has been his most efficient companion in the itinerant ranks.

Having no children, she has given herself entirely to the work of the church, aiding her husband in all things that make for the glory of God and salvation of men. While she was possessed of much zeal, she was also possessed of that "meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price." As a woman, she was content to do the work of woman in the Master's vineyard.

For several weeks before her death Sister Skipper was the victim of great suffering, all of which she bore with patience and Christian fortitude. Though at times her suffering was intense, yet through three long weeks of waiting she was not heard to murmur.

For two weeks she was thought daily to be dying. During this time she spoke many words of cheer and warning to those who waited about her. Her faith in the Master never faltered; her rejoicing was calm and convincing.

To those who shall appropriate this lesson her death is a benediction. A complete triumph, a peaceful end. Our brother mourns not as those without hope.

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

Shreveport District Conference.

The Shreveport District Conference convened at Coushatta, La., May 26; but, on account of the prevailing high waters and busy season of the year with the agricultural classes, the attendance was very small.

Our beloved presiding elder with his usual promptness and will, which is equal to almost any possibility, was on hand, and presided with a firm, but tender and loving hand over the "boys" (as most of the preachers present were young).

The business of the Conference was conducted with dispatch and profit. The preaching was earnest and pointed, and we trust some good work was done. Congregations were large and attentive; the largest number of communicants I have seen in a great while.

Bro. J. E. Denson makes an admirable Conference host, and the people entertain right royally. Some of the brethren said they could easily entertain an Annual Conference. The reports from the various charges were not very encouraging. Finances were low, no circuit-reporting more than twenty-five per cent. of salary paid. No revivals, few accessions, but the congregations reported large.

Manfield was selected for holding next session.

I herewith enclose you some resolutions passed on the Sunday opening of the Columbian Exposition.

W. F. HENDERSON, Sec.

Whereas, As ministers and laymen, members of the Shreveport District Conference, M. E. Church, South, we feel duty bound to uphold the institutions of the Bible, and believing, as we do, that all governmental life is proportionately successful to our strict adherence to and uncompromising faith in such institutions; And whereas, We hold in sacredness the Holy Sabbath, knowing it to be an indispensable adjunct to our legal codes, the great motor power of our holy faith, one of the distinctive features of our Christian civilization; the institution perpetuating our peace and hope; And whereas, We look with natural displeasure upon any movement looking towards the secularization of this great day, and as Christian men pledged to foster and support the institutions of our God; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we express to the commission having in charge the management of the World's Fair our hearty disapprobation of the contemplated opening of the Exposition on Sunday.

Resolved, That we respectfully memorialize the Congressmen of the United States to withhold any additional appropriations to the Columbian Exposition save on the assurance of closed gates on Sunday.

Resolved, That we request the authorities of the city of Chicago to use all legitimate influence to operate against such a fatal action.

Malone College.

The commencement exercises of Malone College for young ladies have just closed. It affords me great pleasure, as a friend and trustee of the college, to report to the readers of the Advocate that the past session has been a pleasant and profitable one. Although the college is in its infancy, it has put aside its swaddling-clothes and sprung into existence as a well-equipped college for girls. The discipline of the school is firm and homelike. The president, Rev. J. W. Honnolly, is noted for his firmness and fidelity. The examinations showed that "most thorough work had been done in training the young ladies for the great work of life. Eight were presented with diplomas—the seals of graduation. The names of the young ladies who are thus fortunate are: Misses Irene McKie, Elizabeth Lea, Augusta Finley, Chastelot Rylee, Lizzie Snider, Maggie Ford, Fanny McKie, Lydia Boyd, Judge J. T. Fant presented the diplomas in a beautiful and eloquent speech, which made me feel as if he was in some great flower garden. There are a few facts respecting Malone College I wish to emphasize.

First. Each teacher is a specialist in her department. Great care has been exercised in selecting teachers who have peculiar fitness and fondness for the special work she is expected to do. As a result of the past year's work these teachers have all been re-elected except one, who expects to go North to study herself. The trustees and patrons are entirely satisfied, so far as I know, with the progress of the pupils.

Second. No healthier spot can be found in Mississippi than Holly Springs. The air here is pure, the water is good, the people live to be old, and a general condition of good health prevails. There are no swamps or stagnant lakes near Holly Springs to produce malaria.

Third. The religious influence here is very fine. Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, young people's societies are large and interesting. Our people are religious. If anyone desires information concerning expenses of the school, etc., please write to Rev. J. W. Honnolly, president, Holly Springs, Miss. Next annual session will begin Monday, Sept. 5, 1892. T. W. LEWIS.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—June 13, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LA PRADÉ.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

Our lessons for the quarter now ending have included sublime and tender lyrics, and remarkable passages of personal history. A most helpful and wise use of review day would be to make it the occasion for memorizing the Psalms of the quarters' lessons, and the leading facts of the history of Daniel and his three friends in Babylon. Each pupil should commit to memory, at least, the first, thirteenth, twenty-third, fifty-first and one hundred and third Psalms. Perhaps some among our teachers can not repeat these wonderfully beautiful and helpful sacred poems.

Anything like an exhaustive review of the eleven lessons of the second quarter would be impossible here; but, by some suggestions touching the golden texts, in regular order, we may be of some service. Read the texts.

First.—Real happiness is not the product of surroundings, nor does it depend, in any important sense, on worldly circumstances. It depends upon character. To conform to the opinions and habits of wicked men is to give proof of weak or bad character. "Those who do this become more and more miserable, as they grow more and more wicked."

Second.—People are apt to put their trust in money, or position, or learning, or influential friends. All these finally fail. The power of them is too limited and too short-lived. Only Christ has "all power;" he is unchangeable; he is "able to keep that committed unto him against that day."

Third.—The soul must have a recognized and sufficient rule of conduct. Public opinion, private judgment, human philosophy, precedent, all vary. The law of God is the final court of appeal. It turns the soul to its requirements; conformity to it is moral correctness.

Fourth.—The world is full of dangerous places; the soul has many enemies. God only is sufficient for us, and he is caring for us. We have many needs, but not one that lies beyond his power and his love. His goodness and care stretch over all our wants.

Fifth.—There is no healthy growth from a corrupt beginning. Maturity of badness is never goodness. We must have clean hearts, right spirits. God alone can clean an unclean heart. Then joy, and usefulness, and development along all good lines will follow.

Sixth.—To live with a noble, unselfish, pure-minded man or woman is a joy and a blessing; much more to dwell with God. To frequent his house, to dwell there, to hold communion with him undisturbed—that is to live indeed. It is foolish and sinful to avoid God's house. Let each teacher do all that can be done to secure habitual attendance at church services on the part of all the class.

Seventh.—We say, "Thank you," to a friend, or to a stranger, when some simple service is rendered us. God has been blessing us all our lives. Have we thanked him? Every good gift is from him. Let public acknowledgment be made, and all our powers devoted to him. Less than this is base ingratitude.

Eighth.—Once for all, everyone who would be true to himself and to God must settle the question of his allegiance. It must not be an open question. All questions of conduct are settled when this one is; if embraced all. Have you settled it?

Ninth.—"All things"—past, present, to come—are known to God. He says that Christ's kingdom shall prevail; we need not be disturbed when opposing forces seem successful. Jesus shall reign, finally, everywhere. We are appointed to spread the good news to declare the gospel.

Tenth.—God does not always save our bodies and property from the fire, from all harm. But he does save us. Trusting in him, and walking in obedience to his commandments, we are safe. Anything that comes to good for us then.

Eleventh.—For wise purposes Daniel's life was saved. If he had been destroyed, that were better than to have done wrong. Anything better than to sin against God. Goodness pays, here, as well as hereafter. God cares for his own. If they are called upon to suffer for him, and they do it "as unto him," it causes the suffering to work for him "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Stephens and Featherston Debate.

On the first Sunday in May Rev. Jno. A. Stephens, the Campbellite evangelist of Mississippi, commenced a series of meetings, which continued about eighteen days, in the Baptist Church at Woodville. His manner of conducting the services drew people of all classes and religions to attend more or less; but it was derogatory to all who were not of his denomination. The Baptists and Presbyterians of the place were without pastors. Rev. H. Walter Featherston, the pastor of the Methodist Church, attended the meetings and heard and saw enough to lead to an interview and correspondence with the evangelist, which resulted in a debate before the public in the court-house, commencing on the eighteenth and continuing four days. The questions were as follows:

1. "The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is truly a church of Christ, as set forth in the New Testament." Featherston affirms, Stephens denies. 2. "The Scriptures teach that the Holy Spirit comes into immediate and personal contact with the sinner's heart in conversion." Featherston affirms, Stephens denies. 3. "Baptism when administered to a penitent believer, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, is in order to the remission of sins that are past." Stephens affirms, Featherston denies. 4. "Immersion in water of the proper subject is the baptism described in the New Testament." Stephens affirms, Featherston denies.

The debate opened at ten A. M. and three P. M. each day. Prayer at the opening and the benediction at the closing. The speakers were allowed forty minutes each at the opening of each question and thirty minutes for each subsequent speech, altogether amounting to thirty-two. There is not much difference in the ages of the two men—Stephens, perhaps, being a little younger; but in manner of address there is a striking contrast, which I could not describe without showing partiality.

1. The affirmative of the first question was supported by Bro. Featherston in showing the New Testament meaning of a church; that it is an organized body, with officers, ordinances, meetings and services; that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has all these, and for the same purposes as set forth in the New Testament and realized in fruit-bearing. All this was so clearly demonstrated that the negative could do nothing to overthrow the arguments, but magnified what he believed to be errors in doctrine and polity stated in the Methodist Discipline. He admitted that some Methodists would go to heaven, but it would be in spite of their church. The affirmative emphasized the fact that perfection, or the absence of error, in doctrine was never essential to the existence of a church; otherwise there had never been a church.

2. To sustain the affirmative of the second proposition many passages of Scripture were referred to, running from Genesis to Revelation, teaching the direct action of the Holy Spirit in physical and spiritual creation; that the conversion of a sinner is a miracle, and the same power is necessary to make a sinner a new creature that created all things; that whatever means may be used, as the word or ordinances of God, the Holy Spirit is the powerful agent in them; in the conversion of the soul; and that the work of salvation is by the Spirit in the sinner. The negative reviewed the positions, examined the Scriptures, cited other passages, emphasized the word as the power in conversion, and labored to show the efficacy of the word and water.

3. Bro. Stephens affirmed the third proposition, and to sustain it he referred to all the Scriptures that teach remission of sins in connection with baptism. The argument appeared to be that baptism is the act of obedience in which the sins that are past are remitted, and while he would not say there is no remission of sins without baptism, that is the logical conclusion, and to avoid the consequences of it he accepted many cases. Bro. Featherston's denial was founded upon the absurdity of a physical cause producing a spiritual effect; cases of acceptance and justification without or before baptism; and the Scriptures that teach so plainly the doctrine of justification by faith, without rites and ceremonies.

4. The fourth proposition was affirmed by Bro. Stephens, and his arguments were drawn mainly from the phrases in the Scriptures in connection with baptism, as "in Jordan," "straightway out of the water," "They went down into the water," etc.; but he admitted that baptism was another act, and he understood that to be immersion. He referred to all the places in the Scriptures that seemed to support that view, but failed to show it all the help the Greek lexicons would give him. Bro. Featherston denied immersion for baptism in the New Testament; argued that it could not be sustained by defining the Greek word; that the only true definition of the terms used for baptism was in the Scriptures; that Scripture explained Scripture, and by this method he showed that immersion was without support from Scripture, and that the action described by the use of the words, "sprinkle," "pour" and "wash" and "pour out," and "fell on," and "clean water upon you," is what is represented in the New Testament by baptism, as defined by John the Baptist, Christ, Peter and Paul. This view is consistent with all that is taught in the Scriptures on the subject.

The people who heard the debate were the judges. Of course, there was a division in the decision. There was no public expression of results. Bro. Stephens had made a few proselytes during his meeting. One has returned to her own family since the debate.

Indian Mission.

The Brandon District Conference embraced the third Sunday in April at Carthage. I reached there Thursday evening. The attendance was small, but the session was pleasant and profitable. On Friday night a missionary meeting was held. The sermon was preached by Rev. B. F. Lewis, of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. The argument in favor of missions was strong and forcible.

After the sermon I was called on to give an account of our work among the Choctaws, and, on motion of Rev. D. P. Bradford, a voluntary contribution was made to the amount of $7.30 to purchase books for the Indians. This money is being used to great advantage in a free distribution of books.

On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April I started to my appointment on the north side of Pearl river. I reached Wiley's house about eleven o'clock, and found a large crowd of Indians gathered there, and I soon learned that there was to be an Indian wedding near by. As I had never seen an Indian wedding, I decided to wait, and witness it, thinking it would afford a good opportunity to get acquainted with the Indians. Perhaps an account of this wedding would be of some interest to the readers; so I will give it just as I saw it.

Two chairs were placed side by side in the yard. Two maids led the bride to one of the chairs. She was dressed in a plain calico dress with a red handkerchief tied over her head, almost covering her face. Here she remained for some time. After a while two young men led the groom and seated him in the other chair by the side of the bride. The friends and relatives of the groom then began to give presents, such as handkerchiefs, ribbons, money, etc., placing them on the head of the bride. Two young men stood behind and took the presents off her head as they were placed on. After that they had a handshaking with the groom, but not with the bride. These presents were divided among the family and near relatives of the bride. This I learned was the price paid for the girl. There was no more attention given the married couple, neither did they notice each other, but went off in opposite directions and mingled with the crowd. Dinner was announced, and all went to the table, which was in a grove about seventy-five yards away. Everything passed off quietly and orderly, and but little said by anyone. Thus ended the Indian wedding.

I spent the night in this community with a good Methodist family, and went early Sunday morning to my appointment. I found on arrival a Choctaw Baptist preacher there, by the name of Ben Williamson. I held a council with him and proposed for him to take a part in the service, which he did. I preached at eleven o'clock from Rom. 1, 16. The congregation was small, about fifteen in all. At the close of this service nine persons presented themselves for prayer. In the afternoon Ben Williamson preached from Mark xvi, 16. He held the little congregation spellbound for nearly an hour. He preached with great power and earnestness.

On Saturday before the first Sunday in May I went out in Kemper county to meet an appointment among the Tallahatchie Indians. I arrived there late in the evening and found that no arrangement had been made for preaching, as the matter had not been well understood among them. But as soon as they learned that I was in the neighborhood, they stirred around and by preaching-time next morning had secured an old vacant house and collected a congregation of twelve or fifteen. There being no seats in the house, and no time to make any, the congregation sat on the floor. I used an old empty bee-gum for a pulpit. I preached as best I could; had two penitents—one of them wept for some time. I announced preaching again for three o'clock in the evening. By this time the appointment was more generally known, and the congregation had increased to twenty Indians and about the same number of white people. I preached again, using my bee-gum for a pulpit, and the people sat on the floor. At this service I had three more earnest penitents for prayer. I proposed leaving an appointment if they desired it. One Indian spoke, and said he thought he could represent them all, and he wanted me to come back. Before dismissing them they agreed to fix seats in the house, the white people agreeing to help. They also agreed to organize a Sunday-school at my next appointment. At this place I met the Indian with whom I had my first experience (Johnson). He was passing by and heard that I was there, and he came at once to see me. He seemed real glad to meet me, and I was glad to see him. He stayed for the evening service and took an active part in it. He was one of the penitents.

The second Sunday was spent with the Beecher Indians, west of Philadelphia. I preached at Isham Gamble's house. Isham has been attending services conducted by the "Holiness people," and claims to be sanctified. I do not propose to discuss the subject of sanctification, but will say I believe this Indian is converted and is enjoying religion. I conducted the preliminary service in Choctaw, as I have learned to read, and sing the Choctaw language. I preached in English, and Isham explained it in Choctaw. There were about fifteen Indians present. Three of them were members of the church. They were very attentive; none of them asked for prayer. They invited me to come back, which I agreed to do. W. W. What tender memories often cluster around a lock of hair. Often upon taking up an old book purchased at a stall or laid away for years on some shelf, a few strands of hair tied with silk or ribbon appear between the leaves.

No such sentiment, however, is excited by the loss of hair that has gone no one knows where, leaving no trace behind but the barren scalp. It is a head seldom arouses reverence; it is flowing locks of gray that poetry usually associates with beautiful old age. Whoever wishes to grow old at once gracefully and beautifully, should take time by the forelock and begin using Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which puts the scalp at once in a healthy condition, and by supplying the elements necessary to renew and encourage hair growth, causes the most barren or impoverished head to soon wear a luxuriant coat. Ladies, especially, find it of the greatest service, and where nothing is the matter with the hair use it as a dressing. It imparts vigor in any case. It costs $1.00 per bottle and is made by the Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

John Ruskin says: "It is only by labor that thoughts can be made healthy, and only by thoughts that labor can be made happy, and the two can not be separated with impunity."

We are too fond of our own will. We want to be doing what we fancy to be mighty things; but the great point is to do small things when called to them in a right spirit.—Occil.

What is Scrofula? It is that impurity in the blood, which accumulates in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of phlegms, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Editorial Correspondence.

BATON ROUGE, LA.

Occasionally the editor slips out of town, and thus gets away from the noise and out of reach of the hungry Creole mosquitoes. Not long since, "through floods," if not "through fires," his duty called him to our beautiful capital, embowered in her spreading oaks on the bank of the mighty Mississippi, ninety miles by rail away from the Crescent City. The trip was not as pleasant and comfortable as he has made over the same road. Having to pass five or six miles on a temporary and shaky trestle-work over the rushing waters of an angry crevasse does not create a very agreeable sensation. But the "dangers by water" were safely passed, if not passed "on schedule time."

The writer was once pastor of the Methodist flock at Baton Rouge. That was "in the long ago," ere the wrinkles began to adorn his brow or the silvery locks betoken the creeping on of age, and before sciatic twinges began to remind him of waning vitality. Well does he remember with what a sinking heart the young pastor of five years growth took the pastoral lines out of the hands of W. E. M. Linfield! Well does he remember with what trepidation he essayed to preach that first Sunday on the text: "Hold fast the profession of your faith without wavering"! Well does he remember when the effort was over, how he was encouraged by the gentle pressure of the hand by brethren and sisters in token of appreciation! Ah, those were two memorable years! Associations were formed which time has been strengthening ever since. During those years some souls started for heaven and have long been enjoying its beatitudes, and others are still "homeward plodding," fully expecting to reach the shining shore. One Sabbath can never be forgotten. It was an ordinary quarterly meeting occasion. Our presiding elder, Dr. Keener, had preached and administered the communion service, and, turning to the young pastor, asked: "Shall I open the doors of the church?" The pastor nodded assent. The presiding elder made a few appropriate remarks, and started a song. Hardly had the singing begun when a little girl seated near the door arose and came, and she was quickly followed by another and another, and within less than two minutes they seemed to be coming from all parts of the house; men and women of all ages; boys and girls of all sizes, and when the hymn was finished thirty-five persons had presented themselves. The congregation seemed to be moved as by a groundswell of irresistible power. That night seventeen more presented themselves. There had been no previous protracted service and there was no outburst of excitement. It was simply an illustration of the result of a sermon "preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." But time and space forbid a lingering among the memory of those good days. There has been much change in the congregation since that pastorate of twenty-five years ago. A few of the old veterans are still in the front leading the host, but many of them have conquered the eternal peace and are resting from the conflict and enjoying the inheritances their Christian valor won.

The congregation on Sunday, though very different from what it used to be, was as fine every way as can be assembled in Louisiana, and the attention given while "the gospel of the grace of God" was preached would have gratified any preacher in Methodism. The communion service, conducted by the pastor, Dr. Evans, was solemn and edifying, and participated in by Christian men and women from almost every part of the State. How gratifying it is to see men who come to the capital as legislators uniting with resident Christians in commemoration of the dying love of the Savior of sinners, and thus showing openly their allegiance to the Supreme Law-Maker! When men who fear God and work righteousness are at the helm, the ship of state will not veer very far from her true course! When men who love God and their fellow-men are made legislators, the laws will be such as honor God and benefit humanity! Many such are in both Houses of our Legislature, and may their number increase as the years go by!

On Monday we looked upon the first Legislature we ever saw in session. There is nothing very striking about the looks of the body. It did not impress us more favorably than a body of Methodist preachers. Speaker Bolton, with a left-handed gavel, a good knowledge of parliamentary practice and an orotund voice, manages the body with ease and grace. As it was Monday, and many of the members absent, there was not much doing, and we heard no legislative oratory. In the Senate the elegant Parlange—the Lieutenant-Governor—with the suaviter characteristic of his race, guided senatorial affairs with graceful tact and nice precision. He is a splendid specimen of the sort of men Centenary College has been sending forth in Louisiana and Mississippi during the last fifty years. Of course, we have not the temerity to pass judgment upon this body of men from simply watching their proceedings for one hour. The quality of men is to be seen in what they do. Hence "we reserve our judgment" until the present session closes.

We called upon the new Governor, and he was not too busy to chat a little with an ordinary preacher. Having been at the service the day before, he knew that he had no office to bestow higher than the one we already fill. We thought we could detect in his countenance a feeling of relief that he was talking to a man who was not seeking and did not want an office. Indeed, he assured us that he was glad to be called upon occasionally by such a man. We came out of those legislative halls with this thought uppermost: A Methodist preacher can go into any assembly and stand before any dispenser of patronage and feel, that as far as office is concerned, he has an office superior to any that any assembly or any Governor or President can bestow!

The Quarterly Conference was held Monday night, and there was a full attendance. The pastor's reports showed the church in good condition and advancing well along several lines. The church is running two Sunday-schools beside its parent school, the prayer meetings are well attended, and the Sunday congregations large and intelligent above the average. While the finances were not reported as

"even to date," there are healthy signs for the balance of the year.

The city of Baton Rouge has much improved of late years. Large and commodious business houses, new and elegant residences adorning many parts of the town are the evidences of steady growth and commendable enterprise. From almost every point of view the capital city is a beautiful place and a delightful town in which to reside. Just at this time the great river has invaded the front street and stopped all traffic along its ways. The fact is, the Mississippi river is getting very much in the way, and getting more so every year. We have heard that S. S. Prentiss once said: "God made the stars and told them to shine, and they obeyed; he made the mountains and told them to stand firm, and they obeyed; he made the Mississippi river, and told it to go where it pleased, and it has been doing so ever since." Whether Prentiss ever said it or not, it is about the fact as to the river. Even the Louisiana Legislature, clothed with all the power of the people, and "in general assembly convened," not more than a hundred yards from the river's brink, can not control it! Engineers and savants, philosophers and scientists, governors and legislators, judges and juries, planters and laborers have all tried to harness the mighty stream, and still it goes "where it pleases." There is one individual who has not yet essayed the task with all his resources, and many persons are looking to that individual as the last desperate hope. "Uncle Sam" has not yet taken hold of the problem with all his might. It is certainly the largest field for the trial of his energies that has yet been opened to him, and many are anxious to see him give an exhibition of his powers in this direction. We know that he can "whip the life out of creation," and many other wonderful things, and we would like to see him tackle the Mississippi river in downright earnestness.

What Gov. Foster Discovered.

During the last political canvass in this State a great many things came to light which were not generally known. There is one thing which was well known to a few persons, but not suspected by the public, to which we now call public attention. In an interview with Col. J. H. Stone, of Clinton, La., Gov. Foster said:

In my late canvass of the State, in every parish and community I met students and graduates of Centenary College. Their influence for good is felt everywhere in society, in business and official life. The alumni of Centenary College have filled the highest judicial stations in our State with credit and distinction. The most honored of the legal profession, the most eloquent divines, and the leaders in all the useful and dignified lines of life are of her sons. If I were called upon to say what school had left the greatest and best impress upon the society, business and government of Louisiana, I would unhesitatingly say—Centenary College.

We are gratified that our Governor found out these things by personal observation. And we believe if he or any other observing man would make a canvass of the southern half of Mississippi, he would find the same facts there. The fact is, Centenary College, in a quiet way, has all these years been fashioning men for every useful and honorable walk in life, and thus she has been a most potent factor for good to this South-west.

The best investment of money is to put it out at interest in Christian manhood. You may name any rate of interest you please, and it will return to you doubled. If you know a poor boy of integrity, put some money out on his education at a Christian college, and it will be paying you when stocks and bonds and securities are nil.

Purgatory—No. 3.

All Bible readers know that the Holy Scriptures never mention but two sorts of moral character, though under various names: the righteous and the wicked, the sinner and the saint, the believer and unbeliever. All these various descriptive names represent, and are only meant to be descriptive of two classes—the good and the bad. They never mention a third class, as only sinners in a slight degree, and whose spiritual debts to God can be paid by themselves, by suffering, or gifts.

The Scriptures never mention in plain and unmistakable terms but two states or conditions beyond the grave—heaven and hell, happiness and misery. The Scriptures nowhere teach that we can do anything to merit pardon. We are not saved from the condemnation and pollution of sin by the deeds and works of the law, but by grace through faith, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. If we belong by every claim to God, then we owe all the obedience, reverence and love of which we are capable, and owe it forever. It follows as a logical sequence if we lapse into sin and fail of our duty to God for a day, a month, or a year, that we have incurred a debt to God which we can never pay. No after-faithfulness can more than meet our obligations to God; there will be the "unpardoned past," and there forever unless pardoned through the merit of the blood, that "cleanses from all sin." Let us hear what the Holy Scriptures say: Luke xxiv, 46, 47: "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." John iii, 17, 18: "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him, is not condemned." Acts xiii, 38: "Be it known unto you therefore, brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins. And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses." I. John i, 7: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth from all sin." Hebrews x, 12-14: "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down at the right hand of God. For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Revelation v, 9: "And they sang a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hath redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.

All the Scriptures unite to say, Now is the day of salvation. This life exhausts the opportunities and the possibilities of salvation. Probation ends with death. Ecclesiastes ix, 10: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave, whither thou goest." John ix, 4: "The night cometh, when no man can work." Revelation xxii, 11: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still." These words stamp the seal of an immutable destiny upon men when once probation has expired. There is a "great gulf between" the lost and the saved. There is not a single text that asserts that any soul has suffered out its punishment, and exhausted its penalty and has entered purified into its immoral rest. Not a shadow of proof.

There is proof of immediate happiness and misery after death. The rich man died, and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment. The beggar died, and was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom, received his "good things," and was at once saved and blest. "He was comforted"—no mention of purgatorial fires and purifications. The rich man does not ask the prayers of the righteous, nor deliverance; he did not seem to consider it possible. He asked a slight mitigation of his torment; but he was told that help and hope were to him impossible.

Christ tells the penitent and pardoned thief he should be that day, the day of his death, in paradise. St. Paul had a desire to depart and be with Christ. He evidently had not the fear of purgatory before his eyes. He had previously to his "departure" been caught up either in person, or in vision, and had seen and heard the unutterable glories of heaven and longed "to be there."

J. B. WALKER.

Not Into the Hands of Man.

BY J. B. A. ABBRENS, D. D.

When David was informed that dire punishment was impending, but that it was left to his choice whether he would receive it directly from God or through the agency of man, he exclaimed: "Let me not fall into the hands of man!" He well knew the hands of man. Envious hands of Saul sought his destruction; ungrateful hands of Shimei were raised with cruel imprecations; unnatural hands of Absalom were bent upon robbing him of his crown and life.

Am not a misanthropist. Fellow-men are men of worth and merit. I think well of, I appreciate them. They are as I am; I am as they are. Nevertheless, much misery results from confiding in man unwisely. Certainly, there are men, true, honest and faithful; but beware of unduly trying their honesty. Don't test their faithfulness overmuch. On the other hand, though there is much falsehood and perfidy among men, we should not indiscriminately look upon all with suspicion. Prove the spirits. And bear in mind that the same men are not always the same. From love to hatred, from truth to falsehood, there is but one step. Reversely, the distance is not greater.

Indeed, there are dear human hands. Infant's hands, playing in our hair—hands long since palsied in death; mother's hands, caressing, arranging for comfort; father's hands, toiling for support; friendship's hands, bestowing thousand charms; benefactor's hands, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked; philanthropist's hands, disseminating paradisiacal sunshine and flowers; preacher's hands, pointing wretched sinners to the Lamb of God.

But, with all that, my iterated prayer has been: "Let me not fall into the hands of man." Not falling, to be raised; not lost, to be saved; not wrecked, to be rescued by man. Man helps; but may I never be helpless! Man commiserates; but may I never be miserable! May I never be in danger of falling, if man's hands do not uphold me! Man's hands are frequently like Jonah's gourd, refusing to serve when most needed.

God's hands are benign and safe hands. Unwearied in transmuting benedictions. Gladly protect. Beneficently employed in providing for us. They lead in the way everlasting. When prayerfully entreated, they come to our relief when Satan schemes for our soul's discomfiture and ruin. Gladly I consign myself, my all, to his hands.

When Jesus departed this life, he committed his soul into God's hands. Stephen the same. Dying thus means never dying. These hands were the angels which conveyed the soul of Lazarus to paradise. I crave such demise. Blessed hands, the hands of God.

NOTES.

The Methodist Protestant General Conference has eliminated the word "obey" from the marriage ritual.

A Calvinist has been deluded lately thus: "A man who is not afraid of a paradox, nor discouraged in the face of a self-contradictory assertion."

To writers of poetry: Unless you can express yourself more clearly in verse than in plain prose, it would be better for you to stick to the prose.

The Interior says: "Pure Calvinism is too rich in lime. Pure Arminianism is too rich in carbon. The flinty crystalline marble is carbonate of lime in good proportions."

Bishop Potter says: "It is simply inevitable that a great idea meanly housed and meanly treated will come to be meanly esteemed!" There is very much in the good Bishop's words!

The Churchman hits the mark in this observation: "The poor man should no more omit giving on account of his poverty, than the illiterate man should omit praying on account of his grammar."

Another case of post-mortem bequest to the church falling is reported from California. A gentleman left by will a quarter of a million dollars to the various benevolent enterprises of his church, but owing to a small omission the bequest has failed. When will men learn to give to the church during life!

Our brethren of the higher latitudes have for a long time been wrestling with the word "layman." They have never been able to decide whether it means males only, or both males and females. The word has been sent down to the Annual Conference for definition. By shrewd tactics it comes to pass that it is in a most curious form. In case the proposition to make it mean males only does not carry by a two-thirds majority, then the word means both men and women! Talk about political trickery! That caps the climax.

It seems to us that the woman question scored a victory in the late General Conference of the M. E. Church. The Western Christian Advocate says of it:

"The woman question has assumed a new form. After an animated discussion the Conference concluded to submit the question to the Conferences and churches. In the form that it assumes, it will require a two-thirds vote of the churches to interpret it as meaning males alone. This particular form of settling the question down was violently opposed by some, but after a series of most brilliant speeches the problem was sent to the Conferences and churches in this rather strange form."

A writer in one of the monthlies, discussing "Music as a Factor in Intellectual Growth," says:

"It strengthens the memory; calls reason into lively play; favors habits of exact thought; inspires the imagination; enhances the perceptive faculty; facilitates physical expression; arouses the emotional nature; cultivates the aesthetic principle; gives breadth of mental comprehension. In all these things, music stands in the front rank of these sciences, if indeed, it does not lead them all. Can any science do more as a factor in intellectual growth to develop the many-sided nature of the man intellectual?"

A contemporary gives this catalogue of sermons that are not good:

Some sermons are characterized as not good because they do not condemn the sins of somebody else. A temperance sermon that does not condemn everything that each listener thinks ought to be condemned is not a good one. A sermon that does not take a decided stand on what a certain hearer thinks a very important question is no good. A sermon that by the plain presentation of Scripture teaching upsets some life-long prejudices is not to be considered as good. A sermon that "makes a fellow feel uncomfortable in his pew" is not apt to be considered a good one by that fellow.

The Southern Assembly and School of Methods at Waynesville, N. C., will begin its annual session June 30, and will continue till July 25. The cornerstone of their fine permanent building will be laid with imposing ceremonies on July 4. Mrs. M. M. Snell, Miss Frances Griffin, Miss Belle Koenig, Mrs. Sallie Chapin, and other prominent workers, will be in attendance. This new enterprise, now in its third year, has already gained many warm supporters and holds in its grasp many possibilities for women than any undertaking in the South. It is situated in the midst of sublime scenery, surrounded by mountains 6,000 feet high, and with a beautiful stream foaming through lovely Waynesville, which is the highest settlement east of the Rocky Mountains.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Dr. J. B. Cottrell, by advice of his physician, takes a rest from pastoral labor until his recovery. His address is Cloverport, Ky.

The St. Louis Advocate, of last week, reported that Rev. B. Carradine was so unwell that his physicians had prohibited all company!

A note from Rev. J. A. Ellis, president of the Seashore district, gives us the good news that he is recovering from his long illness.

Dr. Buckley characterizes the manipulations by which the woman question was brought to its present curious attitude, "a crafty scheme of preparing for usurpation."

A "Lover of Missions" sends us five dollars to help Bishop Wilson's church-building in Japan, and a brother in Tennessee sends one dollar for the same purpose.

Our Northern brethren have followed in our wake in making their General Conference to consist of an equal number of ministers and laymen. We did that twenty-six years ago!

The poor presiding elder! He "gets it" by accident sometimes! A brother writes that his "beloved presiding elder" was present and presided with ease and agility. That will do! Next!

Some of the reports from the work read like advertisements of the "beloved brethren." Take care lest at the end of the year you find a little bill. This office charges for advertisements.

When we ask the brethren to send us "news from the work," we do not ask for compliments of the workers. To avoid confusion, we suggest to write the "news" and the "compliments" on separate slips of paper.

The Methodist Protestant Conference of Maryland, by a vote of 74 to 49, has decided that women were eligible to seats in the General Conference as ministers and lay representatives. The sisters in Methodism are coming along.

We have received the Announcement of Millsaps College, for which we are indebted to our good friend, President Murrain. While the announcement is only partial, enough is given to show that Millsaps will open Sept. 29 under very favorable auspices.

Bro. Mellen writes, June 7: A wonderful revival is now in progress at Seaboard, where Bro. Pugh is being assisted by Bro. Clark. Bro. Penn is assisting Bro. Tinnin, of Buckatuna. These, I feel, are but the earnest of greater works yet to follow.

Dr. G. W. F. Price, president of the Nashville College for Young Ladies, has favored us with his art catalogue for the exhibition of this year. There will be 170 pieces on exhibition, and the illustrations of the work shown in the catalogue reveal fine specimens of artistic skill.

Dr. J. B. A. Ahrens, editor of The Family Friend, and pastor of one of our German Churches, left yesterday on the steamer New Orleans for New York for a summer trip to Europe for recuperation and health. The Doctor has been in low health for some time, and we trust his trip will set him up again.

The pressure on our columns is so great that we are in fear of a "burst-up." Our brethren are doing handsome things for us, and we are glad. Let everybody remember that everybody's "piece" can not even be squeezed into "the next issue." Don't quarrel. Give us time, and, while giving us time, rest a little yourselves, and things will straighten out.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Port Gibson is to have a new parsonage very soon.

It is said the popular vote for 1892 will be, at least, 13,000,000.

The next session of the Vicksburg District Conference will be held at Hermonville, Miss.

We are grieved to learn of the serious illness of Bro. J. T. Nicholson, the pastor of our church at Natchez.

Rev. B. F. Jones was recently elected president of Port Gibson Female College. We congratulate the college upon the acquisition of such a president, and bespeak for him the cordial support of his brethren.

The Vicksburg District Conference closed a most delightful session at Port Gibson, Miss., last Saturday. On Sunday the commencement sermon of Port Gibson Female College was preached by Dr. Cooper, of Hazlehurst.

We gratefully acknowledge the receipt of the programme of the commencement exercises of the Agricultural and Mechanical College, Starkville, Miss., sent us by Prof. Dahney Lipcomb. We notice that Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Atlanta, Ga., will preach the annual sermon at 11 A. M., Sunday, June 12, and also preach before the Y. M. C. A. at 8:30 P. M. The biennial address before the Alumni Association will be delivered by Robt. M. Beattie, of Memphis, Tenn.

We are sorry to have to chronicle the death of Miss Katie H. Otken, daughter of Rev. Charles H. Otken, L.L.D., president of Lea Female College, Summit, Miss., which sad event occurred on the first day of June. Miss Katie was one of the most accomplished and brilliant young women it has ever been our privilege to know, and her death has cast a gloom over a large portion of South Mississippi. The prayers of the Methodists unite with those of the Baptists in asking the Divine Father for the Comforter to come into that stricken home.

The Announcement of Millsaps College is out. It is a neat pamphlet of ten pages, giving all needed information. The college will certainly open on Sept. 29, 1892, unless some overwhelming calamity prevents. Among other announcements, we notice that Bishop Galloway, the president of the Board of Trustees, has been engaged to deliver a course of lectures, and also preach some special sermons during the year, besides other lecturers, who have been engaged. We notice further that "a comprehensive course of Bible study will be arranged." To a true lover of God and our youth this is one of the most attractive features about the announcement. Anyone wishing catalogues, write to Rev. A. F. Watkins, agent, Jackson, Miss., or Rev. W. B. Murrain, president, Brookhaven, Miss.

Traveling Expenses of Rev. H. G. Hawkins to Japan.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM THE MERIDIAN DISTRICT.

AMOUNT NEEDED, $200.
From Enterprise.....	$ 6 00
" Quitoan.....	7 75
" Vossburg.....	10 50
" Clarke circuit.....	2 00
" Meridian.....	9 50
" Lookhart.....	5 00
" Seaboard.....	5 00
" Binnville.....	5 00
" Buckatuna.....	5 00

Some amounts have been collected at Lookhart and Binnville, but not yet remitted to me. Brethren at other points will please attend to the matter, and make remittances as soon as practicable. It is true, Bro. Hawkins will be supported for two years by the Japanese government after he gets to Japan, but not before; and it costs something to travel about 14,000 miles to get to Matsuyama, the place of his intended labors. How easy for ten or twenty or fifty or one hundred of the 5,552 members in this district to contribute the $200 needed; and yet how few are responding or seem to care whether Bro. Hawkins reaches Japan or not!

One good brother in this district, however, proposes not only to send a missionary to Japan, but to support him during life, thus relieving the Board of all responsibility in the premises so far as the question of support is concerned. The missionary will, of course, be selected by the Board and be duly appointed.

Notice to North Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society.

Capt. T. B. Sykes, of Aberdeen, is corresponding with the railroads for reduced rates to the meeting, June 25-28. This would have been attended to sooner if we had known the program. Hope to have everything satisfactorily arranged in due time, and published in the Advocate.

J. A. Bowen.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption. When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives the recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 102 Second street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

NOTICES.

Those who, at the late session of our Meridian District Conference, pledged amounts for Rev. E. T. Broland, employed on the West Wayne Mission, will please send all or a part of amounts pledged at once to Bro. J. S. Turner, of Vossburg, Miss. Send by check, draft, or registered letter.

B. S. RAYNER.
Vossburg, Miss.

The Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society will meet on the morning of the fourth Saturday of June, which is the twenty-fifth. This announcement is made necessary by a mistake in our notice in the June Woman's Missionary Advocate.

MRS. L. H. WINNERLY, President.
Watson, Miss.

Bro. Sam P. Jones, George Stewart and E. O. Excell will begin a meeting in Macon, Miss., on Thursday, July 7. We have a tabernacle with seating capacity of 5,000. We feel that we are on rising ground in Macon. Indications are that we will have a glorious revival. Pray for us.

J. H. MITCHELL.

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference:

On July 1 the second quarter's salary is due to our superannuates and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers. To meet this payment your Joint Board of Finance needs $500 more than it now has on hand. Will not every brother who has made no report to our treasurer forward at once some part, if not all, of his assessment for Conference claimants? Will not those who have made partial reports respond again to our call, that those worthy persons may be paid promptly and in full? Forward all money to W. M. Thornton, Lake, Miss. Brethren, come to our help now.

JOHN W. CHAMBERS, Chair'n.

A Holiness Camp Meeting will be held at Victoria, Marshall county, Miss., during the month of August, 1892. The tabernacle is nearly completed. All persons desiring to take part in this meeting will do well by going at once and stake off their tent lots on the lines forming the square around the tabernacle. Those who apply first will have choice of places, free of charge, on the "lines;" the fronts of lots not to exceed twenty-four feet for any one family.

This meeting will be held positively on the self-sustaining plan, except the ministers who come to help.

The meeting will be put under strict discipline; by-laws adopted by the tenters; meeting made conducive to a place of public worship. All who set stakes to build tents are expected to occupy it this year; otherwise, their claim is forfeited. All are cordially invited to come and tent and help in this work of the Lord.

"Bright's Disease."

THIS DREAD DISEASE IS DUE TO CA-TARRH OF THE KIDNEYS.

SYMPTOMS.

Pain in the back and loins, restlessness, flashes of heat, disturbance of the stomach, loss of appetite and hectic fever are the most prominent symptoms in the first stage of Bright's disease. In the later stages of the disease there is puffiness under the eyes, swelling of the feet, bloody urine, dropsy, convulsions and great weakness.

At the appearance of the first symptom Pe-ru-na should be taken in tablespoonful doses six times each day; or, if more convenient, two tablespoonful three times each day before each meal. This remedy strikes at once at the very root of the disease. It at once relieves the congested kidneys of their stagnant blood, preventing the escape of serum from the blood. Pe-ru-na stimulates the kidneys to excrete from the blood the accumulating poison, and thus prevents the convulsions which are sure to follow if the poisons are allowed to remain. It gives great vigor to the heart's action and digestive system, both of which are apt to fall rapidly in this disease. Pe-ru-na is just as reliable in cases of chronic "Bright's disease" as in the acute. No matter how long it has run, or to what extremity the patient may be reduced, there is always hope in Pe-ru-na.

Everyone should have a copy of The Family Physician No. 2, a complete treatise on catarrh in all of its forms, written especially for family use. Sent free to any address by the Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Co., Columbus, O.

Mr. RICKS—Take pleasure in writing to you that your Mineral Water has relieved me very much; if I continue so I believe I am on the road to get well. I have had one of the most severe cases of nervous indigestion for over two years; have been so prostrated from it that I was a perfect invalid. Had the best doctors in New Orleans, Hot Springs and Shreveport. I found no relief until I commenced the use of your Mineral Water. I cheerfully recommend this water to all who are suffering with the above disease. Respectfully, Mrs. A. A. ZODIAG.

Mr. RICKS—Dear Sir: On the fifteenth instant I had a severe attack of bilious dysentery with fever, resulting from a general bilious condition of the system when I began the use of the Mineral Water from your well. Since I began the use of it I have entirely recovered from my previous condition. My appetite has been entirely restored, my general condition greatly improved, and which I attribute to the use of your well water. I can heartily recommend it as a most excellent remedy for constipation and bilious complaints.

Dr. J. W. Lambuth's Last Trip.

The church at home is somewhat familiar with the history of the work at Tadotsu, Japan, for, perhaps, no one point in all the mission has been more widely known than this. It was the people at this place who, in 1889, wrote to Dr. J. W. Lambuth several times urging him to come to them and tell them about Christ, and when, because of press of other work, he was forced to refuse even their third appeal, they telegraphed, "If you cannot come to us we will go to you." When the message came he left to go to you. When the message came he left to go to you. When the message came he left to go to you.

It was an occasion of sincere rejoicing to us all, and to Dr. J. W. Lambuth particularly, when, at the annual meeting of our Church Extension Society, last year, it was announced that sufficient funds were in hand to purchase land and to build the church at Tadotsu. This was made possible by the receipts from the sale of the armor and the sword, a grant from the society and generous donations from the Vanderbilt Missionary Brotherhood and Mrs. L. H. Gild, of Sacramento, Cal.

The church was dedicated on March 27, 1892, by Dr. Lambuth, and his trip to Tadotsu was the last he ever made until he left us for heaven. Dr. Lambuth was noted for the amount of itinerating that he did, and I suppose that he accomplished more in this line than any other missionary in our church. He has been pre-eminently "the tireless evangelist," ever pushing into the regions beyond.

When a church is dedicated in Japan, it is customary to read a short history of the work. A paper of this kind was read at the Tadotsu dedication, and Dr. Lambuth intended to send it to some of the church papers for publication; but before it was translated and copied he was taken sick. The paper, not so full on some points as it might be, is as follows:

The law of development in the natural world is first the sprout, next the ear and lastly the ripened fruit. It is the same way in the spiritual kingdom. I have been informed that the seeds of the gospel were dropped here the first time more than ten years ago. Before that many an earnest prayer, I believe, had reached to the holy cars offered for this town by devoted followers of our Lord.

The people here are believers in two great gods—namely, the Kotobira and Zentou. They only arrive after worldly pleasures, and they seldom will listen to the preaching of Christianity, but they should lose their unjust gains. God finally gave us the glad tidings in a missionary who came here and preached the gospel. He was called by God to leave his town and stay at other places, and in the meanwhile God opened their hardened hearts and showed them the seeds of the truth. Thus the spirit came before the people these young students of the Bible as examples, having renewed their thoughts and conduct, and used them to preach the gospel to their friends and neighbors. Thus God prepared the way. At this time there came back a brother to the town who had been in Tokyo, and he preached here the gospel to his friends and several were awakened to seek for the truth. Among them was a lady who used her home to hold our meetings in, to study the Bible and to open the scriptures to the people. It was the wisdom and the goodness of God!

Up to this time we, of course, had had no pastor nor preacher, and this little flock in the wilderness naturally wished to have an overseer to send a preacher to us. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had comparatively large help for its work and had not enough workers to supply all the demands of the several churches for "the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." The preceding annual meeting having decided that the church would not send so many requests, we thought it was impossible to have them consent to the proposal for our meeting. But our friends, the students of the Bible, made Dr. J. W. Lambuth come over, with other brethren, to see the conditions, and finally we were made an appointment of the Koba district, under Dr. W. E. Lambuth and Mr. Sumida and me, then students of the Kwaiki Gakuin. After the annual meeting of 1890, this place was moved to the Matsuyama district, the workers remaining the same as before.

The people opposed Christianity with all their might, for they did not like to lead upright lives, as taught in the Bible. We could say yet, find no house in which to worship. So it was unanimously decided that we must have a church built at once. But it was too hard for young church, consisting of only a score of persons, many of whom had not yet reached their majority. At last we came to the conclusion that we could get some funds for the church by selling armor inherited from our fathers, and so we gave seven sets of them and twenty swords, which Dr. J. W. Lambuth kindly sent to his friends in America. By the grace of our Lord we obtained several hundreds of dollars from benevolent friends on the other side of the ocean. Our ladies made a contribution, and the church was built. It was a small one, but it was a church, and it was a church, and it was a church.

On the day after the dedication the brethren at Tadotsu arranged to have a picture of the church taken, and requested Dr. Lambuth to join the group. We were glad that he did so, for it was his last photograph. It lies before me now as I write. It gives a good view of the church-house, and shows what can be done in Japan in the way of church building for a small amount, the house and lot having cost less than four hundred and fifty dollars. In front of the church is a group of twenty-six people, composed of most of the members of the Tadotsu Church, several of the native workers, and Dr. Lambuth and Rev. C. B. Moseley, presiding elder of the district. The picture is an excellent one, and the faces are very clear and distinct. It shows Dr. Lambuth just as he appeared a few days before his fatal illness.

The photograph, unmounted, is 10 1/2 x 8 1/2 inches, and the artist has consented to sell them at thirty-five cents each. Should any of Dr. Lambuth's friends or any of the missionary societies of our church desire to obtain a copy they can do so by sending their funds, addressed to the money to Miss Jennie Conwell, Mission Rooms, M. E. Church, South, Nashville, Tenn., and the picture will be sent them in due time. Miss Conwell will forward all orders to me, and the photographs will be sent from here direct to those ordering them.

W. E. TOWSON.

Kobe, Japan.

From Oregon.

Bishop Haygood is wise in choosing most of his recruits from among the young men. We (wife and I) feel that we are young yet, but we often find ourselves speaking of the attachments of church work here—and as to that, in most all else—and our former charges. For instance, our last charge in Mississippi—Miner City. How it grew up and strengthened, and from the occasional references we see of it, still remains strong. Here with so much harder work, hardships never thought of before, it seems exceeding difficult to make any advancement. Of course, it is a very different people—a people whose every impulse has been from their youth up almost entirely given to the world and worldly influences. I sometimes look upon the boys roaming the streets upon the Sabbath, and feel that I believe there is more hope for the negro boys of the South than for these.

It seems so strange, too, in most every other way they seem approachable, in business and social life, but when you undertake to touch them morally or religiously, it seems they are steeled against it. And it is not peculiar to us; the other churches here have the same difficulty.

I have an out-of-town appointment, a little railroad village off the banks of the romantic Rogue river, where the work is more encouraging; congregations are larger and, I believe, more attentive. There we have the whole field—4-6, we are the only church represented. But the same fact exists there that has been the bane of most all our work in Southern Oregon. Go to most any of the older settled communities, and you will hear: "Yes, fifteen, twenty or twenty-five years ago Bro. McE. Church, of the M. E. Church, South, had a fine meeting, organized a good church; but after while it was left without a preacher, and as we had no church-building it was all lost."

I got them stirred up last year to build, but it was, "Let it be undone," until I told them we would help them if they would make it for our church. An old gentleman, who never goes to church, sent me word to come to see him, and he gave me a most excellent lot. I soon got us good a subscription as I could have done for a union church, but all of it with the understanding that our church would help them. Well, I put in an application to our Board of Church Extension, and you may know I was grieved beyond expression last month to receive a note from Dr. Morton, saying we were among those who had to be disappointed; that nothing was appropriated for us. I have access there to more than two hundred families, and the community is growing rapidly, for it is at a point where three line Creek valleys come into the Rogue River Valley, and the day is not distant when it will be quite a town, and if we gain a foothold by building now we will do well. I have not yet told them of my disappointment, hoping something would appear to enable me to build.

Another strange fact exists there: M. E. Church is making no effort to build up anywhere within eight or ten miles of there. In most every other place where we have gone they have tried to follow. Their preacher last year came once, but the people gave him such poor encouragement he did not return. The one this year told me if we were going to build, he would not try there. Will not somebody help me save this place? Three or four hundred dollars put down by us would build us a church worth $1,000, and bring or save to us all three of these valleys, far when we are once a fixture there and put a preacher on that work he can soon command the whole field.

Evans Creek Valley is more than fifty miles long, and the soil good; besides the mountains on either side are rich in all kinds of minerals, which will be opened some day. The other two are not so long, but are equally rich in every way. It must be remembered that half or three-fifths of these people are Indians, and we do not expect any help from them at present, unless they see a material benefit to arise from it. Much of this land could not be bought for less than $75 to $100 per acre. Some sold on a part of it. I presume orchards are valued at from $1,000 to $1,500 per acre.

Grant's Pass, Ore., May 25, 1892.

P. S.—Mrs. F. desires me to add that with the $200 furnished by H. and P. Society we have been able to build a two-story, seven-room house, painted within and without, and partly furnished.

"The Greater Responsibility."

If the question was one merely of responsibility, the answer would be easy, since any authorized act of the Board, which is the agent of the church in the matter of applying missionary money, is in law the act of the church. But, as we have no thought of either repudiating or compromising the debt, our inquiry relates only to a moral responsibility. If the Board had appropriated money to other purposes than those authorized, we could charge it with the sole responsibility; or had there been reckless entering of new fields, or an extravagant projecting of enterprises in those occupied, we might charge the Board with the greater responsibility. But none of these charges are alleged, and could not be sustained if they were. Two known facts and a third reasonably supposed fact inspired the action on the part of the Board that has resulted in debt. Now, let us look at these facts, and see if we can locate the greater responsibility.

The first known fact was, that the Holy Spirit had greatly blessed and enlarged our work in every foreign field; and the second known fact was, that, following the lead of the Holy Spirit, the men in those fields were so pressed with overwork that they must have help, or else break down, and in the last event the church would lose the signal reward the Holy Spirit had bestowed upon her faithfulness. The third fact was, that the Board only offered such a response to the leading of the Holy Spirit, and to the relief of the men in the field, as it was reasonable to suppose the church would endorse, and was able and willing to respond to.

Now, it was somewhere in this third fact that failure came, and the debt appeared. If it came of the failure of the church to endorse the providential openings presented along the line of our work in foreign fields, then we had better give up the claim that we are a missionary church, and call our houses while God dwells in the open air in mission fields, and see what will become of us. If the Board made the mistake, and it comes of our inability to follow the leading of the Holy Spirit, then the question as to whether we have the right to the claim of a distinctive church organization is raised. If we have not the church state, we the responsibilities of the church state, we ought, in all good conscience, to confess it, and ask a place among those who will relieve us of the greater responsibility, and save us the shame of failure.

But I do not believe there is a member or a friend of the M. E. Church, South, who would consent that this debt grew out of either of the above causes. Then, and so to say, it must have come of the unwillingness, or neglect, of somebody to do their duty. I do not believe that every member or friend of our beloved church can be thus charged, for, as in other days, God had reserved seven thousand men who had not bowed the knee to Baal, so there are, and will ever be, men, women and children among us, not a few, who are faithful. These are the salt of the earth, and are the glory of the church here, and will be hereafter.

But who among us have been faithless in presenting and in pressing this great interest of the church as opportunity, in the providence of God, has offered? And who among us have failed to pay into the treasury of the Lord, as we have prospered, to the great cause of spreading the gospel and life over all lands? Let us answer on our knees before God, and we will have no difficulty in finding the greater responsibility. Then let us prayerfully resolve, and arise and pay what we owe to God, and thus end the debt and the responsibility.

J. M. WEEMS.

"The Greater Responsibility."

Bro. Weems, writing under this heading, raises a question which to my mind suggests responsibilities of a much graver character than any which have been developed by the discussion of the "surplus."

Bro. Weems brings this greatest responsibility to the point on this wise: "Then they tell us that the young women of the church are not offering themselves for the foreign work. This is indeed an alarming sign of the times! It has not always been thus; and how are we to account for this state of their need now?" I have to do only with the question—not the facts stated by Bro. Weems.

The answer is simple, and locates the responsibility where it belongs. Throughout our church, in high places and low, there is an active, widespread opposition to "women's work" in any other sense than as a servant or helper. Her right to "minister in holy things" is denied, and her presence in Methodist pulpits is looked upon as out of place. If our women have any thinking, they have the deepest respect for the opinion of "the brethren." While this opinion is against her going out to minister in holy things at home, she will be slow to rush abroad to do this despised work.

When this woman's movement started in the direction of evangelism, there was thought to have been given to it a very strong endorsement by the General Conference. The rank and file of the ministry of the church, however, soon revealed the fact that while women were willing to do the work of preachers and teachers in foreign lands, they were discouraged; but just as soon as this work was thought of at home, and on the same footing as the men, they were discouraged.

Bro. Weems will find the answer to his question in this: Discouraging women's work of home prevents her carrying that work abroad.

J. A. PARKER.

"The Jackson District Conference."

The Jackson District Conference met in the First Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., May 27, 1892, at 9 A. M., Bishop C. B. Galloway, D. D., presiding. The Bishop opened the Conference by reading II Timothy II; singing Hymn 220, and prayer. B. F. Lewis was elected secretary. The roll was called, and twelve pastors answered to their names, with twelve lay delegates and alternates.

The reports from the various charges showed that while the work had not progressed as might be desired, it had not retrograded. There has been a slight decrease in the salaries of the pastors, owing to the financial depression, but it seems to be more in appearance than in reality. The spiritual condition of the district is good. There have been a number of accessions, both on profession of faith and by certificate. The number of Methodist Sabbath-schools has increased, with much interest manifested in this department of our church work. Some new churches have been built, and most of the others are in good repair. On the whole, the outlook on the Jackson district is good.

Friday night a memorial service was held in memory of Dr. J. W. Lambuth, our missionary to Japan, who recently fell asleep in that distant field. The religious exercises were conducted by Bro. Mounser, after which Bishop Galloway gave to the audience a very fine delineation of the life and character of our senior missionary. The resolutions adopted by the Conference will be found elsewhere.

Dr. W. B. Murray, president of Millsaps College, was present with us one day, and addressed the Conference on the subject of Christian Education, after which Bro. Watkins, the agent, brought out some interesting and important facts connected with this college in particular. We were glad to see among us also on this occasion Bro. J. W. McLaughlin, district superintendent of the American Bible Society for Mississippi and Louisiana.

The following are the delegates elected to the ensuing Annual Conference: J. T. H. Laird, R. W. Millsaps, D. Bunch and Peter James.

After fixing upon Edwards as the place of holding the next session, the Conference, on motion, adjourned with benediction by the presiding elder.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED IN MEMORY OF DR. J. W. LAMBUTH.

Whereas, The Rev. J. W. Lambuth, D. D., the senior missionary of our church, and the superintendent of our mission in Japan, ceased from his labors and entered upon his rest on April 28, 1892, at Kobe, Japan; And whereas, Dr. Lambuth was nearly forty years a member of our Annual Conference, and for many years his name has appeared upon the roll of this District Conference; therefore, be it Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Lambuth our church has lost her most heroic foreign missionary, and our Conference one of its most honored members.

Resolved, That we rejoice in the triumph of his departure, and pray that his last message to the church may inspire his brethren with more apostolic zeal, and arouse them to more glorious achievements in the cause of foreign missions.

Resolved, That we shall rejoice if from the ranks of the Mississippi Conference the Lord will send forth more laborers to the field in which our brother has fallen.

Resolved, That we extend to the sorrowing wife and afflicted family our most heartfelt sympathy, and the assurance that while we mourn with them their loss, we are also aware with them the joy and honor of his consecrated and successful life.

(Signed) J. A. B. JONES, A. F. WATKINS, Committee.

A Pleasant Day at Sagenville Church.

Sunday, May 29, was Children's Day at Sagenville, Meridian circuit. Notwithstanding the threatening clouds and rain, quite a number met at ten o'clock. Services opened with Scripture lesson, singing, and earnest prayers in behalf of the children. At eleven o'clock Rev. P. H. Hulse, D. D., preached from Timothy II, 12, which was very timely to all, after which Miss Sarah Fairchild read an essay, "What is Life?" By a resolution a committee was appointed to request a copy of the book to be published in the Meridian News and New Orleans Christian Advocate. Basket dinner on the grounds was duly enjoyed by all. At three P. M. Bro. Hulse preached to the parents from Prov. xii, 6, full of instruction and demonstration of the Spirit, by which each parent should be profited. Services closed, which were a benediction to each parent.

T. H. COMMITTEE.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

TOMMY'S SCHOOL.

"Geography's a nuisance, and arithmetic's a bore!" Said Tommy, with a frown upon his face. "I hate the sight of grammars, and my Latin makes me roar!"

"It's always sure to get me in disgrace. When I'm a man," he added, as he threw his school-books down, "I'll have a school that boys will think is fine!"

They need not know an adjective or adverb from a noun, Nor whether Caesar bridged the Po or Rhine. "I don't care if they think that George the Third was King of Spain."

When those old fogies lived so long ago, Or if they should answer the Volga is in Maine, What difference would it make, I'd like to know? But instead of useless things, I'll teach 'em how to coast and skate;

They all shall learn to row and sail a boat, And bow to fire a pistol and shoot a rifle straight, And how to swim, and how to dive and float. "Well, play at tennis and net cricket all the livelong day!"

And then there's polo, and—oh yes, foot ball! And baseball they shall every single one learn how to play. For that's the most important thing of all. I tell you," finished Thomas, "I'll have one of just that kind!"

Then all the boys, you see, will want to go. They will not run away and say my school's an awful grind, Or call the lessons dull and hard, I know."

—St. Nicholas.

Mr. Editor: You were so kind to print my letters when I used to write to the dear old Advocate. It has encouraged me to write again. No doubt the readers in the Advocate have forgotten me; but I hope they have not. I go to Sunday-school out here at the Tenth Street Sunday-school. Mr. E. T. Moore is the superintendent. We all like him ever so much. My teacher is Mrs. McCulloch. I like her, too. Mr. Briggs is pastor of this church. There is being built across the Colorado river a great dam of granite. It is a magnificent sight! I live about one block from the Capitol. I will answer Troy Tribble's question: "Why was Gen. Jackson called 'Stonewall' Jackson?" During a battle in the late war, Gen. Bee's forces were about to retreat. At last he ran up to Gen. Jackson, and said, "General, they are beating us back!" "Sir," said Gen. Jackson, quietly, "we will give them the bayonet." He rallied back to his men, and said, "See, there is Jackson standing like a stone-wall!" Ever since then Gen. T. J. Jackson has been called "Stonewall" Jackson. I will ask an historical question: What general was called "Young Napoleon of the West" during the Civil War? Mr. Editor, I hope you don't mind asking historical questions, do you? Hoping this will escape the waste basket, so my mother in Louisiana will see it, I remain,

Your friend,

JENNIE FAULKNER.

Austin, Texas.

Mr. Editor: The dear old Advocate still continues to be a weekly visitor in our household. I like very much to read the little people's letters, which you so kindly publish. I think a good many old persons feel interested in reading them also. I go to school every day, and attend Sabbath-school every Sabbath evening. Mr. T. Smith is our superintendent. Bro. Sande preaches for us once a month. I like very much to hear him. I will reply to Maggie Pickle's question: "Where is 'grasshopper' found in the Bible?" It is found in Num. xiii, 33. I will ask the cousins where the word "ebony" is mentioned in the Bible. As you so kindly gave my brother's letter space in the column of your dear paper, I hope mine will also prove acceptable, as it is my first attempt to write you a letter. With best wishes for the success of the Advocate, I am, Your friend,

JAMES A. THOMAS, JR.

Philadelphia, Miss.

Mr. Editor: As I see no letter from this part of the country, I thought I would try and write one. My father is in charge of the No. 14 circuit; has been four years. This is his fourth year on the circuit. He is in the midst of a good people. We have a very good Sunday-school at this place every Sunday evening, and preaching twice a month. We have preaching every fourth Sunday at the M. E. Church, and every first Sunday at the Baptist Church. I will ask the cousins a few questions: Where is the word "diligent" first mentioned in the Bible, and in how many places? Which is the longest verse in the Bible? What king had an iron bedstead? I will close for fear of the waste-basket.

Your little friend,

DORA LANG.

Philadelphia, Miss.

Mr. Editor: I read the cousins' letters in the Advocate every week, and think so often that I will answer some of the questions. So I will write to-day and tell you that Kade Bone Church still survives. We have our brother, Wm. Stevens, as our pastor, and have learned to love him very much. Our Sunday-school is not very prosperous, because there are not many Methodist children near the church. Mattie Ahearn, the longest verse in the Bible is the ninth verse and eighth chapter of Esther. George Mollen, I think the sweetest words on earth are, "Mother," "home" and "heaven." Where are the words "apes" and "peacocks" found in the Bible? Hoping this letter will not reach the waste-basket, I will close.

Your friend,

LINA GIBSON.

Oak Hills, Miss.

Mr. Editor: As I was requested by our pastor to write to your paper, I will do so. I will tell you about Children's Day. Bro. Sheppard preached to the children. His text was, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is the will-pleasing unto the Lord." The sermon was instructive to the old people as well as the children. He opened the doors of the church at the close, and my brother and myself joined the church, and intend to be Christians. Mama says our preacher is a true "shepherd," because he cares for the lambs of the flock. Waail love him. I will ask a question: Which is the longest prayer in the New Testament? Respectfully, MAHIA A. BALDWIN.

"It is Truly a Great Remedy," is what Mr. Sam Jones says of Germetuer.

"I returned from Tyler, Texas, on March 12th. I find my wife has been taking Royal Germetuer two weeks, and the GREAT UPBUILDING OF HER PHYSICAL SYSTEM. She is now almost free from the distressing headaches with which she has suffered for twenty years. Surely it has done a wonder for her. I wish EVERY POOR SUFFERING WIFE HAD ACCESS TO THAT MEDICINE."

Later he writes: "My wife, who was an invalid from nervous sick headache, has been entirely cured by six weeks' use of Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. Her health is perfect. In three weeks' time of my children were cured completely of nasal catarrh. IT IS TRULY A GREAT REMEDY."

M. B. AVARY & CO., Atlanta, Ga., say:

"We are selling five times as much of your Royal Germetuer as of any other patent medicine on the market. It gives universal satisfaction. The demand is constantly increasing."

OBITUARIES.

BUTLER.—Mrs. Ophelia Butler, whose maiden name was Saxon, was born in Leake county, Miss., Jan. 25, 1833; predeceased religion and joined the Methodist Church, August, 1870, in which she lived a consistent Christian life until transferred to the church triumphant, which was April 6, 1892. She was married to J. W. Butler, Jan. 25, 1871.

Sister Butler's death was caused from a wound received April 3. Her suffering was intense; yet she endured it with fortitude and Christian resignation. Though she was suffering the greatest pain imaginable, she never forgot her Savior. Just after she was hurt, and all during her illness, she was singing this song: "Jesus is tenderly calling thee home," etc.

It can truly be said that she "walked with God." She never tired doing good, helping the poor and needy, and waiting on the sick. Many a sad heart has been made glad by the comforting and cheering words which Sister Butler was so capable of giving; and many a weary laborer, who was hungering and thirsting for spiritual food, and for some one to cheer them when despondent, always found Sister Butler's home a good place to go to. She read the Bible often, and took it as "the man of counsel." She raised her voice against vice and sin in all of its varied forms. She was a strict observer of the rules and doctrines of the church of her choice, and which she loved and revered so well. She was an earnest worker in the Sabbath-school, always ready to answer to her name when called by reciting a verse from the Bible. When the roll is called over yonder by and by, all her deeds of mercy will there be known; but not until then.

As wife, she was all that wife could be—devoted and faithful. She never suffered herself to become impatient nor speak unkind. As mother, she ranked among the best. No sacrifice was too great, if the interest of her children could be served. As a friend and neighbor, there could not be found any better.

Sister Butler leaves an aged mother, four brothers, four sisters, a husband and three children to mourn her death. Weep no more, fond loved ones; thy loved one is not dead, but sleeping. And when death calls you, may you be prepared to meet thy loved one on the bright shore of eternal deliverance!

Her pastor, B. W. LEWIS.

McLANE—Death, cruel and relentless, has colored the happy home circle of Bro. and Sister McLANE, and now sorrow and bereavement sit in sable garments, and children wait with longing hearts for the return of the absent father.

DANIEL McLANE was born in Pike county, Ala., Nov. 16, 1850, and died near New Port, Miss., Feb. 18, 1892. He was the son of a daughter of Rev. Lewis Dowling, who died in Atlanta county several years since. I think Bro. McLANE was reared in the family of Bro. Robert Dowling, whose widow still lives near New Port, Miss. He married Miss Margaret M. Dael, who still lives to mourn her irreparable loss, but with fond hopes of meeting him where death never enters, nor parting ever comes.

In the year 1889 he made a profession of Christianity, and a few days before his death told his wife he was not afraid to die; that he was trusting in Jesus. It was not my privilege to know Bro. McLANE. I only saw him after he was wasted by disease, and reason much impaired; but those who attended him in his last illness, and especially his wife, who knew him more intimately than anyone else, are attuned that he is at rest with the blessed in heaven.

Rev. J. R. ROBERTSON.

JERKINS.—Mrs. BETTIE JERKINS died in Itasca county, Miss., March 7, 1892, in the sixty-third year of her age. She joined the Presbyterian Church at Line Prairie, about thirteen years ago, and about ten years ago she moved her church membership to Holly Bush Society of the M. E. Church, South.

Her death was consumption, with which she was afflicted since May, 1891. While she suffered greatly, she realized her condition, and expressed herself as being willing and ready to die. She prayed for the end of her sufferings, expressing a readiness to go at any time. She had no enemies, and was loved by all her acquaintances. She was twice married. She left behind a loving husband and five children to mourn her loss.

Miss BETTIE JERKINS, daughter of the deceased by her second marriage, died June 20, 1887, aged fifteen years. She died of measles and diphtheria. Her illness was short. She was a loved and loving child, and it was a sore trial to her parents to give her up. All the regret she seemed to have at the thought of death was to leave her parents, whom she fondly loved.

E. L. HAWES, P. C.

SMITH-BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SMITH was born in Tennessee, June 7, 1826. He moved to Mississippi early in life, and settled in Holmes county. He married Miss Sidney Stephens soon after he came to Mississippi, who lived fourteen years and died. After the death of his first wife he was married to Mrs. Bush about the close of the war, who only lived three years. He married a third time, a Mrs. Sallie Weatherby, on March 6, 1887, who still lives.

Bro. Smith was a member of the M. E. Church, South, for thirty years of his life. He loved the church and her ways, as all true Christians do. Bro. Smith's home was in Durant. He came to Durant to see his daughter, and was taken with diphtheria, and after an illness of four days died on April 2, 1892. He leaves his wife and daughter behind in the care of this world while he is in the Master's kingdom. May they, by the mercy and grace of God, meet him!

W. H. SANDERS.

SHRITTON.—Whereas, Our heavenly Father, in his providence, has removed from our midst our friend and companion, THOMAS SHRITTON; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the M. E. Sunday-school at Jackson, Miss., has lost one of its most beloved and promising members.

Resolved, That we bow in submission to the will of God, knowing the Good Shepherd has gathered the lamb to his fold, in tenderness and love.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with his widow and bereaved ones, trusting they may find comfort from the same source that sustained David in his affliction: "I will go to him, but he shall not return to me."

Resolved, That these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of this Sunday-school, and a copy of the same furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

BACIGOLUPI—Died, in Galveston, April 29, 1892, PETER LORENZO and LOUIS VICTOR, twin sons of Lorenzo and Mary Bacigolupi.

To-day both took wings and left this mundane sphere together. They came and they departed on the same day, after a brief existence of three months and twenty days.

Again "the death angel" crossed the threshold of a happy home and bore away the gentle spirits of two lovely boys—the idols of their parents. How dark and desolate the lonely home seems now! Unhushed by their bright presence, only the aching hearts of those to whom they were dearer than life itself can know. We, who loved them, had watched with interest the expression of two lovely buds, looking forward to the perfect bloom in time to come. But the resper came and gathered the pure white flowers, while the dew of innocence was fresh and sweet on the delicate petals of the soul and "the trail thought of sin" had marred their pearly whiteness, to lay on the bosom of One who hath said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

AMT. ROSIE.

McCOY—Died, at Clarksville, Miss., Oct. 15, 1891, PINKIE LAFAYETTE, son of J. and M. McCoy, aged twelve years eight months and four days.

It seems hard for the little link that binds our hearts together for so short a time to be taken away; but he was too pure for this vale of sorrow, and God took him to his beautiful home above. While he was sick he said: "I want to go to the land of kindness. Everything is so pretty there. Look, mama, look; everything is so pretty there." Thus for two days his sufferings were great. Everything was done that skillful physicians and faithful attendants could do; but his Master called, "It is enough, and his little soul took its flight to the land of kindness, to be with Jesus, where the flowers are blooming in eternal Spring; where the ransomed spirits hallelujah sing. At rest. Farewell, sweet little Pinkie; we hope to meet you where parting is no more."

MAMA.

SNYDER—Mrs. J. B. SNYDER, wife of C. L. Snyder, died at her home, near Ingleside, Claiborne county, Miss., April 11, 1892, aged forty-eight years. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1871, and remained a member to the time of her death. She was a devoted mother, a loving wife and a regular attendant at the house of God. She leaves a heart-broken husband and four children to mourn her loss.

May he, who is a father to the fatherless, be also a mother to the motherless, and ever watch over this sorely bereaved family, and lead them to his blessed home above, where there will be no more heartaches and no more tears.

G. A. GUYER.

CAMPWELL—Dying words of IRY CAMPWELL, who departed this life in Atchafalaya parish, La., April 13, 1892, in the twenty-first year of his age: "I will soon be gone." "The way is opened before me; it is straight and narrow." "I will soon be with the loved ones that are gone." "Don't you see that bright, shining angel up there?" It is going with me. "Now, dear mother, come closer; lay your arm around my neck once more." "Dear father, on one side, dear mother on the other." "Do not weep for me, but meet me in heaven. I am going home." "Christians and sinners, you will meet me in heaven!"

Laura E. LUNDAU.

CLARK—Whereas, Our heavenly Father, in his wisdom, has seen fit to remove from us our esteemed friend and beloved teacher in the West Monroe Sunday-school, J. A. CLARK; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while our Sunday-school sorrows in its loss for one who can not be replaced, we bow in humble submission to the divine will of him who doeth all things well.

Resolved, That we hereby tender our sincere sympathy to his family in their affliction.

Resolved, That these resolutions be forwarded to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication, and a copy of the same be sent to the bereaved family of the deceased.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southern States.—Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in time. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Messiah's Herald.

After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 151, 155, 157, 158, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Westleyan Methodist.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The shoe and leather industries of the United States will be placed on a solid footing at the Chicago Exposition in a building of their own, costing $100,000.

The Typographical Union of the United States and Canada met in annual session in Philadelphia, last Monday, in the auditorium of the Drexel Institute.

The rites attendant upon laying the corner-stone of the Confederate monument and decorating the last resting-place of the unknown soldiers who fell in defense of Vicksburg took place last week.

Col. L. L. Polk, president of the Farmers' Alliance, died in Washington City on June 11. His home was at Raleigh, N. C. He was of great value to his party as a stump speaker, and was an able writer on the topics of particular interest to the farmer.

The ship St. Leo sailed from central dock, near Hamilton ferry, Brooklyn, on June 11, with a cargo of breadstuffs, meats, and infants' food, in addition to 1,500 tons of flour for the starving Russians. The ship was decorated by the ladies of the different circles of the King's Daughters.

A break in the levee has occurred at Belmont, and it is causing much damage in St. James parish. Sarpy levee, in St. Charles parish, has given way, and the crevasse is 200 feet wide. There are also breaks below this city along the New Orleans and Southern railroad. The tracks are under water at five different places.

The Republican National Convention, after a four days' session in Minneapolis, adjourned on June 10. President Benjamin Harrison was nominated for a second term. Harrison was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 535 votes, while Blaine received 152 votes. Hon. Whitelaw Reid, of New York, was nominated for Vice-President.

A break occurred in the levee in Ascension parish on Monday of last week; but by persistent efforts the crevasse was finally checked on Friday. The break was 147 feet at the time of closing. Had the crevasse not been closed, the waters would have devastated what is undoubtedly the richest portion of the sugar region of Louisiana. As it is, the damage will only amount to a few hundred dollars.

The acreage of winter wheat, based on returns to the Department of Agriculture, is 99.9 per cent. of the actual area of last year. There is a small increase in several of the Southern States and an enlargement in Nebraska of 21 per cent. in winter wheat. The percentage of the spring wheat is 100.3, the percentage of Iowa is 90, Minnesota 102, North Dakota 85, South Dakota 118, Nebraska 107. The aggregate is almost exactly 100, or nearly the same as last year.

FOREIGN.

The Czar of Russia and the Emperor of Germany met at Kiel last week. The Czar was received in a cordial manner by Emperor William, and the honorary rank of German admiral was conferred upon him.

While a Parnellite meeting was being held in Dublin, last Sunday, the speakers were attacked by anti-Parnellites, who tried to disperse the audience. A free fight ensued, which was stopped by the police. Many persons were injured.

The Berlin Tageblatt confirms the recent rumors of the death in the interior of Africa of Emin Pasha. If it is true that Emin is dead, the natural supposition is that he has fallen a victim to small-pox, from which reports stated he was suffering.

An attempt to hold Socialistic demonstrations near Orefield, Germany, has been frustrated by the authorities. The assemblage, which numbered about 1,600 persons, were dispersed by mounted police, and eighteen leaders in the movement were placed under arrest.

The overflow of the Danube and its tributaries covers 240 square miles, of which one-half is cultivated land and the remainder meadows and forests. Much game has been destroyed. Part of Dreesburg is inundated, and the pillars of the Danube bridge there are submerged.

The International Miners' Conference was opened at Westminster, London, last week. There were present eight Belgian delegates, representing 97,000 miners; four French delegates, representing 63,000 miners; and four German and Austrian delegates, representing 227,000 miners, besides 62 English delegates.

The efforts of the Italian authorities to suppress the Mafia Vita have resulted in another monster trial in Bari. Last year 179 members of this band of outlaws were arrested in districts around Bari, and were tried in that city. Nine hundred witnesses testified against them, and most of the prisoners were convicted and sentenced. The prisoners in the present case number 219, and witnesses 680. The prisoners are charged with every crime contemplated by law, from assassination and highway robbery to pocket-picking and blackmailing. Many of them are women, girls and boys.

The absorbing question in Liberal circles is whether the Irish Nationalists will go into the general election in their present divided condition or will conclude to unite. There is a feeling among the Liberal leaders that the division in the Irish ranks means defeat for the Liberal party in Great Britain. The appeal of the Ulster Protestants is making a strong impression upon the British non-conformists, and it will be difficult to hold the Liberal party for Irish home rule, unless it is shown not only that an overwhelming majority of the Irish are for home rule, but also that home rule would mean something besides disorder and strife.

against imitations of Pearlina. When they are not dangerous, they are worthless. They are usually both. Pearlina does what nothing else can. It saves labor in washing, and insures safety to what is washed. It is cheap, thorough and reliable. Nothing else will "do as well."

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearlina." IT'S FALSE—Pearlina is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearlina, do the honest thing—send it back. 324 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1892.

WHOLE NO. 1870.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. LEWIS, Asst. Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Important Explanations.

[At the late annual meeting of the Board of Missions, Dr. P. A. Peterson was appointed and requested to write an article for the church papers, explaining the liabilities and tables that appear in the annual report of the treasurer.]

To the Members and Friends of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

The most difficult and perplexing problem with which the Board of Missions has to deal grows out of the lack of means adequate to the increasing and pressing demands of our missionary work, particularly in the foreign field. To manage this great enterprise, even under favorable conditions, involves grave responsibility; but to provide for its maintenance with the limited resources of the Board causes serious embarrassment and much solicitude.

It is a painful fact, not generally known, that every year the Board is compelled to make heavy reductions in the estimates received from the various missions, and to withhold appropriations where it is quite certain that the work will suffer thereby. At the late annual meeting of the Board the appropriations asked for in the several missions aggregated $456,149. The missionaries on the ground and the Bishops having charge, the men who best understand the needs of the work, deemed this amount necessary to carry on their operations during the year. Yet such was the condition of the missionary treasury that the Board was forced to reduce the above amount by $192,667, or about 43 per cent., so as to bring it within the limit of the aggregate of the annual appropriations, which, for prudential reasons, was decided upon in 1891.

The treasurer's report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1892, gives the receipts from all sources as $304,917.84, an increase over the preceding year of $53,618.38. Of this amount, $283,441.11 was derived from regular collections. The remainder—$21,476.73—consists of "specials," by which is meant contributions additional to and independent of the regular collections under the assessments made on the Annual Conferences, and in some cases designed for objects not embraced in the appropriations. Nevertheless, when, by direction of the givers, such special contributions are applied to objects for which otherwise the Board would have to provide, then, and to that extent, they practically go toward paying appropriations, and by so much afford relief to the treasury.

The total liabilities of the Board, April 1, 1892, were, for borrowed money, $118,420.88, and for balance on appropriations of 1891, $116,105.14, making a total of $234,526.02. The liabilities for balance on appropriations can not properly be regarded as a debt, since the payments on these appropriations have several months through which to run, and as they become due will be paid in the usual way from current receipts on the assessments which were made to meet them.

The debt for borrowed money was not all contracted at one time. It has been accumulating through several years. But inasmuch as the chief portion of it was incurred in consequence of the action of the Board in May, 1890, it is easy to conclude and has been often affirmed that said action was injudicious and unwise. It may appear so when viewed in the light of subsequent unexpected wants; but, considered in connection with the then existing conditions, the action of the Board was in full accord with the will of the church, clearly expressed through its highest representative body, the General Conference. In support of this position we submit the following facts:

For several years prior to the General Conference held May, 1890, all our missionary interests had been improving, and the collections had increased each year (with one exception), until at the time above mentioned the amount reported for the fiscal year then just ended was $276,000; the largest sum that had been paid in any one year. At the same time there came from the foreign missions urgent calls for men and for the means of enlargement, while in various quarters earnest appeals were made in behalf of a more liberal policy for the development of the home work, particularly in the Western Conferences.

Deeply impressed by the exigency of the situation, the General Conference, by formal resolution, declared: "We believe the time has come when we must go forward in the work that God has given us to do, or suffer irreparable loss." In keeping with this declaration, and to give it effect as far as practicable at the time, the Conference recommended to the Board of Missions to raise the assessments on the Annual Conferences from three hundred thousand to three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and also elected two additional secretaries to travel through the connection, visiting the Annual and District Conferences, and—the churches generally, in order to stimulate missionary zeal and to increase the collections for the cause.

These proceedings of the General Conference were naturally, and rightly, interpreted to mean that the time had come for a more vigorous and aggressive movement of our missionary forces all along the line. Such, at least, was the understanding of the Board of Missions; and accordingly they raised the assessments on the Annual Conferences, as the General Conference advised, increased the appropriations $72,000, sent fifteen additional missionaries into the foreign field, and made more liberal provision for carrying on the work at home.

Although the mission year, 1890-91, opened thus auspiciously, its close brought disappointment and discouragement, in connection with its financial outlook. Notwithstanding much larger appropriations were to be paid, and that two able and efficient secretaries were in the field most of the time, the collections fell off nearly $25,000 as compared with the preceding year. The Board received for the year, from all sources, the sum of $251,298, with which to pay liabilities amounting to $369,630, leaving a deficit, or a debt, of $118,331. Of this, however, $26,193 came over from the previous year.

Owing to serious embarrassment caused by the debt, the Board, at its annual meeting in Wilmington, N. C., May, 1891, fixed the appropriations for that year at $260,000, or $65,000 less than for 1890, and also determined that in future the absolute appropriations for each year shall be limited to a sum within the amount of the regular collections the preceding year. While all must regret the necessity for this step, yet under the circumstances it was the proper one to take, for whenever the church fails to keep in line with the Board, then the Board must fall back into line with the church. Under the operation of the above regulation, which is likely to continue, the danger of contracting debt, which the Board has always desired to avoid, will be greatly diminished, if not entirely prevented.

There are some who find it difficult to understand why, with the large increase in receipts the last fiscal year, and working under lighter appropriations, the debt has not been reduced. But is it not true that while there has been no decrease in the debt, specifically, there has been material reduction in the indebtedness of the Board? Let us see. The $118,331.34 reported April, 1891, as owing for borrowed money, and denominated debt, did not represent all the liabilities of the Board at that time. There was also a balance of $155,668.22, not then due, but which was afterward paid on the appropriations of 1890. These two sums, taken together, amounted to $273,999.56, being $39,474 more than the liabilities reported April, 1892. With the latter sum were completed the payments on the heavy appropriations of 1890, and this was rendered practicable through the operation of the smaller appropriations made in 1891. But for the relief thus afforded the Board would have been compelled to borrow the above last-mentioned amount, which would have been added to the present debt.

Why there has not been greater reduction in the debt will appear from the following statement. In the Mission Conferences, and the Conferences containing missions under care of the Board, the appropriations take effect at the commencement of their fiscal year, which date from the time of their respective sessions next following the annual meeting of the Board. Consequently, the payments on the appropriations for any one year are not finished until the close of the fiscal year of the Conference whose session is held last. Only about fifty-five per cent. of the reduced appropriations of 1891 had fallen due up to April, 1892, and payments on the remainder will not be completed until the beginning of the year 1893, so that the relief expected from the reduction made in the appropriations in 1891 will not fully appear until the treasurer shall report for the fiscal year 1892-93.

It were better not to indulge great expectations in regard to the reduction of our missionary debt during the present year. The liabilities exclusive of the debt, for which provision must be made between now and April 1, 1893, are $116,000 balance on appropriations of 1891, and say $147,000 on so much of the appropriations of 1892 as shall fall due by April, 1893, making a total of $263,000, which is about equal to the sum of the regular collections last year. Besides this, there was, as already stated, $41,470 of "specials." Possibly a like or larger amount may be secured in the same way this year; but, as before explained, it is not certain how much, if any, of these "specials" can be used for general purposes. We may be sure that the reduction of the debt, whether greater or less, will depend chiefly upon the increase in the regular collections under the assessments, during the fiscal year ending April, 1893.

P. A. PETERSON,
On behalf of the Board of Missions.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. T. S. Randle, Opelousas, La., June 13: "We are having, in some respects, a close time; but in others, prosperous. The Lord is with us, and our work is advancing at some points. We received six persons into the church yesterday evening at Bellevue. This is some of the fruit gathered from a meeting held there not many weeks ago by our Presbyterian brethren."

Rev. E. S. Lewis, Dublin, Miss., June 13: "Yesterday was a good day with us at Dublin. A good Sunday-school, and a full house at eleven o'clock. In the afternoon we had Sunday-school and preaching services at Auburn School-house. At this place our scribe had the pleasure of teaching a class of sixteen little people. This is one of the schools which is furnished with literature by our Sunday-school Board. We feel confident that great good will be done. The other school on our work whose literature is furnished is doing well. Last night we had the opportunity of preaching to the colored people. The congregation was immense."

Rev. T. J. Upton, Lake Charles, La., June 4: "Bro. Inge and his co-laborers, Whitehurst and Saunders, have come, and are gone to other fields of labor and success. Our meeting here, though resulting in not more than about thirty accessions to the churches, was a grand success. Christian hearts were cemented together as never before. Christians were stimulated to greater activity, sinners were converted, and hundreds pledged themselves to a new and better life. Bro. Inge has promised to return and give us two or three weeks in September, at which time we are expecting still grander results. Let the churches everywhere pray for the success of the meeting."

Rev. H. C. Edmondson, Port's Camp, Miss., June 2: "We have just closed a revival at this place which resulted in a great blessing to preacher and people. We had five as bright conversions as I ever saw, and all of them rejoined the church. Three were received by letter and one backslider reclaimed. Bro. T. W. Lewis, of Holly Springs, was on hand doing most of the preaching; and it was done with power and demonstration of the Spirit, too. Bro. J. W. Honnell came to the rescue on Saturday, and preached two powerful sermons. All things considered, we have had a glorious time; and, with a strong church (in the Spirit), a well-organized Woman's Missionary Society, woman's prayer meeting, also Thursday night prayer meeting and a lively Sunday-school of about sixty members, we are now ready to give thanks and honor to Almighty God."

Rev. H. B. Vandenberg, Meadville, Miss., May 31: "Children's Day was observed by the Meadville Church on the fifth Sunday of this month. The program, while not elaborate, was interesting, and everyone seemed to enjoy the exercises. A large crowd was in attendance. The collection was $7.55. Experience and observation teach this scribe that the law makers of our church displayed much wisdom in setting apart one day in the year to be known and observed in all our connection as 'Children's Day'—not only for the fund that is raised and placed in the hands of the Sunday-school Board, but for the great influence it wields over the minds of the people, enlightening them and educating them in the great work for which Christ established his church in the world; evangelizing all the waste places until not one shall be able to say, 'No one ever told me before.' No one ever told me of Jesus and his love."

Rev. W. D. McCullough, Indianola, Miss., June 5: "We have just passed through a twelve days' meeting at Indianola. Rev. W. J. O'Bryen arrived on the second night of the meeting and rendered valuable services. Our congregations were good. Our business men closed up for the services after the third day, which was about as soon as they could in justice to their business. There was marked interest through all the services. That part of the membership in attendance was quickened and encouraged. Sinners were convicted, and resolves for better life were made. No accessions, no conversions. We have received four by certificate this quarter; more are expected. Organized one new church at Bald's, five miles east of this place, on the G. P. R., this year. Have two interesting Sunday-schools doing good work. One other struggling. Finances badly behind. Money scarce, and still we move. We are still praying for and expecting the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Pray for us."

Rev. J. R. Hays, Carthage circuit, Mississippi Conference, June 8: "This is my first year in the ministry. We are doing very well up to date. My second quarterly meeting was held, June 4 and 5, at Rocky Point. Our beloved presiding elder, C. McDonald, was on hand. After a long drive, Saturday morning, we reached the church in due time; and, after song and prayer, he announced as his text the fifteenth Psalm and fourteenth verse: 'Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the Most High.' The congregation were profoundly interested in his sermon of forty minutes. After preaching dinner was announced on the ground for everybody. Our people cry, 'Hard times'; but such a dinner I have scarcely ever seen. After satisfying the body we held our quarterly meeting. Finances very low, but we hope to make a better report by the next quarterly meeting. Sunday, at eleven o'clock, the presiding elder preached from Luke x, 42: 'But one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.' Bro. McDonald had his text well in hand, and his earnest words went home to the hearts of the people. We had a glorious time. After the sermon we partook of the Lord's Supper. We think there was seed sown that will ripen into a bountiful harvest, the house being crowded to the utmost capacity. Our people love their presiding elder and preacher, and we are looking forward to a glorious outpouring of the Holy Spirit among our people this year. Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. H. C. Morehead, P. E., Sardis, Miss., June 15: "Despite the pressure in monetary matters, we are able to report some solid and much-needed improvements in the way of church and parsonage building. Courtland and Panola circuits deserve much credit for the completion of two beautiful country churches, and the purchase of parsonages in the towns of Courtland and Eureka Springs, desirably located and sufficiently large to accommodate the largest of our preachers' families. Steps are being taken to pay off debts on two other parsonages, and to purchase still another for the Mt. Vernon circuit. Some of the charges which have fallen for years to pay in full the connectional collections are planning and working to pay every cent. With the blessing of God, they will succeed. Our Sunday-school interest, we think, surpasses any former year. This is especially true in several of the charges. We intend to press this question until the membership of the Sunday-school equals that of the church. Our divine Lord is stamping the signet of his approval on the efforts of the preachers. Thank God the gospel is still his power unto salvation! Nearly fifty have manifested a desire to be saved during this round by coming forward, or standing in the congregation. Our prayer is for, at least, one thousand conversions and additions to the church in the district this year. This is expected on the basis of God's promises, coupled with the faith, consecration and fidelity of preachers and people. Homes are becoming more religious, prayer meetings are multiplying, children are being consecrated to God in holy baptism, persons are joining the church, Christians are being edified."

Rev. V. V. Boone, Magnolia charge, Mississippi Conference, June 10: "Truly our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places. All who have served the good people of this charge will bear me witness. Due largely to the persistent efforts of Bro. G. H. Gallo-way, we have a comfortable parsonage, complete except painting, which we hope to do in the near future. The Ladies' Aid Society, small in number, deserve much credit in the furnishing of the parsonage. They are constantly adding household articles, and purpose carpeting the floors this year. If our brethren had the zeal and church enterprise of these holy women, we could have the most handsome church and parsonage in the Brookhaven district. The general condition of the work is above the average. Our congregations have been remarkably good from the first, especially at Magnolia. The weather and other circumstances have been against us at Muddy Springs; yet we expect a great revival there. We found a revival spirit at Osyka, and it continues to burn. Our church there is small and financially weak; yet they are doing better in proportion than either of the other churches. I feel that this credit is due them. We are busy getting ready for our District Conference, which will convene July 7. We hope to have a full attendance, and ask the preachers and delegates to come prepared to remain over Sunday. We want your blessing, and trust the occasion will prove one to you. If District Conference is worth going to, it's worth giving a Sunday. Let all persons attending the Brookhaven District Conference procure certificates from their purchasing agent, that they may get the benefit of reduced rates on return ticket. Passenger trains going south arrive here at 6 A. M. and 3:30 P. M. Those going north arrive at 10:30 A. M. and 8:45 P. M."

Rev. J. B. Kent, Lake Charles mission, Louisiana Conference, June 5: "Our new church in the northern part of this city was dedicated this morning by Bro. John A. Miller. The congregation was good, the sermon grand, and the entire service solemn and impressive. Mr. Editor, we are proud of our church. It is neat, well constructed, will seat 160 grown people, and is the cheapest church in the State, all things considered. The parson is doing a very good job painting; but, Bro. Roy, the props have not given way yet. Just about the time the building was completed our contractor saw the necessity of a pulpit, and accordingly made and presented us one of beautiful design and finish. About this time another gentleman, seeing the need of an organ, immediately ordered one, and now we have one of the finest organs in town. Our mother church presented us with a nice communion set, and some unknown friend sent us a table on which to place it. And this is not all. We have ordered a bell, and our girls have raised the money to pay for it. Thank God for liberal men and stirring girls! The Lord has blessed us here. When the field was first reached it was with difficulty that a lodging-place was found. A small house was erected, and the parson sat down to keeping batch with the determination of staying until the church said, Go. But now there are numbers of homes where the weary parson may find rest, shelter and nourishment. Our membership is constantly increasing, the Sunday-school is flourishing, and the congregations fair. With an elegant churob, fitted up with a beautiful pulpit and a fine organ, together with a good choir and organist, a praying membership and a great God upon our side, we have reasons to be encouraged, and expect to be on deck at Conference. Not only this, but we have broken up the surface of the unoccupied portion of the church lot, and expect to plant it in sweet potatoes. So, brethren, when you come to Conference, just call around, and we'll give you a 'tater'."

Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh, colporteur, writes, June 10: "Book selling, visiting, preaching, is about the way the colporteur finds it to be in his experience now. The pastor puts it this way: Preaching, visiting, book-selling, with the last entirely neglected most of the time. Well, each line of this work is important, and can be practiced to individual and public benefit. A few weeks on the road, about the Master's business, has enabled me to attend, first, a pleasant session of the District Conference at Purvis, where good preaching and kind greetings made the stay uncommonly pleasant; second, the meeting of the Holiness Association of the Louisiana Annual Conference, at New Iberia, where I had the pleasure of witnessing the most wonderful displays of divine power ever seen by me since entering the ministry; third, the District Conference at Franklin (which place is, to me, the prettiest town I have seen in Louisiana), where preaching was good, the session pleasant and profitable, and the entertainment (of the book man) the very best (Franklin will long be a green spot in his memory); and, fourth, a week's meeting at Morgan City. The Rev. T. B. White is pastor here. Rev. W. A. Dodge, from Georgia, held forth for four days. The pastor and the writer held on for several days after Dr. Dodge's departure. A number were happily converted, while seven professed entire sanctification during the meeting. The morning before the meeting closed I had the pleasure of hearing twelve persons pray in the congregation, only two of whom had been in the habit of doing so before this meeting. Capt. John N. Pharr has charge of the Sunday-school here, and he seems to be deeply interested in this great work, while his wife is a leader not only in church and Sunday-school work, but one of our most zealous W. C. T. U. workers. Morgan City has a neat church, and a very desirable and comfortable parsonage, and there seems to be an upward tendency in, and a hopeful outlook for, Methodism there."

A REOPENING.

Concerning our reopening and dedication services at Pisgah Church on May 28 and 29, I can't forbear writing somewhat. As previously arranged for, at ten o'clock A. M. five Sunday-schools marshalled their forces at the school-house near by, and at 10:30 there marched into the new church a force of Sunday-school workers numbering two hundred and fifty, or more. The visiting schools being seated, a song of welcome was had by Pisgah school, followed by three beautiful songs, lead by W. T. Jernigen, and prayer by Rev. H. C. Morehead. Prayer was followed by songs, the songs by addresses by Bros. Morehead and Bachman, and these by other songs. At 12:30 P. M. we adjourned for dinner, an abundance of which was soon at the disposal of the great concourse of people, numbering nearly a thousand. In the evening, after many excellent songs, our efficient and beloved presiding elder opened and conducted in a firm, masterly way the most thorough, beneficial and satisfactory Quarterly Conference had on Panola circuit in many years. Had a fine turn-out of the official members. Thank the Lord!

On Sunday morning Bro. Bachman lectured the Sunday-school classes and conducted an enjoyable love-feast, at the close of which many came forward for prayer. Bro. Morehead continued the services, baptizing two infants, receiving one member, preaching the dedicatory sermon, dedicating the elegant nine-hundred-and-forty-dollar church, and administering the Lord's Supper, aided in the latter by Bro. Bachman.

The night service was profitable. Preaching and altar service by Bro. Bachman.

Thus closed our two days' meeting, with pleasure and profit to all. A deep spiritual interest was manifest throughout, and has sent a thrill of religious activity through the whole circuit that betokens still better times. We present Bros. Bachman and Morehead with the good-will and gratitude of the whole circuit for their zeal and laborious efforts rendered in this meeting. May God bless and magnify their usefulness in the cause of Christ!

BEN P. JACO, P. C.

Grenada-Collegiate Institute.

The commencement exercises of this school occurred June 3-5, 1892. The sermon was to have been preached by Rev. Amos Kendall, of the North Mississippi Conference; but at the last hour, owing to sickness, he found himself unable to attend. This was a sore disappointment to all concerned. A brother present consented to occupy the time, but not to fill the place of Bro. Kendall, nor to meet the expectations of the people. Sunday night was devoted to the anniversary of the Young Woman's Missionary Society of the Institute. The sermon was preached by the author of this communication.

Monday night we had a Japanese Fan Drill, which was interesting, suggestive, instructive and highly entertaining to the large audience present.

The annual reunion of the alumnae of the Institute was held on Tuesday morning. The program consisted of music, vocal and instrumental, essays and recitations, and the whole was crowned and completed with a splendid address by John B. Ross, Esq., of the Grenada bar. It is rare that one hears a popular address so well conceived and so eloquently expressed as this. The young orator was literally loaded down with bouquets and baskets of flowers until he had to call in assistance to bear his well-won laurels from the field.

Tuesday evening we had the little peoples' concert, full of music and interspersed with recitations that indicated careful training.

Wednesday was commencement day proper, and five young ladies—Misses Nannie Knox, Mamie Murff, Nora Nason, Estella Morehead and Pansy Jordan—were graduated with the degree of M. E. L., and Miss Knox, also from the school of art. To the first and last named had been awarded the honor of delivering the salutatory and valedictory. The essays read by these young ladies were highly creditable to them and spoke well for the training they had received. No pains had been spared by the president and faculty to have absolutely original and independent productions from these young ladies for this occasion. All these essays were fine. One of them, that by Miss Mamie Murff on "The Underground World," seemed to this correspondent to be a paper of superior merit.

The annual address was to have been delivered by Rev. W. C. Black, D. D.; but he failed to make the proper railroad connection in Memphis, and so did not arrive in time. However, the large audience lost nothing, as Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., on short notice, delivered a splendid address, which seemed to have been cut and dried, trimmed, hewed and jointed for the occasion.

Wednesday night was the time for the annual concert, and for more than two hours the vast throng was held spell-bound by the sweetest and finest of music, vocal and instrumental, solos and in concert, duets, quartets and sextets.

One lady asked your correspondent if he had "an ear for music," and he told her he had two, and on occasions of this kind he wished he had four ears for music, or more. This was said to be one of the most pleasant and profitable commencements ever held in Grenada. The church on Sunday and the college chapel on all other public occasions were packed full of people, and many had to turn away for lack of room.

Among the many visitors present we caught sight of Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, Rev. J. W. Malone, Rev. S. M. Thames, Rev. John E. Thomas, Rev. R. M. Davis, Rev. G. W. Bachman, Rev. H. C. Morehead, Rev. G. W. Gordon and Rev. J. M. Huggins. There ought to have been forty or fifty members of the Conference present. It is a recognition due the president and faculty of a Conference school.

REPORT OF THE VISITING COMMITTEE TO GRENADA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE.

The undersigned, chairman of the Visiting Committee to the above named school, was the only member of the committee in attendance on the commencement exercises. The grounds belonging to this college are ample and beautiful, and under careful landscape gardening susceptible of the highest improvement and ornamentation. This we regard as indispensable to the best educational culture of our girls and young women.

The buildings are large, commodious and comfortable at all seasons of the year—warm in the winter and cool in the summer. The furniture and furnishings sufficient, neat and every way comfortable, but not extravagant or expensive. The halls and rooms for study and recitation are admirably adapted to the purposes for which they were built. The boarding department is sufficient for the accommodation of sixty-five young ladies. Forty-two boarders were catalogued this school year. Every room ought to have been full. The table is well supplied with all the best the market affords, and the food is well cooked and tastefully served. The committee has never heard one word of complaint about either the quantity or quality of food served at this school.

The gardens on the grounds furnish in abundance all the vegetables needed by the large college family, and all the milk and nearly all the butter used are made in the college creamery. The milk is pure and the butter fresh. We find that the house and grounds are neatly kept, the sewerage being perfect, so that no unpleasant odors are to be found anywhere on the premises. The young lady boarders and the family of the president are pictures of perfect health. The drug bill for forty boarders for ten months was under five dollars.

The discipline of the school is about as nearly perfect as school discipline ever gets to be. It is firm and inflexible, but fatherly and kind.

This college, or institute, is made up of seven schools, or sub-departments, separate and distinct, presided over by a professor, with such assistance as each department may demand. The curriculum, or course of study, laid down in these several schools covers the whole ground of higher female education, with special stress laid on all those sciences best calculated to develop and enlarge the intellectual faculties of our daughters. The examination papers—all written—covering the whole ground of the college course, from the preparatory to the finishing department, were submitted for inspection and examination by the committee, and, as far as the committee was competent to go, they were closely examined. These papers show diligent and honest work on the part of the several teachers and close application and highly commendable progress on the part of the pupils. In our opinion, much of the success attained in this school is due to the careful and accurate training in the preparatory department. A good foundation is laid. The difference between pupils prepared for college here and pupils in the college family and out of it is manifest in the examination papers and in the progress and general deportment of those who attend this school. Of course, there are exceptions, but we name this as the general rule.

We believe the several members of the faculty to be competent, conscientious, laborious, diligent and devoted to their work. The committee is satisfied that the moral and religious sentiment and impression made here is of the highest and best kind. The teachers are Christians who feel the worth and weight of the souls of girls committed to their care. This is especially true of the preparatory department, where the teacher is regarded as next of kin and nearest like our blessed Lord.

This school commends itself to the best love and largest patronage of our Methodist people in North Mississippi and in the regions beyond.

R. G. PORTER,
Chairman of Visiting Committee.

Brandon District School.

The late District Conference made it my duty to attend the closing exercises of the eighth session of this school, which is located among the hills of Jasper county at Montrose. Like the plains that lay out before Abraham, this country is well watered, but not watered by wells. There are many springs, some of which are mineral. Bro. Jones (John A. B.) says he can stand on the front steps of the school-house, and with a long-handled gourd, drink from the fountain of immortal youth—provided the handle is long enough.

I will say for the fertile nature of this country, that it grows very fat pine-knots, and, I think, without fertilizing. The village is on a boom, but not such a boom as comes of New England capital. The school has given life to the place by drawing people there who want to educate their children. An acre lot can be bought for $5, and lumber can be bought on the ground for 75 cents per 100.

Just across the street from the school-building now in use there stands a large, two-story building, which tells a story of ante-bellum days. About 1842 Rev. J. N. Waddell began a school under the direction of the Presbyterian Church, which continued four or five years. Mr. Waddell was afterward president of the University of Mississippi, and is now living, probably in Birmingham, Ala.

A number of students who were at this school have since been prominent men in the State. In the grove near the building is a large post oak of peculiar shape. A knot on it lying on the ground causes it to present the appearance of a small tree growing up out of a large stump. This is known as "Lowery's stool." It is said to be the place where Ex-Gov. Lowery used to study his lessons. The tree failed to put forth its leaves this Spring. It may be because of recent excessive use.

When I looked at the two buildings, the old and the new—the one, a monument of Presbyterian influence, the other an evidence of Methodist growth—I thought there must be some truth in the assertion which has been made, that the Methodist and the latter-wood are going to take this country. During the present session about 175 pupils have been enrolled, with an average attendance of seventy during the entire session.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, the Board of Trustees of Montrose High School, tender our thanks to Prof. L. D. McLaurin for the judgment he exercised in the selection of teachers for the session just closed.

Resolved, That we tender him our thanks for the judgment he has exercised in the management of the school.

C. F. NIEL, Pres.,

W. H. CALDWELL, Sec.

Dr. C. G. Andrews preached the commencement sermon, Sunday, May 29, at eleven A. M. I was told by the presiding elder that he had thought Bro. Rawls, our preacher there, was doing well, but since Dr. Andrews' visit a proposition to "swap" preachers had been made.

The ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society at Montrose had arranged for a missionary entertainment on Sunday night. Songs and recitations suitable to the occasion were rendered, and your writer said a speech.

Rev. John A. B. Jones delivered the annual address on Tuesday, at eleven A. M. His text (?) was: "Even a king must scratch his own nose." All the workings of the school I saw evidence a busy school. The next session will open Sept. 5, 1892.

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

Rose Hill, Miss.

Opelousas District Conference.

This Conference held its twenty-fourth session at Franklin, La., May 26-29, 1892; Rev. J. A. Miller, P. E., presiding. This district is composed of fifteen pastoral charges. There were eleven pastors present, with a small attendance of laymen. Those pastors who were not present reported their work by letter, except one or two, which were reported by the presiding elder. The reports of various pastors reveal the fact that the attendance upon the Word and the observance of the ordinances of the church throughout the district is gratifying. The spiritual condition of the charges, with a few exceptions, is healthy, while in some it is advancing, and in some few there are evidences of apostasy and growth. The Sunday-school work, as reported, shows some advance, and is encouraging; but in a few cases there seems to be a decline. Two churches and one parsonage have been built, and two other churches in course of erection. The one in New Iberia will soon be completed. When completed, it will be a very handsome brick structure. The stringency in money matters has, to some extent, affected the operations of the church. However, most of the charges report a fair per cent. paid on collections taken. The subject of Christian education and religious literature was enquired into. There is improvement along these lines. We have within the bounds of the district some good schools, where the children are educated under good moral and religious influences. We speak specially of the schools at Opelousas and Crowley. The graduates of the Opelousas Female Institute reflect great credit upon Mrs. M. M. Hayes and her assistants, and is worthy the patronage of all this country. The school at Crowley, as reported by Bro. C. B. Carter, is of great promise. The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE has a very good circulation throughout the district, but far from what it should have. The discussion of the subject of missions disclosed the fact that there is a wide field for missionary work throughout this district. A large portion of this Southwest Louisiana is missionary territory, and there are loud calls for help in this direction.

Brethren, in our great efforts to send the gospel to the heathen world, let us not lose sight of the thousands at our door who are perishing for want of the Bread of Life. These are intrusted to our care. God looks to us for their salvation, but we have no man who can reach them; yet God has—and if we do our duty, the man will be given. We must have men of God who can speak and preach in French to reach them, to preach the gospel of Christ to them, "to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in Christ." Let us pray earnestly with faith for such men.

Rev. R. Randle, president of the Conference Board of Missions, and pastor of our church at Alexandria, was with us, and presided over our missionary meeting held on the night of May 27. Rev. J. M. Henry, pastor of Carrollton Church, New Orleans, was present, and delighted the audience with a very interesting lecture on missions. His large missionary map of the world was of great help in the lecture. Speeches were also made by Revs. F. S. Parker and R. Randle, after which Bro. Cassidy took the collection, which was not as large as it might have been.

Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh, collector, was present in the interest of the work he represents.

Special emphasis was given to religious worship, and from the first service there was a good interest manifested. There were many at the altar during the Conference—some seeking a deeper work of grace in their hearts, and others as penitents seeking pardon. We left Bro. Cassidy, assisted by Bro. E. T. Denson, protracting the meeting.

W. T. Blacksher, Gov. M. J. Foster, Wm. Beadle and J. D. Morgan were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and Rev. E. T. Denson and Jasper Spell, alternates.

Abbeville was selected as the next place of meeting.

Mr. Bell and his good wife entertained right royally the sorbs and his brother, and the people of Franklin gave the whole Conference a royal entertainment, if we are to judge from the heartiness with which the vote of thanks was taken.

Indian Mission.

I wish to say to the friends of the Indian Mission that we have paid our missionary, Bro. W. W. Cammack, for first and second quarters, and the third quarter will soon be due, and we lack about $22.90 of having enough in bank and in hand to settle for this third quarter, and then we will lack all for fourth quarter; or, altogether to finish out third and pay the fourth, we lack $147.90.

Now, brethren and sisters, what will we do about it? Will we pay it or not? Surely we will pay it without a word. I think the only reason why you have not paid in more already is because the work had not been inaugurated, and you did not feel the necessity of any hurry; but the missionary has been appointed, and is at work, and the money is needed now; so, doubtless, you will respond now without delay. Just think of the importance of the work! If I remember correctly, Bro. Cammack stated that he had found about five hundred Indians in twenty miles of his home without the gospel. Oh, what a responsibility upon us if there were no more! Think of five hundred heathens right at our doors without the gospel! Five hundred souls without the Bible and without Christ right here in a Christian land! But that is only about one-fourth of them in the State of Mississippi, though some of them have the gospel, but none of them until this year by our church.

Now, brethren and sisters, let's do all we can to redeem the time that we have already lost. Let's push the work now. Surely our sisters, if they could only take a stand along some roadside and see an Indian man and his wife pass by—the man with his gun and shot pouch, walking or riding his pony ahead, and his wife barefooted, with a heavy burden on her back, trudging along behind, maybe wading through the mud, a perfect slave—just what you would be without the gospel; and they are our sisters in red, for we all sprang from the man whose guilty fall corrupts the race and taints us all. Shall we not do all we can to lift her up to her proper sphere in the home, in the church, and in society? Surely, I say our sisters would do something if they only knew the true state or condition of these poor heathen women in our midst.

Now, let us all do our duty, and do it at once, toward these much-neglected people. Several subscribed for the mission two or three years ago, and have not paid the first installment. It may be, brother or sister, you do not remember having subscribed. Please refresh your memory; and if you can not remember having subscribed, for fear you did, and have forgotten it, send something anyway; and if you have not subscribed, and know it, please help us now. "Oh," you say, "the times are so hard and money so scarce, we can't do much now." Well, do you know why the times are so hard? It is because we have failed to do our duty as Christian people, and the Lord is punishing us by shortness on every hand; and if we do not do better, no telling how soon he may destroy us by his judgments; so, if we want to prosper and be happy, and then get to heaven when we die, we had better do our duty. The shorter the crops and the harder the times, the more we ought to do and pay for the church.

Now, may God help us to do our duty in every respect, and especially toward these long-neglected people! Send money to me at Barlow, Copiah county, Miss.; send books to Rev. W. W. Cammack, Philadelphia, Neshoba county, Miss.

Now, I wish to say, in conclusion, I received some good little books from Miss Hattie Collins, Cotton Valley, La., which will be sent to Bro. Cammack for the converted Indian, Tabby, as directed. May God bless Miss Hattie!

Letter from Missouri.

When our dear old ADVOCATE comes to us on its weekly visits, I am reminded of my obligation to send an occasional communication for its columns. I enjoy reading the notes of victory from the field very much, and rejoice with my dear brethren of the old North Mississippi Conference in their success in the gospel. May the Lord bless them more and more!

We are moving with good success in Southeast Missouri. More than a thousand souls have been added to our church in the Charleston district since the last session of the St. Louis Conference. Our presiding elder (Rev. Jas. T. Kendall) is truly a live man, and pushes the battle to the very gates of the enemy throughout the entire district. I have never known a man of more energy or greater courage, and, as an evidence of this, our church has more than doubled in all its interests in the last two years. My own charge is the hardest, toughest place in Southeast Missouri. We have a well-built old town, with a population of more than six thousand. There are seven schools here, with fifteen hundred pupils enrolled. One of our State normal schools is located at this place, with a regular attendance of more than three hundred students. But with all these things, our own church is very weak. We have a large German element here, and the Roman Catholic Church overshadows everything else. The Lutherans come next, with a fine church-building and a strong membership. Then come the Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, German Methodists, Episcopalians and Campbellites. The truth is, our Protestant element is chopped up into so many little fragments that no one of the denominations is self-supporting, while the Catholic Church has great wealth. If our Missionary Board could give us a good liberal support here for two or three years, we could build a good strong church; but we greatly need help. Anyone can see the importance of the field when the question of these schools (especially that of the normal) is considered. We ought to have a good church and a regular ministry here, even if we had no local membership, as our own young people attending school here from abroad should be cared for. We have people true and tried here, but they are not enough. Quite a number have been added to our church during the year, but a number will leave for their homes when the school is closed. We feel that we are thus doing some good for the church at large, if we can't keep them with us.

But I fear I have already written too much for one time, and yet I have not told half I wanted to tell. I will have to write more later on. Love to the brethren. Pray for us.

May the Lord bless and prosper you in your work with the ADVOCATE!

Rev. H. L. Vaughn.

OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Rev. H. L. Vaughn was born March 11, 1856, and died April 4, 1892—a young man, in the prime of life, in the thirty-seventh year of his age. Bro. Vaughn was carefully brought up in a Christian home, and by deeply pious parents. His early associations were of the best kind. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church with his parents and entire family in 1870, while he was yet a small boy in his teens. Bro. Vaughn was licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of the Columbus circuit, and recommended by the same body for a special course of study in the theological department of the Vanderbilt University, from which department he graduated in June, 1879, and was admitted on trial in the traveling connection by the North Mississippi Conference at its session in November of that year. In 1880 Bro. Vaughn was happily married to Miss Trigg, of Gallatin, Tenn.; but, in the providence of God, his good wife was called home in 1885. Soon after this sad event he was married to the elder sister of his first wife. This wife, with four children, are left to be sheltered by the wing of God, and to be cared for by the church in whose service the husband and father died.

Bro. Vaughn was a man of excellent and amiable spirit, full of energy and of invincible courage. He was a devout Christian, full of faith; a man of prayer and full of good works. He was a close and diligent student of God's Holy Word, of our standard works on theology, and of books of general literature. He grew to be one of our best and strongest expository and doctrinal preachers, and one of the most useful and efficient pastors in the Conference. Every interest of the work committed to his hands was looked after promptly, and with a zeal and energy that overcame all obstacles.

Bro. Vaughn had a passion for writing, and had grown to be a strong man with his pen. There are few among us who possessed such facility of expression and such strength and clearness of statement as Bro. Vaughn.

His last sickness was of short duration, and his death was rather sudden and unexpected by his family and friends, but when the critical moment came he was ready for the change. He had steadily grown in grace and in knowledge and love of God from childhood till God called him from labor to reward. His stricken wife and helpless children are in Texas, but our Lord, the husband of the widow and the father of the fatherless, is there with them, and his eye upon them.

GILDEROY.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—June 26, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LA PRADRE.

Messiah's Reign.

Psalms lxxxi. 1-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"All kings shall fall before him: all nations shall serve him." Verse 11.

We must remember, while we are in our discussion, that the idea of the coming Messiah was in the mind of pious Jews, and that, because of this, their religious lyrics contain passages that are prophetic of his coming and his government. Such is the case with the Psalm of the lesson. Solomon only prays for qualities that will make him to be a good and wise ruler, but, typing the Messiah's rule by his own when so endowed, he gives a glowing picture of the righteous, universal, and beneficent, and perpetual government of the coming Christ.

Ver. 1. To be wise and to be righteous, this is essential for every ruler, from the father of a family to the head of a great nation. All of gracious influence and of continuing power, mentioned in the Psalm, depends on these two prerequisites: wisdom and righteousness.

Ver. 2. The poor are often cruelly oppressed; God is "no respecter of persons." Christ is the friend of the poor. He will always do them justice. Rich and poor, under his rule are judged and sentenced equally alike. It is not so under any earthly ruler.

Ver. 3. Under his rule peace that is the product of righteousness, shall abound like a universal harvest, covering not the level plains only, but the rocky mountains as well. And there is no peace, real peace, except that which comes by righteousness.

Ver. 4. Even the poor, and the children of the needy, shall all share in this peace. Oppression will fall before the principles of righteousness.

Ver. 5. This reign shall endure forever. Oppression will not again triumph. Righteousness of God's nature; it is eternal.

Ver. 6, 7. "Rain upon the grass"—refreshing, making productive again. One crop gathered, the another, and another. Old earth never tires so long as the throne comes. The thought is, there shall be a drought; there shall be an endless round of harvesting. Righteousness and peace, peace, and righteousness, on, forever.

Ver. 8. Terms somewhat similar to those used to denote the extent of the Jewish nation. (See Ex. xlii. Deut. xl. 24.) "Ends of the earth," however, is an expression never used in this limited sense, but implies the whole world.

Ver. 9-11. Universal dominion. The savage tribes, the kings of the earth, and powerful nations—all kings, nations.

"From north to south the princes meet To pay their homage at his feet." The kingdom of Christ—the "Sword of Nebuchadnezzar's vision"—shall be the whole earth.

Ver. 12-14. No wonder that universal allegiance should be given to such a king! Not only wise, and strong, but full of sympathy for the poor and needy; a ruler whose law meets a response of love, and whose obedience is rendered with light. His poor ones shall neither be despoiled by cunning nor oppressed by malicious power. "They shall live!"

Ver. 15. The wealth of the nations shall be his. Men will make money for Christ just as they pay him and sing his praise. Already we are "saying prayers" for his kingdom to come; by and by we will pay it in earnest, pray by the soulful cry by the purseful.

Ver. 16. "A handful"—that is, great abundance, a full hand. Earth shall be filled with plenty, from mountain-top to valley; the luxuriant Lebanon shall be reproduced everywhere. The crowded city shall be in abundance, and shall be multiplied.

Ver. 17. This peace and plenty shall endure, for he endures. All nations, sharing his blessings, shall sing his praise, and "call him happy." Isaiah's prophecy shall be fulfilled: "He shall see the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied."

Ver. 18, 19. The doctrine of these verses form a fitting conclusion to this Psalm only, but of the vision of the Book of Psalms, of which it is a part.

Let the teacher trace the spread of the gospel from the days of the apostles, show its effects wherever preached, and stir the hearts of the children to missionary zeal.

TEMPERANCE DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. JOHN T. SAWYER, D.D.

The Presbyterian Church on Temperance.

The action of the General Assembly through its Standing Committee on Temperance:

Resolved, That the whole power of the Presbyterian Church, in harmony with the efforts of other evangelical communities, shall be directed to the passage of any law legalizing the liquor traffic in Alaska, and that the permanent committee on temperance use all lawful and laudable methods and means in resisting the passage of such a law in Congress, and to this end that the action of this Assembly be communicated by telegraph to the committees in the National Congress on this matter in charge.

That the Assembly stands firmly by the deliverances heretofore given by the churches in the evils of intemperance, and that the ministers and people of this church shall be diligent in their individual and collective capacity in the determination of the evil, and that the deliverance of the Assembly of 1883, that, "In view of the fact that the Assembly would have with its action of joy and thanksgiving, the extermination of the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a beverage by the power of Christian conscience, the opinion and the strong arm of the law," and further, that we give all our efforts to the execution of the sacred oaths of office.

That this Assembly regards the sale, licensed or unlicensed, as a curse to the land, inimical to our free institutions, and a constant jeopardy to the present and lasting peace and happiness of all members of the home, and furthermore, loyalty to Christ and the church should constrains every Christian citizen to be earnestly zealous in securing the removal of the traffic, very largely responsible for the mass of crime, pauperism, and the social evils that flood the land with misery, and that we have the right value to the cause of temperance in this country, which comes from the Supreme Court of the United States in its recent decision: "That there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquor by retail; it is not a privilege of the State or of a citizen of the United States."

That we urge Congress to pass laws prohibiting the sale of all intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes from all the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, and from all buildings and institutions under control of the United States government. That we endorse the work of the temperance women's temperance associations and all kindred organizations, and bidding them God-speed, and we urge the women of our Presbyterian Churches to organize temperance work along the same church lines as has been adopted by the women of the Presbyterian Churches of Pennsylvania, and this, not in antagonism, but in perfect harmony with the angelic work of other temperance organizations. Also that this work be extended to the children and youth.

That from the pulpits of our beloved church, emphasis should be given to the deliverances of the General Assembly for the past thirty years, and in order that the church community and others who might be led to indifference to temperance work, may be thoroughly understood the position of the church, now and in years past, the permanent committee be requested to have their tract, "A Summary of the Deliverances of the Assembly on Temperance," sent to all pastors throughout the church with a request that they be distributed among the people.

Roman Catholic Utterances.

What is it that keeps the Irish people in these low social conditions? The saloon. Thither goes the money earned by the sweat of their brow. Thence it is taken, broken down in health and strength, to swell the list of idlers and paupers. Our diocese and our districts in America is the number of Irish saloon keepers.—Bishop Ireland.

Don't sell liquor. I would rather for my young man to become a tramp and beg for a living, than to sell liquor for a living. There is no meaner more contemptible way of getting a living than by selling rum.—Rev. Father R. F. Barry, Hyde Park, Mass.

One of the great blessings of no wine is, that it has crippled the power of the saloons—one of the most powerful, bold, persistent and audacious opponents to what is good.—Rev. Father Thos. Scully, Cambridge, Mass.

The saloon is the recruiting office of the devil, of blasphemy, and of infidelity. It is the duty, therefore, of all who love God and the church to oppose the influence of the saloon.—Rev. Father C. L. Burns, Providence, R. I.

We know that intemperance has wrought evil in the liberties of our country, and in the politics of our country. Oh, the meanness of our politics that will be led by the grog-slinging element!—Rev. Father W. Elliott, C. S. P., New York.

We who labor so hard to rid our country of landlords and landlordism, ought not to become slaves of the rum lord, and bow to the iniquity of intemperance.—Rev. Father T. F. Conaty, Worcester, Mass.

Any American citizen who says it is impossible for us to put down those who, to enforce the laws that are upon the statute books against the liquor traffic, I would say to him he ought to abdicate. We are able to do it.—Rev. W. H. Elder, Archbishop of Cincinnati.

We do not believe that the church should leave the field entirely alone to the saloon keeper to champion our laws. We believe that as long as the law dares, with effrontery, to legalize our politics, that the church, with uprightness, with a clear and serene countenance should enter the political arena to purify it.—Rev. Father Cleary, Kenosha, Wis.

Very Much That Way.

The Rev. Dr. A. B. Leonard, at the Omaha General Conference, said among other good things, this:

"We are strong on resolutions, but weak at the ballot-box. The greatest trouble with us temperance people is that we do a tremendous amount of ballooning. We pass great resolutions denouncing the liquor traffic, and publish them to the world as the expression of our convictions; then we get in a balloon and soar aloft. Meanwhile the saloon keeper, wily politician that he is, fixes up the caucus, makes his slate, nominates a ticket and telephones up to us: 'Come down, good people, come down. We have done all the hard work, and all you will have to do is to come down and vote.' So we come down and vote the ticket the rum seller fixes up, pass some more resolutions, and go up and balloon for three hundred and sixty-five days more."

Just such voters as The Issue describes we have in the Crescent City. Read this:

A few weeks ago I saw an Italian walk into one of our courts for naturalization. "What kind of a government is this?" asked the judge. The would-be citizen shook his head, saying he did not know. He was posted on beer and bologna sausage, but not on government.

"Well," said the judge, "who governs this country, a king or an emperor?" "An emperor, I think," said the nearly hatched citizen. Everyone in the court-room laughed, but all the same the judge told the clerk to swear him in as an American sovereign. And at next election maybe he will walk up to the polls behind you and put his ballot on top of yours.

In other ships come money lords from England, buy up the breweries and levy their taxes on the beer-guzzling American. And so the tax of a thousand million of dollars is paid by the American people for liquors, three-fourths of this mighty sum, or round $750,000,000, goes as a tribute levied by foreign brewers and low-browed foreign saloon keepers. It does seem to me that the bird of freedom that we keep upon our mount of patriotism to accredit for liberty would in view of these facts be a little husky in its voice.

But we re-ascend our mount and take another observation. We find that since the days of Washington, Jefferson and Adams a great change has occurred. Then patriotism was the touch-stone and guide with the voting masses. Now a substitute, little but active, potential and irresistibly alarming, has taken its place. It is known as the almighty dollar! And what a scepter it wields! And how low the nation bows at the scepter!

The same paper shows up the "native rascals," and we have many of them also in New Orleans and Louisiana.

At a summer school here in the United States a church dignitary of high standing is reported to have spoken of a certain class of people as "a lot of foreign rascals in our midst, who hate everything American." No doubt there are foreign rascals in our midst, but there are not a few native rascals as well, and both the foreign and native rascals are largely the products of the legalized saloon. The saloon breeds and educates rascals just as the swamp breeds and produces malarial fever. To get rid of the fever, drain the swamp; and to get rid of the rascals, foreign and native, destroy the saloon. Many of the rascals of Christendom would be honest and God-fearing Christians but for the liquor saloon now legalized by Christian governments. Methodists all round the world should stand in the front line of battle against the legalized liquor traffic.

Active preparations are in progress for a series of Temperance Congresses to be held in Chicago in 1893. The National Temperance Society has taken the lead in this movement, and among other things has sent two representatives to Europe to endeavor to create an interest in it. Among the societies which have announced their intention of holding Congresses during the Columbian Exposition are the Order of Good Templars, Sons of Temperance, the National and World's Christian Temperance Union, and the Non-Partisan W. C. T. U. In addition to these, great popular meetings will be held which will embrace representatives of all shades of temperance belief, of all organizations and denominations, and will be addressed by some of the most prominent speakers of the world. The Department of State at Washington, in response to the request of the National Temperance Society, has sent out to every American consul on the globe the following four questions for official replies for use in connection with the World's Temperance Congress:

1. Statistics as to the quantity and kinds of intoxicating liquors produced.

2. As to governmental methods of dealing with the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

3. As to intemperance as related to poverty, immorality, and crime.

4. As to what efforts are being made to discourage the use, manufacture, and sale of intoxicants.

The church of to-day, much more the church of the future, must take to its heart the duty of combining and massing its forces against that gigantic atrocity, that diabolical conspiracy, that nameless monster horrendum of Christian civilization, that mothers nine-tenths of the woes and sorrows which blight and curse our modern age—the traffic in intoxicants, which hides its deformity under forms of law. How long shall the face of our Christian age bluster with this worse than pagan shame? Has the virtue of our time degenerated so low that we do not even blush at the legislative traffic in the souls of our own children; that by the very doors of our own homes and our temples an army of miscreants and abominations of law is made abominable by authorization of laws made abominable by Christian law-givers, prosecute a work of murder and death? How can we go to the heathen with this cancer of worse than heathen infamy feasting in our bosom?—Bishop Randolph S. Foster.

We must get parents to train their children to total abstinence from all that intoxicates, and churches to insist on all their members being strictly temperate, and communities to discourage the sale and manufacture of intoxicants as beverages. We must encourage and sustain all lawful measures against intemperance, execute the laws already upon our statute books for its suppression, work for legal prohibition, sustain temperance men, and pray for the Lord's help. Such is the duty of patriots and Christians, and terrible the consequences to nation and church if it be shirked.—The Presbyterian.

Even within its own field the paper that tries to tell all about the last sensational outrage upon law, falls far short of the truth. How many facts it forgets or fails to grasp! What paper ever finds space for the story of parental hearts broken, the lives of innocent victims darkened? Where is the printed record of the saloon keeper's part in the tragedy, whose bottle-nursed the murderous purpose and whose den was the rendezvous of the reckless carousers? The paper that first publishes these details will have a truly valuable "exclusive."—The Golden Rule.

Old Cato was right when he ended every speech with the solemn words, "Carthago delenda est!" "Carthage must be destroyed." Rome must destroy Carthage, or Carthage would destroy Rome. The sovereignty of both was impossible. So with the abominable saloon. It must be destroyed, or it will destroy us. License, high or low, is a delusion and a snare. It is a fraud and an outrage. The only remedy for the gigantic evil under which this and other nations fall is the utter annihilation of the saloon.—Epworth Herald.

It was that greatest of painters, Sir Joshua Reynolds, who said that if you have great talents, industry will improve them, while if you have only moderate abilities industry will supply their deficiency.

The same principle may be applied to that important adjunct of personal appearance, the hair. If it is plentiful and shows no special sign of decay, it may be preserved and given a new beauty by using Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, the most elegant dressing for the hair ever devised, entirely harmless, being a vegetable compound and free from any mineral or other injurious ingredient. Should, however, the hair be weak, have lost its color, baldness set in, or the scalp show any sign of disease, Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer will perform a function that no other preparation can with the same certainty and promptitude. It will restore the color and cause the hair to grow. One bottle of it will do more than a gross of the nostrums that flood the market. Try it and be convinced. If your druggist is without it, send to the Mansfield Drug Co., Memphis, Tenn.

There is a moral dumbness, and the Saylor heals this when he makes us new creatures. The man had a tongue before, but not a religious one. Now he speaks of God, for God, and to God.—Jay.

No one in ordinary health need become bald or gray, if he will follow sensible treatment. We advise cleanliness of the scalp and the use of Hall's Hair Renewer.

Men persuade themselves that they are contending for principle, sacrificing for truth and right, when they are really striving for mastery, placarded with truth, but behind it is self.

PORT GIBSON—THE VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE—THE COLLEGE.

In company with a goodly number of ministers and laymen of the Vicksburg District Conference, we reached Port Gibson, the seat of the Conference, at 9:15 A. M., Thursday, June 9. The Conference was called to order at ten A. M. by Rev. D. A. Little, presiding elder. Bros. H. M. Ellis and W. M. Stevens were elected secretaries. The Conference was harmonious throughout and productive of much good within the district. Ample time was given to religious services. The pulpit was occupied every morning at eleven o'clock and evening at eight o'clock. The reports showed that faithful work was being accomplished and wise planning for the future was being done. Owing to a necessary absence on Friday, we missed the educational meeting; but able addresses were made by Rev. A. F. Watkins, agent of Millsaps College; Rev. B. F. Jones, president-elect of Port Gibson Female College, located at that place, and others, members of the Board of Trust of this latter institution. On Saturday, President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth Female College, appeared, and in a few well-chosen words ably presented the claims of that institution of learning.

We were much pleased to note some changes already effected and prospected in the interest of Methodism in this beautiful little city. The church-building has been to an extent remodeled and modernized. With a few more alterations and the expenditure of a few more dollars, this church can be made to present as handsome an appearance as any church in the State. Again, we noted with much gratification that the contract has already been let, and work has begun on a new parsonage, the building to be completed by the first of September. This is a change greatly needed, and we are gratified that, notwithstanding the cry of "hard times," those good people have projected this movement. We were equally gratified that after a deliberate and careful discussion of the matter, the District Conference decided to build a district parsonage and locate it in Port Gibson, said district parsonage to cost not less than three thousand dollars. That is right. Our churches, parsonages and institutions of all kinds are representative, and should, at least, respectably represent our Methodism. A shabby church, a leaky, dilapidated parsonage, and a third-rate institution of any kind undercuts and places at a very great disadvantage any denomination. We are doubly glad, therefore, that Port Gibson station and the Vicksburg district have moved far enough in these matters. Many churches move, but not far enough. They stop too soon.

The outlook for Port Gibson Female College is brighter than for some time. The attendance last session was small, owing to the low price of cotton and the consequent scarcity of money; but not only is the newly elected president going to spend the Summer traveling in the interest of this college, but the Board of Trustees have appointed a committee whose duty it is to visit every protracted meeting and as many of the charges as practicable within the bounds of the Vicksburg district and solicit patronage. With this force in the field, it can not but improve over last year. This movement was not intended as any lack of confidence in, or disrespect to, the retiring president; but the Board felt something must be done, and that they must do it. This institution is a church school. While the Bible did not find a place in the course of study as a text-book, yet the president informs us it is taught regularly; Steel's Outlines of the Bible being followed. We bespeak for this institution the patronage of our Methodism and friends throughout the western portion of our State. We have colleges in the east, west, center and north, and there is room for all.

En Route.

BY BISHOP C. B. GALLOWAY.

MR. EDITOR: Fourteen hundred miles in forty-eight hours is rapid transit, but is only a faint prophecy, we are told, of what we shall see in a few years. The capital of Mississippi and the metropolis of New York were many days apart a decade or two ago. In 1844 the Mississippi delegates to the General Conference were four or five weeks on the weary journey. Whether or not the times and the people are better than the former days, methods and rates of travel have improved.

Two incidents of the trip brought out in vivid contrast old and young life—hearts chastened and made beautiful by the experiences of years and those full of vigor and hope and dreaming of a glorious future. The train from Jackson to Meridian carried a venerable couple, my neighbors and loved friends, who on the following day were to celebrate the jubilee of their wedded life. The tested faith of fifty years had given a soft radiance to their features, and the precious hopes and reunions of a nearing eternity gave a sweet serenity to their speech. They were thinking less of life and more of eternal life. At eventide it is light with them.

The next morning at Chattanooga another married couple became my traveling companions to Cincinnati. Young, ardent, affectionate, demonstrative, they were oblivious of all the world and could not think for a moment there would ever be a cloud in their sky, a shadow over their pathway. Thus young love dreams, only to find in after years that they are baseless fabrics—unsubstantial visions. The magnificent scenery along Emory river, the graceful sweep of the train across the high bridge over the Kentucky, and the picturesque blue-grass region, of which Lexington is the center, were all of minor concern to that young pair. She seemed the fairest and loveliest of earth to his eager eyes, and he looked to her, for all the world, worthy to be the prince of any realm. There are thirty tunnels in that three hundred miles—some of them long, all of them dark. Right vigorously did they improve them in kisses and caresses. All this I could condone; but when the youngsters ordered two bottles of beer, and drank them without the slightest sense of shame, or even of impropriety, my interest in them gave way to unutterable pity. Alas! what sorrow may come from that foaming bridal cup! How thoughtless the young woman who imperils her future by sipping wine with him to whom she has entrusted her life!

At Buffalo, next morning, I was glad to find on our train the Rev. Mr. Woodworth, president of Tougaloo University, near Jackson, Miss. He is conducting successfully that institution for the education of the colored people, and is withal a scholarly, excellent gentleman. That school is the property of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Church, and is one of the best managed within the range of my acquaintance.

From Buffalo to New York a traveler from the South sees much to entertain and delight him. The fields are green and beautiful, the farm-houses freshly painted, the fences in good repair, the villages attractive and the cities prosperous. They seem not to have heard that cotton only sold for six cents, and another overflow threatened the lower Mississippi Valley. From Albany down to this great city, we sped along the east bank of the Hudson river. What vivid pages in my early American history were recalled as I noted the places made memorable in the War of the Revolution! From the top of a building in Newberg a flag was waving. That was Gen. Washington's headquarters, and the government preserves and guards the sacred shrine. We pass Poughkeepsie, the home of Vassar College, West Point, where we educate men to fight to keep the peace, and other points too numerous to mention.

I reached the city at six o'clock. Noticing in the afternoon papers that the one hundred and thirty-eighth commencement of Columbia College would take place at Carnegie Music Hall at 8:15, I made my way promptly to that educational gathering. Admission was by ticket, and I had none. Approaching a young collegian at the door, I told him a gentleman from the far South interested in education desired to witness the exercises. He gave me a very cordial welcome and had me provided with an excellent seat, far to the front, and just in the rear of the student body. There was a magnificent audience and many notable men were on the platform. The young president of Columbia, the Hon. Seth Low, and all the professors wore black gowns, with the regulation university caps. A very imposing spectacle they presented. Near President Low sat Bishop Potter, Dr. Marvin R. Vincent, and other distinguished clergymen and citizens.

The graduating classes were very large. Thirty-seven received the degree of Bachelor of Arts; forty-one, the degree of Bachelor of Laws; one hundred and sixteen, the degree of Doctor of Medicine; nine, the degree of Engineer of Mines; eighteen, the degree of Civil Engineer; seven, the degree of Electrical Engineer; six, the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy; six others, the same degree in the Course of Architecture; twenty-seven, the degree of Master of Arts, and three, the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Honorary degrees were conferred upon the new president of Cornell University, Dr. Schurman, who was present, a young man about thirty-five years of age; upon Edmund Clarence Stedman, who was warmly applauded, and upon a Pennsylvania clergyman, an alumnus of Columbia.

The address of President Low was a brief, bright, hopeful recital of the history of Columbia College, from its first location down near the City Hall over a hundred years ago. The present quarters on Madison avenue are now too small for the growing demand of the consolidated college and university, and a larger site has been purchased farther out, which, it is thought, will be spacious enough for all the years. The president made felicitous reference to the growth of the city by relating an incident. He said the Hon. Hamilton Fish, president of the Board of Trustees of Columbia, and a graduate of the class of 1827, told him he remembered perfectly, when a lad, that some one came to his father's house and reported that a wolf had been killed in "Stuyvesant's Willows." That is the very spot where Mr. Fish now lives—away down town, at the corner of Second avenue and Seventeenth street. A great city has grown up north of "Stuyvesant's Willows," and within the memory of one man. How rapid is the sweep of modern progress—how majestic its material conquests! And what an alarm-peg to the church, to awake and put her armor on!

I was greatly impressed with the progressive, liberal spirit of Columbia in providing for more thorough post-graduate education. The number of endowed scholarships, fellowships and lectureships means better equipped instructors and the elevation of educational standards. Teaching hereafter is to be a profession, and not a temporary occupation—a life-work, and not a makeshift to secure a little needed cash while other plans are being matured.

Having made final arrangements for passage on the steamship Servia of the Cunard Line, interviewed Brown Bros., the bankers, and secured a letter of credit, I had a little time yesterday to make one or two calls and note somewhat the wonderful growth which had taken place since last I saw this city. Business calling me to Wall street, I was pleasantly impressed with the fact that the door of Trinity Church opens into that great money mart of this new world. I wondered if the preachers in that historic pulpit had made an effective gospel echo down that narrow way of impure gold. And then I wondered how many unfortunate "shorn lambs" of the Exchange ever turn their steps to the Lord's house for comfort in sorrow, for help in time of trouble.

I called at the Bible House and had the pleasure of meeting the officers of the American Missionary Association. Dr. A. T. Beard, one of the secretaries, told me that one thousand dollars a day passed over his table for their work in the South. And a good work they are doing. From Miss Emerson, who has charge of the Woman's Department of Correspondence, I gathered some valuable information about their methods of raising and disbursing missionary funds. Dr. Beard, who for some years was pastor of the American Chapel in Paris, was kind enough to give me a letter of introduction to the minister now in charge.

I go on board the good ship Servia this evening, and to-morrow morning, at six o'clock, will move out to sea. My regret in bidding adieu to dear ones and native land finds some compensation in the hope of soon seeing the historic places of the East for the first time, and greeting the brethren in the early home of Methodism.

New York, June 10, 1892.

Purgatory—No. 4.

We further object to the teaching of the doctrine of the existence and state of purgatory, because it must be practically demoralizing. If this life does not terminate our probationary trial, if men can believe that by penance and repentance in the spiritual state they can escape from the guilt and pollution of sin, many will be slow and careless to prepare for the needs of eternity by denying themselves, taking up their cross and following Christ. If they can have some of their money, which they can no longer possess, nor use, applied to the purchase of masses for the repose of their souls and speedy deliverance from the tortures of purgatory, they will continue their sinful indulgences, and selfishly so have their money applied. It is matter of history that in Romanist communities immense sums of money are so applied. Not many years ago one of the Kings of Spain left money to pay for twenty thousand masses to be said for the repose of his soul and deliverance from purgatory.

Dr. Olin relates in his travels the case of an Italian gentleman, in one of the Italian cities, who had left money to be invested, and the interest to be applied to pay for a mass to be said every day to the end of time for the repose and deliverance of his soul from purgatory. From his standpoint he was trying to make a sure thing of his final salvation. To prevent the perversion of property and the wrong to families in the forty-seven years of the reign of Elizabeth, the Parliament of England enacted a law declaring such bequests illegal and null. Such is one of the Articles of the Constitution of Mississippi, and, perhaps, so in other States of our Union.

When a Pope dies two hundred masses are said the first day and one hundred per day for nine successive days. All of this seems to encourage putting off preparation for the eternal future, and is, therefore, demoralizing.

We object to the doctrine because it looks to us like a gross and cruel extortion upon a large class ill able to bear it. It is the most far-going and effective system of taxation ever devised by the ingenuity of man. It makes an appeal which no one who has been educated to believe it can resist. Your beloved relative is suffering as dreadfully while it continues as if in hell. If you have faith in it, and have any money, you can but pity and must believe. In a Romanist community where it is the common belief, if one even doubts, he had rather pay for masses than incur the charge of heartlessness and want of respect for the dead.

It has always struck me, if the priest believes he can, by saying masses for the repose of suffering souls, deliver them out of torture, and won't do it unless he is paid to do it, he is greatly wanting in ordinary humanity; and if he knows he can do no such thing, he is a knave for charging poor people for a useless service. I suppose it must be education that reconciles the dying to their fate; otherwise it seems to me that death, which is the dreadful gate to purgatorial fires, would be most awful and appalling. In short, we are opposed to it because it is without scriptural warrant—is dishonoring to the merit of Christ's blood, able to "cleanse from all sin and save to the uttermost." It is a slander on the grace of God that saves us without money and without price.

There is in none of the Romanist authorities any satisfactory information as to how it is known when souls are delivered. They speak of "releases," but how long souls may continue in purgatory there is no definite information. It is matter of history that the Roman Church celebrated masses for ten years for the benefit and repose of the soul of Pius IX. Now if so eminently a holy man may suffer purgatorial tortures ten years, how long shall we common mortals be kept in durance, dreadful and vile?

I have always felt about like the fox in the fable who was invited by his imperial highness, the lion, along with the lamb, kid, colt, calf and others to a royal dinner at the lion's den. The dinner came off, but the fox did not attend. After a few days the lion and fox, where it was safe for the fox to meet him, met. The lion, with concealed displeasure, asked why he had not honored his invitation? The fox said, "He appreciated the honor conferred, but he was kept away by observing that the tracks of all the guests at the lion's feast led into the den, and that he saw no tracks coming out, and as he did not wish to remain permanently in the den, he concluded, upon the whole, that it was best and safest not to go in at all." If it please God, I don't wish to be detained in purgatory at all, for possibly I might never get out. We close by presenting a sample of a "release" from purgatory:

A FULL RELEASE FOR THE POOR SOULS IN PURGATORY.

His Papal Holiness Clement XII, bath this year 1738, on the seventh of August, most graciously privileged the Cathedral Church of St. Christopher in Mentz; so that every priest, as well as secular, as regular, who will read mass at an altar for the soul of a Christian departed, on any holiday, or on any day within the octave thereof, or on two extraordinary days, to be appointed by the ordinary, of any week in the year, may each time deliver a soul out of the fire of purgatory.

J. B. WALKER.

NOTES.

The religion of some people seems never to have "invaded the province of their private lives." That is, "going beyond its limits."

It is possible for a man to know many texts and not know much Scripture. The true way to learn Scripture is in systematic study. We are glad to know that there is more of such study now, a-days than formerly.

One of our exchanges has discovered that "it takes some presoners more than an hour to make a failure." We have some preachers in this Southwestern part of Methodism that can do the thing quite handsomely inside of forty minutes!

Speaking of cheaper tuition in our colleges, the Western North Carolina Methodist throws out this hint to those who have such things in charge: "It is better to make a profit of ten dollars on ten students than to clear ten dollars on one student."

Dr. Lafferty describes the speeches of our two last fraternal delegates to the Methodist Episcopal Church after this fashion:

Dr. Sam Steel soft-soaped that Sanderlin till they stood in a sea of scented suds up to their chins. Dr. Tigert bathes the brethren for two mortal hours in a solution of scalding and caustic history until they blissed and bled away.

A sister wants to know of us what we think of "Christian science." She says she knows a Methodist preacher who sent his children to a "Christian science healer" to be healed of some kind of sickness. We think Dr. Hoss exactly right when he answered one of his correspondents asking the same question, that in "Christian science there was no science and less Christianity." As to the Methodist preacher referred to, we think he has made a very serious mistake.

A contemporary has this, which we commend specially to our young preachers:

There is after all a considerable difference between "eloquence" and "eloquence." It has been distinguished and described as follows: "When you whistle, and the dog comes to you, that is eloquence; when you whistle, and the dog runs away from you, that is eloquence." Heaven save us from the kind who eloquies in the pulpit, and give us men with true eloquence. What we need is preachers, not actors. True eloquence is the eloquence that speaks under the inspiration of the Almighty Spirit.

Hon. William Mathews is writing for the Standard some interesting papers on Public Speaking. In regard to the use of notes he has these valuable suggestions:

The use of notes may be well provisionally, and in exceptional cases; but, in the great majority, we believe, the beginner should do without notes altogether. A great disadvantage of such supports, is, that they rob him of that sympathy of the hearers which they give to him who has the courage and self-reliance to trust, without their help, to the inspiration of the theme and the occasion. Let the beginner search his subject through and through, brooding over it till his mind is thoroughly charged and vitalized by it—till he not only possesses it, but is possessed by it; let him arrange his thoughts under very few heads, by a natural division, so that each head will suggest the next; let him content himself with, at most, one or two striking facts, and one or two illustrations under each head—making only short speeches at first; let him rehearse his speeches at home till he has a ready flow of ideas and words; and, finally, and not least important, let him address his hearers in a simple, conversational tone, avoiding all attempts at oratorical display; and he may hope not only to launch without blight or hindrance on the sea of improvisation, but to steer clear of trippingly until, with his auditory, he reaches the haven on which his longing eye has been fixed.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Rev. T. W. Brown, en route from the Louisville District Conference, made us a pleasant call last week.

Rev. J. M. Henry, our pastor at Carrollton, a few Sundays ago received one of his Sunday-school scholars into the church.

We acknowledge the receipt of $10 for Bishop Wilson's obituary in Japan—each from James T. Fant and Clara C. Fant, of Holly Springs, Miss.

Mr. David Young and wife, of East Baton Rouge parish, celebrated recently the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage. Mr. Young is eighty-six years old and his wife eighty.

Through Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh we have received five dollars from "A Lover of Missions" for the church in Japan. Again, we request our friends to send all such money to the treasurer of the Mission Board, T. B. Holt, Nashville, Tenn. Don't send it to us.

Relics don't always produce the effect intended by the relic exhibitors. For instance, Bishop Haygood says:

I never could think as much of George Washington after looking in a most unlooky hour, at his old breeches (they seemed so short for the "Father of his Country") in Independence Hall in Philadelphia.

Mrs. Mary Read Goodale, president of the Louisiana W. C. T. U., has been making her efforts with our legislators for the establishment of an industrial school for girls, somewhere in Louisiana. We hope she will succeed in this, as it is greatly needed. We are of opinion that no better place could be selected than Baton Rouge.

Several persons have sent us money for the church building in Japan. Of course, we want our friends to give all they can to this worthy object; but we think it will be better every way to send the money to the Missionary Treasurer, T. B. Holt, Nashville, Tenn. We have to send it to him, and it had better go to him direct from those who give.

Rev. H. R. Tucker writes, June 13: Rev. J. D. Newsom, Sparta circuit, North Mississippi Conference, has been very sick at his home, in Housatonic, Miss., for nearly three weeks. He is somewhat better now, and we are hopeful of his recovery. Let the brethren pray for this servant of God, that he may be spared.

Rev. T. L. Mellen, Meridian, Miss., June 17: "The call of the Rev. B. S. Rayner upon 'those who at the late session of our Meridian District Conference pledged amounts for Rev. E. T. Breland, employed in the West Wayne Mission,' is approved by me, and I join in the request that the amounts be forwarded as soon as possible to Bro. J. S. Turner, Vossburgh, Miss., who is hereby authorized and requested to receive and receipt for the same. So far as I am now advised, only the amount pledged for Vossburgh circuit and $5 subscribed by Dr. C. R. Rencher have been paid."

A Few Parting Words.

In the moments of leaving for my long journey to Japan and China I desire to say a few things—

1. Let me urge the collection for the church in Osaka, Japan. The appeal of Bishop Wilson and Dr. Morton has been before the church now for a month. It is an urgent case. We are planting ourselves in a city of 400,000 people, and must have a church. It will require $5,000 to purchase ground and build. But with this accomplished, we are established. Let every lover of Christ and lost men, who reads this, make a special gift to this effort. Please send your contributions to Dr. David Morton, Secretary of Church Extension, Louisville, Ky.

2. We need and must have some more men for Japan and China. The draught drawn on us by sickness and death have greatly weakened us, and the time has come when to maintain our present status in those two missions, we must have re-enforcements. We need a medical missionary in China, and also a man of teaching capacity, with some experience in the work of teaching. We need a man to fill the vacant post of Dr. J. W. Lambuth, in Japan. A man whose heart God has touched and who is willing to support him. We must have recruits in the Japan and China fields. The Board of Missions is planning to pay off the debt and make an advance all along the line. Let us all move together. Who feels called to the foreign field? Let all such regard this as a special call to come forth and volunteer.

Write to Dr. I. G. John, Nashville, Tenn., and place yourself in the hands of the Board, to be chosen and sent if found suitable.

Personal—I ask to be remembered in the prayers of my brethren as I go, in their stead, to encourage the little band of brave men and women who represent us there.

JOSEPH B. KEY.

P. S.—Correspondents will address me at Kobe, Japan, up to Sept. 15, and at Shanghai, China, November 1, J. S. K.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Bishop Key was to have left Nashville on the fifteenth for China and Japan. Altitude in the divine life is measured in a perpendicular line downward.

H. P. Bond, in St. Louis Advocate. The Woman's Board of Missions has closed a most interesting and profitable session in Lexington, Ky. Several young ladies offered themselves as missionaries and were accepted. The next meeting will be held at Kansas City, Mo.

Mrs. J. F. Tye, a most estimable Christian lady, died at her home in Pickens, Miss., Tuesday, June 14, at 10:30 p. m. Her death, though not unexpected, has cast a gloom over the entire community. To her bereaved husband we offer the consolation which cometh to those who are in communion with God.

The editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate asks the question:

How long has it been since you secured a new subscriber or a renewal for the Advocate? Count it up and see exactly, and see if you do not feel badly about it.

After glancing at our books, we think it would not be out of place for us to ask the same question. How long?

The Forty-sixth Annual Report of the Board of Missions is out. The total assessment on the church for 1893 is $352,750. Accompanying the report is a circular letter bringing to our notice the fact that if each pastor will raise every cent of his assessment for 1893, the Board will not only be enabled to meet the appropriations for this year, but also reduce the debt $36,555.88—leaving only $31,844.40 to be raised, which can be done during the week of prayer and self-denial—and the debt will be paid.

There are companies throughout the civilized world, in which you can insure against marine disasters, fire and flood, cyclone, which issue accident policies to traveling men, and do a general life assurance business. But had you ever thought of it: no company has yet been formed to insure the soul. God only can do that. Your house is insured, your property is insured, your life is insured; but is your soul insured? It has been suggested that when Daniel was cast into the den of lions, he had his life (soul) insured in heaven's insurance company, and the lions' mouths were shut.

It is said when florists would produce a flower most perfect and most beautiful, they exclude from the parent stem the genial light of heaven, and that which sustains its life. It droops, the leaves fall, and the uninitiated would say, it is dead. Then the florist removes the cup. Its cold, sapless branches are bathed in the sunlight. Fresh leaves appear. It buds, it blossoms, and the flower in all its richness, fragrance and beauty is the direct result of the sorrows through which it passed. "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." All the glorious harvests with which this little world has ever been blest were "sown in tears."

Meridian District.

Receipts for Rev. H. G. Hawkins' traveling expenses to Japan since last report:

Avera (Leakeville circuit).....$ 2 00
Pachuta (Vossburgh circuit)..... 6 00
Daleville..... 5 00
Shubuta..... 9 15

Wherever the matter is properly presented by the preachers, and the people have religion enough to be interested in the missionary cause, there is a ready response and free contribution. It is a privilege to aid a cause so worthy. Our young brother devotes himself and goes to Japan; we are glad to assist in sending him. We will share in his "harvest home," and have interest in the souls he saves to Christ. Let the contributions come until the $200 needed be raised. The church has never sent out a missionary more "apt to teach" than Bro. Hawkins; and we ought to rejoice greatly that he goes from the Meridian district.

Nervous Prostration.

A PREVALENT MALADY DURING HOT WEATHER.

Nervous prostration (neurasthenia), spinal anemia, nervousness, weakness and nervous debility are different names given to an affection of the nervous system which is becoming more and more common. Hard work, close competition, business uncertainties, little sleep, high living, the use of narcotics, all tend alike to injure the nervous system.

SYMPTOMS.—A foreboding of calamity, a sense of something awful about to happen, twitching of the eyelids, moving, brown specks before the eyes, and metallic ringing in the ears, sour stomach after eating, with belching of gas, a feeling of great weight in the stomach, morbid fear of leaving home, a constant desire to talk of their symptoms, chills and hot flashes, hands and feet usually cold and clammy, general tendency to dryness and coldness of the skin of the whole body, neuralgic headache, nervous chills, hysteria, sinking and faint spells, distressing palpitation of the heart, defective eyesight, total inability to read, write, or do any business, urine abundant, without odor, loss of flesh, sleeplessness, and sexual excitability. Some of these symptoms are present in every case.

TREATMENT.—There should be an entire change of habits, and the diet should consist largely of animal food. Walking, riding or rowing, and other outdoor employments, as much as the strength of the patient will allow, is indispensable. A sufficient dose of Man-a-lin should be taken at bedtime to produce one natural movement of the bowels each day. Pe-ru-na should be taken immediately before eating, beginning with a very small dose and gradually increasing until two table-spoonfuls are taken before each meal. Pe-ru-na may be taken between meals, or at night, to relieve bad spells, in such doses as may be found necessary. No other medicine should be taken.

For free book on diseases peculiar to hot weather send to The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Co., Columbus, O. Sent free to any address.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

What Governor Foster Discovered.

In my late canvass of the State, in every parish and community I met students and graduates of Centenary College. Their influence for good is felt everywhere in society, in business and official life. The alumni of Centenary College have filled the highest judicial stations in our State with credit and distinction. The most honored of the legal profession, the most eloquent divines, and the leaders in all the useful and dignified lines of life are of her sons. If I were called upon to say what school had left the greatest and best impress upon the society, business and government of Louisiana, I would unhesitatingly say—Centenary College.

Mr. RICKS—I have been entirely cured by the use of your Mineral Water of the most stubborn case of malaria I ever have known. I was on the eve of black jaundice: I tried several physicians to no effect; only grew worse. I abandoned medicine entirely, and in ten days after using your Mineral Water I was completely restored.

E. E. WILLIAMS.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 29, 1890.

Mr. M. RICKS—The keg of your Mineral Water sent me has almost cured my daughter and myself of a severe case of chronic indigestion and constipation. Send another keg of water.

MRS. H. J. MULLEN.

MANSFIELD, La., Jan., 1890.

This is to say my wife has been a great sufferer from dyspepsia. She has been entirely cured by Ricks' Mineral Water, my family physician recommending it. I take pleasure in recommending this water to all who are suffering with this dreadful disease.

S. T. WILLIAMS.

This is to say I have been a great sufferer of liver complaint and indigestion for more than thirty years. Ricks' Mineral Water has greatly improved me.

JULE THIGPEN.

SHREVEPORT, La., May 5, 1891.

Mr. M. RICKS—I take pleasure in writing to you that your Mineral Water has relieved me very much; if I continue so I believe I am on the road to get well. I have had one of the most severe cases of nervous indigestion for over two years; have been so prostrated from it that I was a perfect invalid. Had the best doctors in New Orleans, Hot Springs and Shreveport. I found no relief until I commenced the use of your Mineral Water. I cheerfully recommend this water to all who are suffering with the above disease. Respectfully,
MRS. A. A. ZODIAG.

MANSFIELD, La., May 25, 1891.

Mr. M. RICKS—Dear Sir: On the fifteenth instant, I had a severe attack of bilious dysentery with fever, resulting from a general bilious condition of the system when I began the use of the Mineral Water from your well. Since I began the use of it I have entirely recovered from my previous condition. My appetite has been entirely restored, my general condition greatly improved, and which I attribute to the use of your well water. I can cheerfully recommend it as a most excellent remedy for constipation and bilious complaints. I am using it in my family with the same beneficial results that I experienced myself. Very respectfully,
J. F. PIERSON.

MANSFIELD, La., Sept., 1891.—This is to say that I had a long spell of slow fever more than one year ago. After the fever left me I took dropsy. My legs and feet were swollen to an alarming extent; the skin peeled off. I have been cured by the use of Ricks' Mineral Water. My case was a fearful one.

She has been greatly benefited.

J. J. VASCOE.

MANSFIELD, La., Jan. 8, 1892.—

Mr. M. Ricks—I have been a great sufferer from dyspepsia and constipation for the past three years. Your Mineral Water has done me more good than all the medicine I have taken during this time. There is nothing on earth that will regulate the bowels like the water.

OBITUARIES.

DEACON.—Our old people are swiftly passing away. Few, very few of those who were in the forefront of our little host of fifty or sixty years ago are with us now. Few and far between, their white locks still grace the assemblies of our people. Our venerable Sister MARY JANE DEACON was one of the last of the old guard.

Mrs. Deacon was born in Franklin, Ohio, March 15, 1811. Her maiden name was Thompson. She came to New Orleans in 1824. The following year she joined the Methodist Church, then a feeble band surrounded by a population almost exclusively Romanist and worldly.

The Methodists had a place of meeting in the lot of a building on Tchoupitoulas street. There she worshiped, sang praises and joined in prayer with those, the last of whom have passed to the home of the good. Here our self-denying and zealous pioneer preachers came and preached Jesus and the resurrection.

Then she was a member of the Gravel Street Church, and later on of the Poydras Street, and lastly, for many years, of the Carondelet Street Church.

On Nov. 6, 1829, she was married to Mr. William Deacon, long a member of the Methodist Church in this city, but more than a quarter of a century ago he passed on to his heavenly home.

Sister Deacon was a woman endowed with a clear and vigorous mind. She had fixed convictions and decision of character. When health and strength allowed, she was a constant attendant on all the ordinances of a God's house. She was gifted in prayerful utterances; her voice was strong and clear, and she loved the songs of Zion. Often have we in class meeting and love-feast heard her tell of her faith, her consolations and immortal hopes.

For years she has been feeble and waiting the Master's call to come up higher. But her work, as a wife, mother and church member, has been concluded. She rests from her trials and toils, and is forever with the Lord. She has no loved ones gone before, and waits the coming of the loved one left behind.

She fell asleep in Jesus, in her eighty-first year. All of her family, save a son and daughter, who mourn their loss, passed on before her to the spirit-world. May we meet among the glorified!

J. B. WALKER.

WAY-FREDERICK. P. WAY (nee Petty) passed from the church militant to the church triumphant, Nov. 26, 1891. She was born of the flesh Oct. 2, 1803; born of the Spirit and united with the church, Oct. 8, 1831.

Sister Way led a consistent Christian life, and died triumphant, for she had "pure and undefiled religion"—the most joyful thing on earth. What is religion? Consciousness of the happy truth that the eternal God is my Father, heaven my everlasting home; Christ, the Redeemer, my elder brother. Justified by faith, she had peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. The body groaned with pain; there was sorrow and bereavement in the home; but she possessed a peace independent of all outward things—a peace that flowed from the great fountain that never fails, whose streams make glad the city of our God. Hence that grows like the oak, only stronger and more deeply rooted by the storms that beat upon it, until transplanted into that better rest, where there is no more storm nor trial. Death had no sting to her. It was but the summons to the soul to leave its tenement of clay and move to everlasting refreshment; to the body, to repose in the dust till the resurrection morn; to the spirit, instant and blessed entrance into glory! May the God of all grace sanctify this dispensation to the spiritual good of the bereaved parents and grief-stricken husband! May they have wisdom to teach the little boy to love his mother's Savior! Be faithful a few more years, and you shall be reunited in a "better clime, where every best shall be blessedness and every pulse a wave from that ocean of joy" which is around the throne of God and of the Lamb forever.

Freddie is not dead; only gone before through the gate into the "holy city beyond the starry regions built by the God of love."

WILLIAM PASTOR.

GRIFITH.—Death has visited our village and borne away our beloved friend and sister in Christ, Sister MAJOR GRIFITH. She died at her home in Hillsboro, Miss., at 3 o'clock A. M., May 14, and was buried in G. R. M. of the same day. The faces of the many friends and relatives at the burial showed their love for the departed one. She leaves a husband and two sweet little boys, one an infant only six days old, to mourn their sad loss.

Her death is an irreparable loss to her many friends and relatives here. She died happy in Jesus, bidding good-by to her husband and relatives. She begged them to meet her in heaven. May God bless and comfort the bereaved as he alone can in his prayer. Mrs. J. C. ELLIS, Hillsboro, Miss.

AINSWORTH.—Rev. THOMAS HOLIDAY AINSWORTH departed this life Feb. 16, 1892. He was born in Lawrence county in 1771; joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1837. He was licensed to preach Feb. 22, 1890.

Bro. Ainsworth was confined to his bed eighty days with fever, and during his sickness he contracted cold, which fell on his lungs, which resulted in death. I visited Bro. Ainsworth during his illness; held many sweet conversations with him in regard to his condition and future prospects. It was a feast to my soul to hear him picture out the journey of the Christian in life, and as to when he joined the band: the number of sermons he preached, which numbered fifty-six. He pleaded with the sinner to forsake his evil ways, trust in God, and be saved from his sins. While dying, he had no ill-goods, asking them to meet him in heaven. He was the son of W. L. and A. M. Ainsworth. Sister Ainsworth had crossed over the river a few years before her son, Thomas, was called to his reward above. Papa, brothers and sisters are left here with the rest of us to work until God comes and declares it finished.

We preached the funeral of Bro. Ainsworth to a large congregation. The old and young in the neighborhood were there to weep over his remains. They were all living in hopes (prior to his death) of hearing him preach, as his intention was to join the Conference next winter. Bro. T. L. Mellen, of Meridian, had written for him, expecting to give him work in his district. When the notice came Bro. Thomas Ainsworth was too feeble to respond. He said to his brother, F. A. Ainsworth (who is a steward of our church), to be faithful in his mission, and meet him in heaven. He asked him not to shed a tear, for he would (if faithful) be with him in heaven by and by. It grieved us to see such a promising young man die. The will of God be done. L. J. JONES, P. C.

SCHROEDER.—Our venerable and esteemed brother, HENRY SCHROEDER, was born Dec. 17, 1813, and left his body and ascended to heaven from the home of his son, Dr. Schroeder, in New Orleans, on Feb. 10, 1892. He united with the Missouri Street Methodist Church, Sept. 2, 1842, a half-century ago.

One who knew Bro. Schroeder said he had the patience and humility of Job, and David's love of God's house; ever glad and prompt when it was said, "Let us go into the house of the Lord," and his inflexible resolve was, "My feet stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem," for he heartily believed, "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people." He was a model private and official member of the church, constraining all who knew him to take knowledge that he had been with Jesus.

His household was ordered with wisdom and love, and wisely trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. He lived in habitual readiness for his final call. He knew by the witness of the Spirit that his Redeemer lived, and daily rend his title clear to a mansion above. Without regret and without fear for his "loosing," he gladly weighed anchor and sailed for the eternal shore. To those that loved him we would say, Weep not, but meet him among the saved and blest.

J. B. WALKER.

TURNAGE.—ALBERT YOUNG TURNAGE, son of A. J. and L. E. Turnage, was born Feb. 17, 1873, and died April 30, 1892, aged nineteen years two months and thirteen days.

"I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me." Young obeyed the injunction of this language, and sought the Lord early; found him precious to his soul; joined the M. E. Church, South. He loved God by being careful of the church and kind to the preachers, thoughtful of the neighbors, relieving the suffering and afflicted by day and by night. What a model boy, taking off of them (his parents) every burden he could; helping about the house; very fond of his brothers and sisters, often admonishing them to live better; constantly endeavoring to shape his life for more usefulness; feeling that God had still greater work for him to do. God loved him.

One year ago, while at the point of death, he prayed with his parents, the disease was relaxed, and God gave him longer to live. God loved him in giving him a disposition to serve him by giving good parents, brothers, sisters and friends. All loved him. God loved him by sending angels on April 30, 1892, and taking him to himself in glory. He died with a smile on his face, as if greeting loved ones. God forbid that any of those he loved so dearly should fail to meet him in that place prepared for the pure in heart. M. L. WHITE, P. C.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past thirty years that is enviable. Thousands of people have tried it for coughs, colds, croup, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. Drafts on country banks occasion a loss of from 15 to 25 cents per check. Drafts on country merchants we have no facility for collecting. Checks and drafts, also money orders, should be made payable to D. L. Mitchell, Publisher.

A CME BLACKING is cheaper at 20 cents a bottle than any other Dressing at 5 cents.

A LITTLE GOES A LONG WAY because shoes once blackened with it can be kept clean by washing them with water. People in moderate circumstances find it profitable to buy it at 20c. a bottle, because what they spend for Blacking they save in shoe leather.

It is the cheapest blacking considering its quality, and yet we want to sell it cheaper if it can be done. We will pay

$10,000 Reward for a recipe that will enable us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c. a bottle. This offer is open until Jan. 1st, 1893. WOLFF & RANDOLPH, Philadelphia.

Old furniture painted with PIK-RON (this is the name of the paint), looks like stained and varnished new furniture. One coat will do it. A child can apply it. You can change a pine to a walnut, or a cherry to mahogany; there is no limit to your fancies. All retailers sell it.

"There were three crows sat on a tree, As black as any crows could be." "Alas!" said one, "would I were white Instead of being black as night." "Such foolish wishing," said his friends, "In disappointment often ends; But now, forsooth, to make you white, Will be an easy matter, quite. We'll wash you well with some GOLD DUST, And, when you're white, we fondly trust That while you wonder at the feat, Your happiness will be complete."

Behold him now as white as snow! Wonder of wonder! with the crow. "If GOLD DUST POWDER makes black white, 'Twill surely all the world delight; And mistress, mother, nurse and maid Will find themselves henceforth well paid In using this great help for all. The household's needs—both great and small; For dishes, kettles, pots and pans, For paint, and floors, and milkmen's cans— It surely will great comfort bring, And clean each dirty place or thing; For what will make a black crow white, Will make what'er is dingy bright!"

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. A full of choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the South and alone. —Rev. Jno. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tune. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale. —Messiah's Herald. After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention to anyone who examines the book in pages 131, 135, 137, 138, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago. —Westeyan Methodist.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. E. H. McNabb, Lebrton circuit, June 10: "Have traveled through the mud since Conference, and now come to horse time, with 200 mile circuit, with hayots and brooks to encounter; but have not missed an appointment, having seven to meet at this time. We are our own colporteur, but glad we are in the work for the Master, sometimes going into huts, finding the sick, and praying with them. We have a temperance work, as we have only seen one man under the influence of strong drink since Conference."

Rev. M. J. Miller, China Grove, Miss., June 20: "The work is moving on very well. Prospects good for revivals, for which we are earnestly praying and working. I think we will soon report a thousand-dollar church at Tylertown, where there is no church-house of any kind now. We preach in the academy. By the way, we have a good school at Tylertown, Pike county, Miss. Parents would do well to correspond with Prof. Hardee or Mr. G. H. Collins. This school does honest, thorough work."

Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, P. E., Arcadia, La., June 17: "We are moving on quietly and peacefully in our work on the Arcadia district. Crop prospect very poor, finances far behind, preachers doing faithful work, and all hopeful of better times. Prospects good for a revival on several circuits. Our preachers' meeting at Ruston was a delightful and profitable occasion. Such singing, praying and preaching it has not been my privilege to hear often in life. Brotherly love prevailed, and we felt the mighty presence of the Divine Spirit in every service."

Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E.: "The Woodville District Conference adjourned June 11 after a pleasant and profitable session. From the first to the last service the Holy Spirit was present in power. Sinners were convicted, penitents were converted, and saints were comforted. It was good to be there. I suppose you will have a more extended account. The following were elected delegates to the Annual Conference: D. E. Kelly, Jr.; H. C. Newsum, W. O. Ligon and A. Rousseau. Alternates: E. E. Richardson, R. J. Thomas, R. Babington and W. T. Holland."

Rev. P. Howard, Adams circuit, Mississippi Conference, June 16: "We had a delightful and, I trust, profitable Children's Day at Adams last Sunday. The people turned out en masse with sumptuous lunch baskets, and spent the day. The morning—till preaching hour—was spent in recitations by the children, interspersed with delightful music by the choir, when the pastor enjoyed a patient hearing from young and old from I. Tim. iv, 8, at the close of which quite a number of the children came forward and renewed their vows. In the afternoon the same exercises were continued for a time, and closed with the application of seven children, under ten years of age, for membership. I am glad to add that there is a general improvement in the Sunday-school and prayer meeting as well as the public worship."

Rev. M. L. Burton, McComb City, June 17: "In Bro. Ellis' effort to 'let on the light,' he seems to be just a little in the dark, and 'when the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!'—not that I would apply this passage of Scripture to Bro. Ellis, but when he makes an accusation against me, I want it based on facts. Now, he says I was in charge of Wesley Chapel, Natchez, and received $300 from the Mission Board. The fact is, that I only got $100. I have wondered why the Board wanted to show partiality between the larger towns and cities, and give one mission more than the other; but I have always settled it by remembering that I am very small, and hence can't eat much, and, therefore, they concluded that it would not take much to support me. I make this statement in all kindness to Bro. Ellis."

Rev. W. T. Currie, Live Oak, La., June 16: "Our second Quarterly Conference convened Saturday and Sunday last. Our worthy presiding elder was with us. He preached to the comfort of all that heard him. He certainly knows how to get at the bear of the people. We raised $300 endowment for Centenary College; twenty-six dollars for other objects. I am happy to report that the work has been greatly blessed this quarter. I have received only six into the church. I have organized two Epworth Leagues, which are doing great good. There are six prayer meetings—four on Sunday. My congregations are increasing. We expect to re-cover one of the houses of worship by the first of next month. The shingles have been ordered. There is some talk of building a new church at one of my appointments. The outlook now for grand revivals at all of my appointments. Brethren, pray for us."

Rev. H. P. Lewis, Caseyville, Miss., June 16: "Our second quarterly meeting, held at Bethesda, June 11 and 12, was an occasion of unusual interest. Every church was represented by, at least, two stewards and one superintendent of Sunday-school. Bro. Woodward, our faithful presiding elder, though just out of a spell of sickness, came to us in fine trim, and gave us two good sermons. Our stewards are in good spirits; finances pretty well up; Sunday-schools doing well. The stewards agreed to pay for a buggy and harness for the preacher, Uncle Dave McKee paying one-half the amount. Our love-feast, Sunday morning, was the best I have been in six years. Our communion service was good, a large number participating. Three young people received by baptism into the church; three others applied for membership. The good Lord is blessing us, and we are greatly encouraged. The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places."

Rev. J. F. Robinson, Steen's Creek, Miss., June 22: "We are in deep distress. Our oldest son, Oscar, was stricken down with typhoid fever twenty-two days ago. Our community is threatened with an epidemic of typhoid fever. We met last Thursday in the Methodist Church here to pray the God of all power and grace to stay the hand of the destroyer. The merchants, mechanics, farmers, physicians—all were there. Bro. Johnson, pastor of the Baptist Church, made appropriate remarks. We returned to our homes feeling better. No new cases have developed since. May the good Lord save us from the scourge! My circuit (Marvin) is moving on well. All the Conference claims are paid in full. Pastor's salary not fully up, but we are assured it will come up in full in the end. We have received a few important additions to the church this year. Pray for us, my dear brother. We are still looking after the interest of the dear old ADVOCATE. May it and its officers live long to bless the church!"

Rev. B. P. Fullilove, P. C., Atlanta circuit, North Mississippi Conference, June 16: "I will try and write a few lines more. The work is steadily moving on; spiritual interest still increasing; finances coming up all right. The people are still looking after the temporal interest (or needs) of the preacher. We can not say, like some of the brethren, that we have been stormed; but there has been a steady breeze blowing all the while. This breeze began the second week in January, and has continued ever since. This breeze blew in meat, lard, sausage and money in a few days after we arrived. It has always fallen to my lot to be thrown among people who had a perfect horror for storms. So you can account for my not being stormed. As I stated in the outset, the spiritual interest is on the increase. We have received two more members in the church since our last writing. We are looking for and expecting grand results this year, for which we are working and praying. The Lord's name is to be praised. Pray for us."

Rev. H. P. Crowe, Shaw, Miss., June 8: "We think the spiritual condition of Shaw and New Salem charge good. This people are developing rapidly on the line of work. We have good Sunday-schools at each appointment; two prayer meetings. We have gathered into the church since Conference thirty-five members. This is a good people, and are thoughtful of their pastor. They see that his wants are supplied. We have a nice parsonage just completed. The painting and tending have been done lately. We have good health here so far. Just closed ten days' meeting, which resulted in great good in this town. Most of the members converted, I think. Members talked that never did before; asked prayers for their families and fellow-townsmen. Most every unconverted man and woman knelt for prayer, and resolved for a better life. One saloonist quit the business; says he will never sell another drop of whiskey. We believe this town and community will be taken for God if the church will continue to press the enemy. We were ably assisted by Bros. W. M. Young and J. M. Wyatt. These brethren preached with power, rightly dividing the Word of Truth. The Word was accompanied by the Holy Spirit, and much good accomplished through these noble men of God."

Rev. A. N. Brown, Pine Grove, La., June 16: "On Sunday morning, June 12, we left the Woodville District Conference, held at Greensburg, St. Helena parish, arriving at Pine Grove Church, same parish, at three P. M., in company with Rev. W. T. Currie, P. C.; Rev. J. S. Lee, L. P., and Bro. G. W. Newsum, of the Live Oak charge; Rev. H. B. Trevillion, P. C., of East Baton Rouge charge; Rev. H. W. Wallace, P. C., and Bro. A. Rousseau, of Port Vincent charge. Finding a congregation, Bro. Currie preached at 8:30 P. M., and Bro. Trevillion at 8 P. M. The Holy Ghost was with us from the beginning. We continued our meeting until Monday night (Bro. Wallace preaching Monday at 11 A. M. and 8 P. M.). Had two accessions, some conversions; had three young ladies to rise in the congregation and claim the blessing. We closed with about fifty penitents at the altar. I think it the best meeting I ever attended. It has awakened the praying members of our church, and we are praying and looking forward for a general awakening of our people at our protracted meeting, which commences the second Sunday in August. The most affecting scene I ever witnessed was the closing exercises, Bros. Wallace, Trevillion, Lee and Rousseau (Bros. Currie and Newsum having left after services Sunday night) taking their places in front of the stand, and, while the congregation sang, 'God be with you till we meet again,' the congregation passed round, and we had a regular old Methodist handshaking. Mr. Editor, it was good to be there. Pray for us, that the good work begun may go on, and that we may have, at least, fifty conversions at our protracted meeting."

Rev. Thomas B. Clifford, P. C., Arcola and Hollandale, Greenville district, North Mississippi Conference, June 18: "Our second Quarterly Conference was held May 21 and 22, and we were glad to have Bro. Standefer, our presiding elder, with us. I expect I express the sentiments of all young preachers when I say that we always look forward with pleasure and long for the visits of those 'in office,' that we may receive from them some words of encouragement and advice to cheer and strengthen us in the work we are trying to do for the Master. Children's Day was observed the third Sunday in May, and services conducted as per programs issued by our Publishing House. Our large church at Hollandale was filled with an appreciative audience. Nearly all our people from the neighboring town of Arcola were present, and we also noticed present at the services several Jews who reside in that town, and who had come purposely to attend. The children were present en masse, and performed their part well. Flowers, evergreens and mottoes had been tastefully arranged, and they added much to the general appearance. The writer has recently rented a house, with garden, stable, etc., situated almost opposite the church; and through the kindness of the people we have provisions enough to last us some time. The house was empty when we entered; but we have had sufficient furniture loaned to us and given to us to make it very comfortable. Men, women and children—Jews as well as Gentiles—continue to show in a substantial way that they are friendly disposed toward us. The people are kind, and there are a few who we believe faithful to the vows they once made; but, generally speaking, they are not religious. The attendance upon the preaching services is very good. Prayer meetings are also well attended in fine weather. We are hopeful, and are praying for and expecting a revival that shall reach every home within the charge; and if the mighty river that lies about eight miles west of us will continue to flow south without overflowing this section, we predict great things for this Delta country before this year closes."

Dramatic Experiences.

There are dramatic features, of course, in every repentance unto life. Taken in connection with its causes and consequences, the issues at stake, the agonies of personal feeling involved, and the number and dignity of the spectators, it is far greater than any previous event in the history of a man. Isaiah represents the Lord as waiting to be gracious, and we have it on the Savior's own authority that there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

It is probable also that interest and dignity attach to godly sorrow for a single sin, though a small one as men may regard it, as truly as to those which seem to us of greater moment. No simpler tragedy was ever enacted than that of Eden, and yet it may be that a full analysis of Adam's transgression would show it to be a compound of all iniquity. It is not easy for us to realize that it is the sin in a sin that makes it sinful, and that sin is nothing more nor less than "a transgression of the law." Thus it happens sometimes that good men and women are uncomfortable in their religious experience because they were never romantic or daring sinners like their neighbors. Their repentance created no sensation. God's Spirit just showed them their hearts, and the blood of Christ through faith made the foul beast clean.

Preachers, like others, are in danger frequently of understating the meanness of their former sinful lives, and overstating the dramatic features of their recovery from sin. A preacher owes it to himself, as well as to his cause and his audience, to be effective. No other public speaker has so grand a theme, or represents so large an interest, as he; and yet no other public utterance is so trying to both speaker and hearers as the dull preaching of a lifeless gospel. A personal incident well told for the first time in the hearing of an audience seldom fails to awaken interest, and especially if the narrator was himself the hero of it. Most of us have had experiences that were almost thrilling, and a little coloring here, or a word added there, may give life to what would otherwise be but a tame narration. Indeed, nothing we have to say as Christians, either in public or in private, needs to be more guarded than the relation of our religious experience.

The Apostle to the Gentiles tells the story of his conversion more than once; but it is evident that Paul the apostle has very little use except as a warning for Saul of Tarsus. Take him altogether, Paul is a good model of a sinner saved by grace. There is no intimation of possible heroism or magnanimity in the account he gives of himself before conversion. The bitterest thought of all his life seems to have been, "I persecuted the church;" and if he ever uttered the words in spoken discourse, it is probable that the emphasis was equally divided between the verb and its object. The veriest coward and vagabond might have held the clothes of them that stoned the martyr Stephen. The man armed with authority, hailing defenseless men and women, and casting them into prison, or delivering them to death, is as little a hero as if he had spent his time killing flies or harrying a flock of sheep. And in the catastrophe of his sinful career there is nothing remarkable on his part but the promptness with which he accepts defeat, and becomes obedient unto the heavenly voice. A pitiable spectacle he is, indeed, in the eyes of men—this man of blood falling from his horse on a level road at midday, and then stumbling along, blind and dusty, and led by the hand into Damascus. Knowing the weakness of men, Paul was careful to make sin appear sin—a dreadful, mean, ignominious thing; a "body of death," "working death" by corruption.

It is doubtful if the best use is made of the "wickedest man" reclaimed in some of our revival meetings. He also is human, and may be exhibited to a wondering and admiring audience once too often; so often, indeed, that the return to the every-day life of a Christian will be a disappointment to him, and possibly to the public also. The spirit of this modern miracle play was promptly rebuked by our Savior when he forbade the subjects of his healing power to run after him for a nine days' wonder to the people. He had something better for the multitudes to do than gazing at Lazarus, or counting devils with the demons of Gadara.

Straining after effect in the setting of a narrated conversion may lead to results that are otherwise than edifying. Several years ago one of our church papers had an account of a camp meeting which furnishes a case in point. The meeting had not been unusually successful. The regular conversions had not been startling either for incident or number; but towards the close an exhortation on the had habits of good men wrought a wonderful turning from tobacco. Preachers and laymen, official and unofficial, were pricked in conscience, and made public avowal of a purpose to quit the use of the weed. Special notice was taken, in the narrative, of a manly young preacher, who, stepping forward upon the platform, took from his pockets paper, cigars, tobacco bags and packages of cigarette paper (number not now remembered, but distinctly plural, and to keeping with the splendid physique of the young man), and, throwing them in the dust of the altar, pledged himself to total abstinence for the future. The occasion and this crowning incident of it were not without elements of the moral sensational; but it may be doubted if the effect would not have been as wholesome if the young brother had come forward with one cigar, or one package of smoking tobacco partly used, or, indeed, with none at all, and made his confession and promise to do better.

Another instance has recently appeared in print, which, while its purpose is manifestly spiritual, is somewhat uncertain in the impression it may make on those who need its lesson most. It is certainly an extraordinary experience—a sudden and complete recovery from the dominion of nicotine. But we may seriously question the profitability of such narratives when we note how thrillingly the writer describes his absolute genius for excess in the use of tobacco. The spiritual reader—if he does not smoke or chew—will know, of course, where to put the emphasis; but the weak brother or the unbeliever may easily hesitate which most to admire—the good fortune of the brother who was the recipient of so many and such very fine cigars, or the intrepidity with which he courted death by tobacco, or the grace of God which rescued the victim from the dominion of a destructive appetite.

Let us be careful how we speak of sin. The miracle of miracles in a Christian's experience is the Christian life, and that is possible only by the faith of the Son of God. It is not a great thing to have been a great sinner. The thrilling feature in the incident at Gadara is not the demoniac howling among the tombs, and cutting himself with his legion of devils, but the demoniac reclaimed, clothed, and in his right mind, sitting at the Master's feet.

ASTERISK.

Yet More Light Needed.

MR. EDITOR: When I read that array of names and figures given your readers in the ADVOCATE, of June 16, under the caption, "The Light is Dawning," I was grieved to think that much harm might result; they were so "imposing" in their appearance. Also I perceive that other brethren (not of the Mission Board, however) are troubled in spirit because the facts have been published at all. Not sharing this terror, I would suggest to these brethren that it has been the common custom of all our Boards to print for popular information all the disbursements made by each. This was not done by the Mission Board in the printed Minutes of 1891 simply through an oversight. No officer or member intended to withhold the information. Indeed, I should hate to be connected with any Board which is unwilling to let all the people know what is done with all the money collected from them. No good comes of such secrecy. Let us "walk in the light," and we shall not stumble. The white light of perfect truth is what we need to guide us in this way.

Before offering any supplemental light, I wish to call attention of our venerable elite to one or two mistakes he makes—of course, inadvertently; e. g., he says, "Wesley Chapel, Natchez, received $300." The true figure—plainly printed in my late statement, and verified by the minute book now before me—read, $100. Also, he refers to one young brother as remaining single till "near the end of the year," when, in truth, he was married early in June. His appropriation was made in expectation of a much earlier marriage. No man could have the heart to "dock" another for delay in which he was not to blame. Again, he insinuates that there was concealment of a certain appropriation made in 1886, and paid in 1887, to the presiding elder of Brandon district. There was no intentional secrecy connected with that matter. By reference to the printed Minutes of 1887 he will find the names and figures fully given. We print only when we have paid; but if the secretary's book is always open to inspection. Since the time alluded to there has been no appropriation for a presiding elder because it has not been needed. All who know that case believe it was proper and right. The district has taken many strides forward from the date of that much-complained-of appropriation.

In all such columns of figures there is much to be read between the lines. Nowhere is this more essential than in the delicate and intricate work of the Methodist itinerancy. We make a few suggestions interlinearly: City missionary work is both difficult and expensive. Put any brother, old or young, down on Levee street, among the saloons of "South Vicksburg," with a small appropriation, and that same brother would be forced to starve or quit in less than six months. Such work requires much grace, grit, gumption and greenbacks. God alone can supply the last three. Let us not grudge the last necessity.

A close study of the printed Minutes will show that the outlay of money at the points complained of has come back to us in gladdening echoes—especially as compared with other places we might mention if disposed to retort. The per cent. of increase in membership in those charges liberally helped is so far beyond the corresponding report from the other charges that it suggests the Master's word, "By their fruits ye shall know them." Measured by financial results, the case is yet stronger in favor of the Board's action. The membership in these city missions is not more wealthy than in the circuits to which small appropriations were made; yet their per capita contribution for all purposes is about 300 per cent. greater than these others. In the "parable of pounds" some are heard to complain of seeming injustice when the one pound was taken away and given to him that had ten pounds. But our perfectly wise Exemplar then announced the ruling principle of his kingdom: "Unto him that hath" (improvement) "shall more be given," etc.

Once more: These appropriations are made nearly equally to the different districts, varying somewhat according to apparent needs. Now, if the presiding elder of the Jackson district thinks it will advance Christ's kingdom best to make on his district one or two liberal appropriations for a few years, build up new, self-sustaining works, and then begin the same way at other points, while the presiding elder of Brandon district, equally conscientious, thinks it better to spread his amounts (nearly twice as much as Jackson's this year) over seven different circuits (most of them old and well established), who is to judge between the two policies? Both may be alike wise, for the territory is differently envolved. To decide these points demands much prayerful study and survey of the ground. It is presumable that our wide-awake presiding elders have given just such godly and intelligent attention to the subject.

Finally, let me urge all the brethren to occupy the time given to fault-finding in earnest effort to do the work, both spiritual and financial, industriously and well. Then your cheerful song will often be, "Hear what the Lord hath done for me"—through Conference appointments and otherwise.

Kearney coveting more true light to guide our off-erring and never-failing judgments; I am more than ever in favor of our missions at home and abroad, in the city and in the country.

WAITING.

In Memory of My Departed Darlings.

I have five dear angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the Crystal Sea.
Not impatiently wait my darlings there,
For I am sure they are all waiting there.

I have five dear angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the Crystal Sea.
Forever free from sorrow and pain,
Spending all their time in waiting there.

I have five dear angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the Crystal Sea.
When my weary heart is throbbing with pain,
And I faint with longing for the land above.

I have five dear angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the Crystal Sea.
When I look away from this earthly scene,
To the beautiful fields of the better land.

I have five dear angels waiting for me
On the beautiful banks of the Crystal Sea.
And I think of the angels waiting there,
Who so sweetly called them above.

Duties of the Church toward the Pastor.

1. To receive him cordially. This has much to do with his success. It contributes much to his usefulness and gives him a good start. You may not admire "them which labor among you" personally, or like their preaching. Their way may not be your way, but be true enough to admit that it may be as good as yours, and for them, perhaps, better. Though these things are true, remember they are your pastors, and that they will do you and others good if you will receive them kindly and esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake. Do not maintain a cold, formal attitude toward them and make the impression that their presence is not desired at your house, and then find fault with them because they do not go. There is not much cordiality displayed when you say to them, "Some time when you are in the community, and it is convenient, I will be glad for you to call at my house." And then make a hasty retreat for fear it might be convenient then; or wait till you hear a promise given to another, and then rush up and give a pressing (?) invitation to go with you, when you know it can not be complied with, and would not have it so if it could be done. There is a difference, and an observing man notes it. Let your motto be: "He is my preacher for this year."

2. To give him moral support. A lack of this on the part of the church is one of the serious difficulties with which he has to contend. The writer received a letter from a preacher some time since while he was having a conflict with sin in high places, in which he said: "Many of my people take me around the corner, and say to me, 'Go on with your good work; we are for you'; but when they meet the enemy they are silent." When a pastor has a church, or any considerable part of it, that will not support him in secret in his aggressive work, but cowers when the enemy faces them, he is destined to have trouble. Many who are firm, and even bold, while all goes well, will forsake the ranks and go over to the enemy when the contest is close. Many pastors have been deserted at the very time they needed help. If they, through fidelity to duty, create a commotion among a few of the leading people of their charges, however cautiously they have done it, the faint-hearted will begin to find fault with their manner and methods as a pretext to relieve themselves from standing true to principle and duty, lest they incur the displeasure of the influential. They give an exhibition of their fidelity to the church by sacrificing principle for peace, and when they advise the pastor not to proceed lest a few leave the church. The trouble with a considerable percentage of this class of persons is that they are so loose in their religious notions and lives that they either have no moral force with which to support the preacher, or they decline to do it on the ground of consistency. Parents who deliberately violate their church vows in teaching or permitting others to teach their children to play cards, dance, attend theatres, etc., will not uncompromisingly support the pastor on these questions for fear their children will be excluded from "best society," and they be looked upon in the eyes of those, the foundation of whose ruin they have already laid. If the pastors could have the moral support of the parents of the church, they would soon take the world for Christ. Shall they have it? They have a right to expect it. Let the preachers understand that while they are doing their duty the best way they know how, they will receive this, not only from the parents, but from the whole church, and they will be far more efficient in their own work. Has your pastor your moral support?

3. To make ample provisions for his material support. Allow him a liberal salary, sufficiently so to meet all reasonable demands of himself and family. Provide for him a comfortable home (parsonage), well located. Do not put him in some old, dilapidated house in some back street or out-of-the-way place in the country that you would not put your own family in. Self-interest, if no higher motive, ought to prompt to all this, for the reason that it supplies the conditions for the best work. The relation of the pastor and people is a sacred one, ordained of God to carry the "sunshine of heaven" to every heart of earth. It has in it large possibilities, sacrifices, disappointments and sorrows. Its successes and failures are the common heritage of both parties. Ties are formed by it that will stand.

"Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crash of worlds."

Osaka, Japan.

MR. EDITOR: If you published our appeal for the church at Osaka, Japan, I failed to see it, and hence enclose another copy which I trust you will not fail to print if other was omitted. (It appeared in our issue of June 2—EDITOR.)

One object of this appeal is to make this church a memorial of Dr. J. W. Lambuth, a member at the time of his death of one of your patronizing Conferences. We are expecting large returns from the Conferences in Mississippi and also from Louisiana Conference on account of its well-known devotion to the cause of missions and for the further reason that Bishop Keener has ever been an earnest advocate for the prompt entrance of our Board with its work into foreign fields. To this date we have received about $250 in money and about $150 in pledges, with the assurance that more will follow. This is an encouraging start, but the work should move more rapidly. Bishop Keener starts to-day, and will need $2,500, with which to pay for land, soon after his arrival.

Let everyone who can forward to you or to me at once a birthday offering for this good work. Please be kind enough to call attention to this, editorially, and to say what else the Spirit may suggest.

Some Changes!

I spoke of Bishop Haygood's article in my quarterly report, but I have been thinking more and more about it, and have been moved to submit a few thoughts about soul-saving, the most blessed work a man ever engaged in. Methods have changed, even during my time, and we are and have been impressed that the changes are not for the better. We seldom see sinners at the altar, and still more seldom hear them praying for deliverance from sin and death. We believe that God is as willing to save a sinner in one place as another, as for that; but somehow we are inclined to believe that when a sinner is fully awakened by the Spirit of God—when the light is poured into the dark chambers of the heart, and he is made to see the darkness thereof—that he will involuntarily cry out as did the publican. . . . The jailer cried, "Men and brethren, what must I do to be saved?" Paul cried, "What wilt thou have me to do?" "Behold he prayeth." And from the day of the Savior down to the present time men when awakened have thus cried. What has brought about this wonderful change in these latter days? Have the increased facilities for education and culture opened up a new way by which to enter the fold of Christ? Not this, we are sure; for we have seen the educated and cultured bow at the altar of prayer and ask for mercy.

I was delighted with what I saw and heard a few months ago at Central Methodist Church, Memphis, Tenn., of which Dr. Monk is pastor. After a plain, simple gospel sermon by Bishop Key, and an old-fashioned hand-shaking, the singing of some of the old-time hymns, penitents were invited to come forward. As they knelt at the altar (intelligent and cultured young men and women) I thought it was good to be there.

I helped a brother last year, and as we were very much crowded, we invited those who wished to be religious to come forward and give their hand. Twenty or more came from time to time, and then we invited them to come and remain at the altar, and two or three came. So when the handshaking stopped as being the only condition, most of them did not want to be religious. A brother who is not afraid to shout when he gets happy, wrote me last year: "We have had a glorious revival. Christians shouted and rejoiced together, and there were those present who never heard anyone shout before." Something new. At one of my meetings last year penitents came to the altar, and when converted they rejoiced aloud and the people seemed to be alarmed. Strange indeed!

Now, I know as well as anyone that many Christians never did shout, and many were not converted at the altar; but still I can not account for such a wonderful change as we see all over the country, unless it is giving way to a desire to get more members, regardless of the work of regeneration. Why, people call rejoicing Christians excited Christians! A new name for the effect (as seen) of divine grace in the human heart. It used to be attributed to the influence of the Holy Ghost, but now to fanaticism. I have mentioned these facts to show the wonderful change that has taken place in our own time. Therefore, as Methodists, let us cling to the old-time methods in this glorious work.

Get back into the old paths and walk therein and we shall find rest. We may not have so many accessions, but they will be more efficient workers for Christ. We are afraid that we have many in our church who never knew what repentance and regeneration is, and because of this we have a great deal of trouble. G. H. JACOBS.

Commencement at Vanderbilt.

This year closes, according to the report of the chancellor, a term of marked success in all the departments of this institution. There have been in attendance at the university in all upwards of seven hundred and fifty students. The number of graduates this session was very much in excess of that of last year. A marked advance is noted in the quality and amount of post-graduate work done in the several departments. This augurs well. The South needs higher education along all lines. The time is beginning to be when no education conducted on right principles will be considered "too high" for the proper mental and moral development of the people. The liberal department graduated thirteen bachelors of divinity. These are not "theologues" in the sneering application of the term, but men—honest, whole-souled men—who will go out in all directions to help on the work of the gospel. If there is one thing that ought to engage the interest of Southern Methodism, it is the work that is being done in Wesley Hall. There many of her sons gather from year to year to fit themselves for the ministry. As they work there they ought to have the prayer and sympathy of all their constituencies at home. Let all these rays of spiritual force focus there, and an enthusiasm will be engendered and an energy go forth that shall quicken the whole connection to greater work and more lively zeal. In the matter of the higher training of her preachers, the Southern Methodist Church is having her day of opportunity. How is she embracing it?

I am glad to say, Mr. Editor, that I hear excellent reports concerning the boys from Centenary that have been here. One of the faculty said to me not long ago, "Those Centenary boys study well," and this means a good deal, coming from the source it did. I was almost constrained to wish myself a Centenarian.

Of these boys, let me give you a few items of interest. . . . Revs. M. M. Black, of Mississippi, and W. J. Roberts, of Louisiana, each received with honor his master's degree this year. Bro. Roberts has also gotten a call to the chair of English in his alma mater.

Rev. H. W. Van Hook, of Jackson, Miss., graduated from the biblical department, and will join his Conference in the Fall.

Rev. R. H. Wynn, another one of our boys, was the successful contestant for the A. L. P. Green medal for hymn and Scripture reading.

I could say much more of these four, but my knowledge of their innate modesty forbids.

Tell Bro. Harry to "hoo on." With such a record Centenary deserves, and I believe will get, a boom that shall give her a long lease of life, and make her an instrument of far greater good and usefulness.

Centenary College.

As a member of the committee appointed by the Mississippi Conference to visit Centenary College, I would respectfully report that the college is out of debt. Some needed repairs are contemplated. The finances of the college were never better than at the present. The endowment has reached $60,000. Centenary College is in favor with the people. There were 100 students in attendance the last session. They were, in general, a good set of boys; most of them religious.

The commencement exercises were of a high order, commencing with a sermon, Sunday, May 29, at eleven A. M., by Bishop Galloway. He won all hearts. Sunday evening, at half-past seven P. M., at the Methodist Church, Bishop Galloway and Dr. O. F. Evans addressed the Y. M. C. A. of the college. A large audience was present. All the other exercises were creditable to the young men and to the college. There were seven graduates.

If that part of the Mississippi Conference contiguous to the college and the Louisiana Conference were determined to make the college succeed, double the patronage, increase the endowment to $200,000, she would be a great power for good. The college is doing a good work, but she would do a better work with these increased facilities. Let us have a strong pull, a long pull, and a pull altogether," and launch the old college out upon the high sea of prosperity.

Whitworth College.

BRILLIANT CLOSE OF ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL COLLEGIATE YEAR.

The commencement exercises of Whitworth College, which terminated the successful term of '91-'92, were entertaining to pleasure seekers, and satisfactory, as well, to the true friends of this noble and progressive institution of learning. It may be a matter of surprise to many that much of the commencement program was but a repetition of delightful "musicals and recitals" to which President Fitzhugh has treated Brookhavenites during the past ten months, from which it will be readily seen that but very little time of the students is taken up in the usual hard practice and rehearsals attendant upon most college commencements. The writer believes that on very short notice the music, elocution and other departments of this college could give a "commencement" equal to the excellence and high order of the one just past at any time during the scholastic session.

In the elegantly decorated chapel a vast congregation was conducted on Sabbath morning, where they became charmed listeners to sweet, sacred music by Mr. McKernan's choir, and to the able sermon by the scholarly Dr. J. J. Wheat. In the evening the Epworth League celebrated its anniversary, with a sermon by Rev. E. H. Moulter, and a pleasing program for the public's delectation. On Monday morning the senior debate on "Resolved, That the expectation of reward is a greater incentive to exertion than the fear of punishment," created intense interest, and was ably argued by the twelve young ladies who awaited their "sheep skins," but who plainly demonstrated they were minus the "sheep's head" that Dr. Smith said often accompanied a diploma.

If the leader had not established a very modest reputation for pulling itself, we would say here that the leader of the debate on the Texas state, Miss Minnie Bradford, of Texas, very ably and accurately to its editor as one who was actuated by the hope of reward in "a grand movement," and had, therefore, established "a character grander than granite and more lasting than the hills."

The concert on Monday evening was decidedly the most entertaining and truly enjoyable of any the writer has attended for years. The singing in chorus was superb, and strangers expressed surprise at the rare training evinced by both the vocal and instrumental pupils. The teacher of elocution, Miss Pauline Townsend, of Meridian, received highest commendation during all of the exercises. The recitations and the exhibitions by the "Pose class" were all received with hearty approbation.

On Tuesday, Dr. Coke Smith, of Vanderbilt University, delivered a profoundly suggestive address that held spellbound a large and appreciative audience. Never has Whitworth scored a greater success in the selection of a speaker. Miss Mai Shelton, of Jackson, gracefully and eloquently delivered the valedictory address of her class, and read a thoughtful essay upon the subject, "Plus or Minus." Ten gold medals were delivered to six Mississippi girls, and four Louisianians, by Hon. J. S. Sexton.

The finale was reached when President Fitzhugh spoke his brief, but beautiful parting words to the class, delivering their diplomas.

And thus another eminently successful term of Whitworth has passed away. The future holds out its hands for still greater things to follow in the wake of the aggressive steps of the worthy president, with his tireless energy and ambitious aims to keep Whitworth College on the topmost round of success and renown.—Leader.

Resolutions on the Sabbath.

Whereas, There is in this city a wholesale and shameful desecration of the holy Sabbath day, carried on not only by the people of the world, but encouraged and supported by the press of the city, and even by a large number of the church members, and tolerated by those who are the sworn promoters of law and order; the public conscience is dragged down by the long-continued and glaring violations of all moral standards until it has made the name of our city a synonym for all the ungodly practices that suggest themselves to the base tendencies of man, bringing us, as a whole, into reproach in the estimation of the people of other sections; therefore, be it

Resolved, By the members of South Vicksburg M. E. Church, South, in Conference assembled, that we do, in most emphatic and express terms, condemn all Sabbath breaking, either work or amusement; the Sunday horse-race, horse race, and all other violations of the Sabbath, either for pleasure or profit; and by these presents declare to the world our sacred allegiance to the laws of God, recognizing the holy Sabbath day as a God-appointed institution, made holy not only by his express command, but kept by him in recognition of the sanctity he gave it, and given to the world that it might be a weekly blessing to all generations and nations.

Resolved, That we invite the other churches of the city to co-operate with us in throwing around the Sabbath day again the mantle of protection, putting themselves on record as being loyal to God's commands, until which they are considered by the world as being party to the present disregard of the Sabbath; and that all the Christian people of the city rise up in their superior strength, and demand the enforcement of the Sabbath law and the observance of that sacred day by untiring citizenship.

Resolved, That a copy of this instrument be furnished to each of the city papers for publication; also, to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE and to the Jackson Leader, and request the papers of the State to give it circulation.

Signed in behalf of Conference.

BOOKS.

LIVING SONGS. By Dr. Cunninghamham and Prof. McIntosh. Harber & Smith, Nashville, Tenn.

This is a new music-book for Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues, etc., and is very good.

THE KALEIDOSCOPE. D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Several literary people one evening were examining a picture of a little girl and a cat, when it was suggested that each should write a story of the picture. This little book is the result. Pansy writes the introduction.

AN OPPOSER WON. By Rev. E. M. Merrill, Northwest Texas Conference. L. L. Mickett, Columbia, S. C. Price, twenty-five cents.

This is a little pamphlet giving the author's experience in the matter of obtaining the second blessing of sanctification, and then follow several chapters on the doctrine of Entire Sanctification.

LOOKING OUT ON LIFE. A book for girls. By Rev. F. E. Clark, D. D. 12mo, seventy-five cents. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

For keen, practical insight, for frank and open discussion, for general suggestiveness and helpfulness, there can be found few books for girls to compare with this. Mothers will gladly put its wise and thoughtful counsels into their daughters' hands, feeling that the subjects which they would most care to have discussed are put in such bright, attractive form as to compel attention.

THE SABBATH FOR MAN. By Rev. William P. Crafts, Baker and Taylor Co., New York. 12mo; cloth, $1.50.

This is the sixth edition of this valuable, practical handbook of Sabbath Reform. It is a study of the origin, obligation, history, advantages and present state of Sabbath observance with special reference to the rights of working men. It is based on Scripture, literature, and especially on a symposium of correspondence with persons of all nations and denominations. It has a full alphabetical and analytical index, and is the most valuable book on the Sabbath question that we have seen.

JOHN REMINGTON, MARTYR. By Pansy (Mrs. G. R. Alden) and Mrs. C. M. Livingston. 12mo; cloth, $1.50. Boston: D. Lothrop Company.

John Remington, in accepting a little broken-down society, poor in purse and lukewarm in spirit, showed the nobility of purpose which characterized him through all his ministry. Those readers of Pansy's who are familiar with the earlier record of this faithful minister in "Aunt Hannah, Martha and John" will trace out the development of an even finer spiritual nature than was there manifested, as the years bring him graver duties and deeper responsibilities.

"THE SCARLET LETTER." By Nathaniel Hawthorne. John B. Alden, publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

This most celebrated story, and one of the most famous in American literature, up to a few weeks ago cost, in cheapest cloth binding, 81, or in paper 50 cents. We have just received a very neat and thoroughly well-made cloth-bound edition from John B. Alden, publisher, New York, which he sells for twenty cents, plus 5 cents for postage, if by mail; the same in paper covers he sells for ten cents, postpaid. His catalogue of choice books, over 100 pages, which he sends to anyone for 2-cent postage, is a literary curiosity, which every book-buyer ought to have, of course. His publications are not sold by book-sellers, but only direct.

This is the first volume of an extensive work of twenty volumes on the Old Testament, printed from imported plates obtained from the publishers in London, where the entire work has been issued after years of preparation. In this great Commentary, by various authors, is found a terse, outline or homiletic suggestion to every paragraph or verse of the Old Testament that can be turned to use in the preparation of a sermon. Abundant choice many eminent sources other than the authors of the volumes, are also given. Except in some introductory, critical, chapter, no foreign words, such as Hebrew or Greek, are used. The type is large and clear, and the books convenient to handle. This work is not only a labor-saving machine, but a laborer, calling for abundance of labor in the highest degree fruitful.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—July 3, 1892.

By Rev. W. H. LA PRADRE.

The Ascension of Christ.

Acts 1, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"When he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight."

St. Luke, the writer of "the history of the foundation and spread of the Christian Church," known to us as "THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES," was the writer also of the Gospel known by his name. Early writers of the Christian Church tell us that he was a native of Antioch in Syria, of Greek parentage, and that, early in life, he became a convert to the Jewish faith. He was a physician (See Col. iv, 14). About the time St. Paul went into Macedonia Luke became his traveling companion, and was with him constantly until after the shipwreck at Melita.

"THE ACTS" is really the second volume of a book of which the Gospel by Luke is the first volume. Both volumes are inscribed to Theophilus, a man of rank, and probably, like Luke himself, a Greek. This, however, is not certainly known.

St. Luke evidently (see verses 1 and 2 of lesson) regarded the wonderful things recorded in The Acts as the work of Christ, just as truly as were the miracles and teachings of the Gospel. Some things he did and taught while still in the flesh; others, after his ascension, he wrought by the Holy Ghost. When we speak of "the Dispensation of the Spirit," we must not forget that Christ is in it all; that all is his work.

Vers. 1, 2. The Gospel by Luke concludes with a brief account of the ascension of Jesus. Immediately preceding that account is the command to his disciples to be witnesses unto him after the promised baptism of the Holy Ghost. (See Luke xxiv, 44-50.)

Vers. 3. Forty days elapsed between the resurrection and ascension of our Lord. At various times during this period he was with them. Read what St. Paul says (in I. Cor. xv, 4-8) and what St. John writes (John xxi, 19-23, and xxi, 1-15), in connection with Luke's own statement in the last chapter of his Gospel.

Vers. 4, 5. From Jerusalem the "Word of the Lord," according to prophecy (Isaiah li, 3), should go forth. Power was needed—spiritual power—and Jesus had promised it. So Luke states (Luke xxiv, 49) and so is declared in John xv, 26. The disciples were to tarry at Jerusalem until the power should come. It came ten days after the ascension.

Vers. 6, 7. The apostles did not quite understand yet the full purpose of Christ, and so opened once more the old question of the setting up of his temporal kingdom. The reply of Jesus means that the question was not relevant to their work, which he states in the next verse.

Vers. 8. They were to be further fitted for their special work, which was "to be witnesses unto me," he said. They would need clearer knowledge of spiritual things; fuller assurance of faith; greater boldness in proclaiming the truth; the abiding presence of the Holy Ghost to give efficacy to their ministry; a divine enthusiasm and love for souls. All this, together with the "comfort of his love," they would receive when the Holy Ghost should come upon them. And, so furnished, they should begin the work of witnessing for Christ at Jerusalem, and extend it "into the uttermost part of the earth."

Vers. 9. How simple and how natural the record! An uninspired man would have devoted many pages of "fine writing" to an account of such an event. We learn from Luke xxiv, 50, that he led them to the slope of the Mount of Olives that lay toward Bethany, and there parted from them, and "was carried up into heaven."

Vers. 10, 11. Astonished, bewildered, they stood gazing up. Two angels, possibly the same two that Mary Magdalene saw in the tomb on the morning of his resurrection, appeared and spoke to them, naturally and reassuringly. Jesus had simply gone to the Father; he would come again; he is simply carrying out his plan for the world's redemption; everything is as it should be.

Vers. 12. They went back, "with great joy" (Luke xxiv, 52). The glory of the ascending Lord, and the promise of the Holy Ghost, gave them gladness. Ten days afterward, as we shall see in our next lesson, the Holy Ghost came upon them.

Jesus "is risen." He is Jesus still—the God-man. He is not a disembodied spirit; he is still incarnate. He is a "glorified body," but still a body. He is our brother as well as our Lord. He is superintending his work—the work we are trying to do. The Holy Ghost brings power to do the work—the Word of God is our implement; but Jesus is back of all of it. It is his work, and he is personally and exceedingly interested in the work and its outcome.

We understand that the Woodville District Conference, after an earnest debate, by a resolution, defined a Sunday-school to be "the church and its friends met together to study the Bible."

A good old brother gave his vote on the pastoral time limit, when he prayed the Lord "to permit the good preachers to stay a little longer," and "to allow the poor preacher to circulate more freely."

One of the papers has the temerity to say in regard to doctrine that "the people have laid in a plentiful store of ignorance on the subject." Perhaps preaching from the various pulpits might be the means of decreasing that store!

When a man joins the church, he joins everything connected with the church. He joins the prayer meeting, class meeting, Sunday-school and everything else, and he promises to support all these institutions! Have you thought of that vow lately?

When the people see to it that every individual, great and small, gets impartial justice before the law, then mobs will cease. There have been so many unmitigated rascals who have gone "unwhipped of justice" that patience is exhausted. Administer simple justice to all, and things will right themselves.

The total number of church communicants in the United States, according to the census of 1890, is 12,500,000. This is a gain of 28 per cent. over the census of 1880. The gain in the whole population during the same period is 25 per cent. It thus appears that church membership is growing faster than the population. These facts are commended to those who go about prating about the decline of religion in this country.

No man amounts to much until he learns that he must stand alone and do his own work. Beware of leaning on others or complaining that others neglect or hinder you. The truth is, that others are too busy with their own tasks to stop long, either to help or hinder you. Your success must be wrought out by your own strong arm. You must make your own way; if you lag behind, no one will be found to carry you. Of course, you should seek divine assistance; but it is vain to expect that even God will help you if you fail to do your best to help yourself. "Every man must bear his own burden."—Cumberland Presbyterian.

One of the last acts of the Methodist General Conference at Omaha threw a furious fire-brand into the ranks. The action taken on the "woman question" has begun to stir things in a mad way. Even those papers which have advocated the eligibility of women to the Conferences are speaking out in terms of unmeasured antagonism against the bill which was tricked through the Conference in its last hours. All, as far as we have seen, except one, denominated the measure unconstitutional and revolutionary in its tendency. From appearances now, our brethren are going to have the hottest time they have ever had.

The Human Heart.

The Scriptures make the startling statement that "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." The reason for such a statement can be easily found when we read the Word of God. The word "heart," and those expressions which have a kindred signification, fill a large place in the Scriptures. God begins to talk about the heart in the sixth chapter of Genesis, and he keeps on talking about it through the whole Bible. God places the human heart before the object-glass of his Word, and only those who look through that Word can obtain a correct view of it. The first thing God says about the heart startles us with its dreadful information, and the words sound as if they were forced out between the profound sobs of infinite grief. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it grieved him at his heart." (Gen. vi, 5.) In all the Book this statement is never withdrawn—never apologized for—never explained away—never softened. On the contrary, the idea gets larger, the emphasis heavier, the significance more awful as we advance along the line of Scripture teaching. As we look through the glass of God's Word we see the darkness enlarging and moving steadily over the heart until the "whole is darkened," and the record is written down in unmistakable words: "The heart of the sons of men is full of evil."

We look again, and the blackness becomes so dense that the mind is foiled in the effort to penetrate that region, but the divine Word supplies the deficient observation with the remark: "The heart is desperately wicked and untraceable above all things. Who can know it." (Jer. xvii, 9.)

We look again through the glass of the Word, and the darkness, which seemed simply to cover the heart like a pall, begins to shoot out and throw off great clouds of murkiness and gloom, withering everything in their course with the blight of death, and the Scriptures explain the dreadful picture in these words: "Out of the heart of men proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness. All these evil things come from within." (Mark vii, 21.)

The human spirit has come to the utmost limit of its explorations, but the Divine Spirit pushes his way through all that stifling darkness into the inner chamber of the heart, and, with a clearness of vision that was never dimmed, has noted, and, with an accuracy of detail that has never made a mistake, has taken an inventory of the things found there and recorded them in the Holy Book. Here it is: "Being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, deceitful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful." (Rom. i, 29-31.)

The Holy Spirit lingers over the dreadful catalogue and repeats it in tones of awful solemnity: "Adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envy, murders, drunkenness, revelings and such like." (Gal. v, 19-22.)

The Holy Ghost, following along the way in which this "desperately wicked" human heart leads its possessor, stands in the lurid glare of "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone," and looks down into its bottomless abysses of unutterable misery and calls again the dreadful roll: "The fearful, and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars." (Rev. xxi, 8.)

Such is the unregenerated human heart as God sees it and describes! Is it not true, then, that "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool"?

The Expediency of Employing Evangelists in Revival Work.

[Paper read by Rev. J. W. Medlock at the Acadia District Preachers' Meeting at Rinston, La., May 27, 1892, and requested, by vote of the meeting, to be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.]

The evangelist question is one of the problems now confronting our Methodism. It is thrust upon us by the increase of this class of preachers, by the growing habit of depending upon them, and by the doubtful methods employed by them in the prosecution of their work.

Let us not overlook the fact that there is no scriptural warrant for the existence of such a class of preachers. The name "evangelist" appears in the New Testament as descriptive not of an order in the ministry, but of a work which all orders in common might perform. The name signified "the publisher of the glad tidings," and it applied to any preacher of the gospel, whether apostle, pastor, or teacher. Thus Timothy, as pastor, was exhorted to do the work of an evangelist—that is, to publish the glad tidings in Ephesus to such as had not heard them. The New Testament evangelist was a missionary. He did not go into a city pastorate and preach to people who had heard the gospel all their days, but he went to those who had never heard it and never had the opportunity of hearing it. Let us not be deceived by names. Modern evangelists have the right, if they choose, to adopt the name, but not to claim scriptural warrant for their institution.

Another fact that has some bearing on the question is that evangelists originate, often, in pastoral unacceptability. I do not say that this is true in every case. It may also be true that preachers unsuited to the pastoral office might be efficient in other fields. But such inefficiency is a count against them to the extent, at least, that it suggests what may be the only reason for their course in becoming evangelists. It thus happens that our system has reached the point practically at which the pastoral office is a sort of transition stage in ministerial development. The doors of the Conference are opened at both ends, and those who go on through don't go out, as of yore, to locate, but to enter larger fields.

Another fact we must take account of is this, that the evangelist's popularity depends more upon his methods than upon his faithful preaching, and such methods as are a hindrance rather than a help to the progress of the gospel. These methods are altogether sensational, and are in no sense of the essence of the gospel. They attract the coarse and curious for the time being only, and do permanent hurt to the cause of religion by degrading its character in the eyes of the public. In this way the evangelist leaves the field harder to cultivate than before he came. The pastor will find the new converts out of sympathy with his ideas and methods, and will be made painfully conscious of the existence of unfriendly comparisons.

Again, evangelist services tend more and more to disqualify our regular ministers for revival work. Methodism has been called "Christianity in earnest," the Methodist Church a revival church, and the typical Methodist preacher has always been regarded as a revivalist. But we are more and more extinguishing our title to this honored name. As our preachers strive after greater accuracy in scholarship in order to keep pace with the march of learning in the world about them, and as they set more and more store by the duties of a faithful pastorate, and attend to such other duties as spring out of our connectionalism and the general interests of the church, there is a growing tendency to neglect revival work, or else to shift it off upon those who are willing to step in and do it for us. It is thus that the increase of evangelists doing this special work in the church is disqualifying our preachers as revivalists. This ought not to be. Our preachers should cultivate all the gifts of the ministry; they should "be apt to teach," and not less ready to warn and exhort men to flee from the wrath to come.

Evangelists are an additional burden of support to the church. We always have enough causes that are legitimate to tax to the full, if not the ability, yet the willingness of the church. The money paid to the evangelist, in many cases, means that much less to the pastor.

If the foregoing facts are true, the question is answered as to the expediency of employing evangelists in revival work.

I do not arraign every evangelist under these charges. I believe there are many notable exceptions—men who are in this work for the glory of God, who preach a pure gospel without the accessories I have mentioned, who are in sympathy with our regular ministry, and who are in the evangelistic field because they seem adapted and called to this work. I do not say it would be inexpedient to employ any evangelist, but, under the circumstances, it should be exceptional when we do so.

What we need is to cultivate self-reliance, the grace of usefulness in laymen, and, above all, the presence and power of the Divine Spirit. Let our preachers employ help, if need be, but only help. A genuine revival must begin in the church, by heart-searchings, renewal of vows and consecration. Others may do the preaching, but the pastor must never relax his hold upon the reins of the meeting. He can't afford to shift the responsibility of it upon others. His hold upon his people is broken the moment he is relegated to the attitude of a spectator. His hand must guide every soul that comes into the kingdom if he would be able to train and nurture them afterwards.

Is It True?

A correspondent of Light asks a question to which the editor makes the following reply:

She wants to know why Christianity has not done what the humane workers are now seeking to do? The failure is evident, but the reason why is not plain. We suggest that Christians, and the church organizations they are members of, have not seemed to fully understand Christ and his mission to this world; that he is justice, he is kindness, he is mercy, and he is love; that the religion based upon him should embody and exemplify these principles, and should include within the scope of its charity and actions all living creatures.

Is this charge true? While we do not wish to appear as condoning the derelictions of Christians, yet we ask, Is it true "that Christians, and the organizations to which they belong, have not seemed to fully understand Christ and his mission to the world" as fully as the humane societies? If so, then let us close our churches and organize ourselves into one great humane society, that we might the more "fully understand Christ and his mission to the world." He is come that we "might have life, and that" we "might have it more abundantly." Let us seek to know his mission as fully as possible.

The assertion of Light is too sweeping to be true. The humane society is born of Christianity. Its existence is contingent upon Christianity. Christianity is far more than its foster-mother. The church was not intended by God to do everything by direct, but many things by indirect, means. God works thus. He ordained the reclamation of the world through human instrumentality—indirect means. How would the editor of Light like to see his great and influential church of the Bluff City appearing every morning, or at irregular times, before the police court prosecuting violators of our humane laws? How long would she hold her influence at home and abroad? Though engrossed in the alleviation of the sufferings of dumb creation—a most laudable work—would not his better judgment assert itself and he oppose this departure on the grounds of inexpediency? Surely. While there are yet infinite heights to be attained unto and boundless fields of truth yet to be explored, can we say "Christians, and the church organizations of which they are members," do not understand Christ and his mission to the world? Hardly. Light, if it continues to improve, is destined to be an influential journal in its sphere, and it can hardly afford to make such sweeping charges against Christianity as appears in number 4.

Whitworth College.

With no purpose of trespassing upon the duties or privileges of the Visiting Committee, I have thought it proper to say a few things about the college, and especially of the commencement exercises. The splendid spiritual state and influence of the college was neither lost sight of nor overshadowed by the excitement of the occasion nor the presence of the large number of visitors. The sermon by the Rev. J. J. Wheat, D. D., on Sunday morning, and at night by the Rev. E. H. Moulner, fully measured up to the demands of the occasion, and will prove a blessing to many who were present in the large audiences that greeted both speakers.

Monday was a day of deepest interest and excitement to the young ladies of the college. The senior debate—subject: "Resolved, That the expectation of reward is a greater incentive to exertion than the fear of punishment"—revealed the thorough and accurate training the young ladies had received as a preparation for the duties of life. The elocution contests revealed a high order of culture and training, with a most gratifying absence of stage acting. I could not attend the concert at night, but heard nothing but the highest commendations the next day.

Tuesday, at eleven A. M., we had the annual address by the Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., of the South Carolina Conference. It was universally pronounced one of the best addresses ever delivered before a Whitworth College audience. Then came the valedictory essay, by Miss Mai Shelton, of Jackson, Miss. The contest for first honors had been close and sharp; but when the cultured little Miss Mai, scarcely in her teens, won the prize, each member of her class felt the honor was justly hers, for the uniform fairness of the president and his faculty in awarding the honors of the college has taught the girls that merit, and not favoritism, must win. The delivery of the medals by the Hon. J. S. Sexton, and the conferring of degrees on the fifteen young lady graduates by the president, closed one of the most gratifying and successful terms of the administration.

The music department of the college made most gratifying exhibitions, as did also the art department, throughout the commencement. The church and friends may be assured that the outlook for the college was never more flattering, and that the very best talents money and experience can command will await the girls at the next opening.

NOTES.

Rugged old Carlisle says: "Words have weight when there is a man behind them!"

Brother pastor, while you lament that many of your people will not buy newspapers and books to read, don't forget that they are reading you every day.

The Nashville Advocate says:

A benevolent gentleman, who declines to give his name, will pay the traveling expenses of a missionary to Japan to take the place made vacant by the death of Dr. J. W. Lambuth, and will support him in the field. This is one of the indications of the rising tide of missionary spirit.

What kind of religion has that man who takes every opportunity, whether among strangers or acquaintances, to roundly and soundly abuse another for some fancied slight? Is that the spirit of the Master? Does not such a course do the cause of Christ great harm?

We are looking and listening for a big fracas somewhere about the neighborhood of the office of the Nashville Christian Advocate. An editorial note in that paper will be the occasion. In said note occurred this: "It is an unquestionable fact that a great deal of our preaching is empty and shallow." The temerity of such an assertion gives one "the shivers."

How many Methodists there are who seem to have not a particle of "church conscience." They apparently have no idea of obligation in regard to church services. A good "church conscience" regards church duties as second to none in sacredness and importance. A good "church conscience" is as faithful to God and his house on his day as it is to home and business on other days.

This paragraph from the Sunday-School Times is commended to fault-finders:

It requires less ability to perceive defects than to perceive merits. The lowest order of human intellect is fully sufficient for fault-finding. One of the surest signs of intellectual inferiority is shown in a recognition of special worth where defects are prominent. A habit of fault-finding marks the inferiority of the fault-finder.

Jesus taught that those who possess his religion possess his spirit. He was a spirit of forgiveness toward his enemies. In face of this plain teaching, which runs all through the New Testament, there are people who claim to be Christians, who take every opportunity to show that they possess the spirit of hate toward those whom they fancy have injured them. Such persons are in a perilous condition. "If ye forgive not, neither will your Father forgive you." Can anything be plainer than that, or more awful?

Judge J. Wofford Tucker, in the Nashville Advocate, gives this word of advice to the preachers:

If we were permitted to offer last words of advice to the devoted ones chosen to suffer—we die daily—those words would be framed thus: When you realize that your prayer is heard at the mercy seat, ask for these things: To be completely delivered from all apprehension of material want; from all desire for praise; from all fear of censure or criticism; from all disturbing self-consciousness while preaching; and to be enabled to get behind the cross, while you present the Crucified One to the hearts and consciences of dying men.

In regard to the city problem, of which so much is written and spoken, the following from the Christian Advocate is especially good:

The massing of people together in cities is not an unmixed evil. The motives which impel men to gather in close community are quite natural and generally not unworthy. The evils of city life come more from incidental and accidental causes than from anything inevitable in the conditions of the life itself. If the tendencies of the vicious and criminal are more quickly developed in the city than elsewhere, and given larger and freer range, it is true also that the nobler faculties of man find here more stimulation, more opportunities for growth and larger scope for action. If the city has much which tends to coarsen, brutalize and corrupt, it has also much which tends in the opposite direction, to refine, to humanize and to uplift. Against the city's saloons, gambling dens, and other evil resorts, may be set the schools, the colleges, the churches, and the thousand and one agencies for the quickening of the moral, intellectual and spiritual life. The problem of the city, therefore, resolves itself into the question, how to strengthen and enlarge the agencies of good, and how to restrict or suppress the agencies of evil.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Alexandria, La., is to have a $50,000 hotel.

Have you ever noticed how many good, disagreeable people there are in the world?

The Institute of Georgia University have conferred the degree of LL.D. upon Joseph Jones, M. D., of this city.

Zion's Herald, of June 22, published Dr. S. A. Stool's sermon preached at the commencement of Lasell Seminary.

Washington and Lee University has honored itself by conferring the degree of Doctor of Laws upon Bishop R. R. Hendrix.

Emory College at its last commencement conferred the degree of D. D. upon South Carolina correspondent, Rev. S. A. Weber.

Rev. H. H. Abrams, of Vidalia circuit, and Rev. J. W. Davis, of Black River circuit, have both been "run out by the high water."

We are glad to note that our special friend, Rev. H. M. Dubose, editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, has been dubbed "D. D." by Emory and Henry College.

The Advocate acknowledges the receipt of an invitation to attend commencement exercises of the University of Mississippi. We much regret that we could not attend.

Dr. J. W. Mendenhall, editor of the Methodist Review, died in Chicago, June 18. Dr. Mendenhall had just been re-elected editor of the Review at the Omaha Conference.

The agent of Centenary College, Rev. Robt. Harry, is out on a tour, "drumming up" students for the next session. Let the pastors everywhere co-operate heartily with him.

President Candler brings us under obligation for a catalogue of his prosperous school, Emory College. It had an attendance last session of 285 students, and has a faculty of 15.

Our Legislature has passed a law that no more, lottery tickets will be sold in Louisiana after Dec. 31, 1893. Of course, Gov. Foster will sign it. That settles the Lottery for good.

One of the graduates of Centenary, R. H. Wynn, son of Rev. J. F. Wynn, of the Louisiana Conference, won the A. L. P. Green medal, as the best reader of hymns and Scripture selections.

Dr. Charles A. Briggs and Dr. Lyman Abbott, and several other prominent clergymen of New York City, have endorsed the Salvation Army by becoming auxiliary members of the Army.

We sometimes receive two or three accounts of the same school commencement. This shows the popularity of our schools, but we deem it expedient to publish but one account of the same school.

President W. B. Murrah, of Millsaps College, gave us a call last week. Dr. Murrah is working with his accustomed energy to give his college a good start-off next September, and we trust his most sanguine hopes will be realized.

It is no use for brethren to write to "Please publish the enclosed publicity at your earliest convenience." We always do that. The "earliest convenience" is when "its turn comes." Each one is marked with the date of its reception, and when we get to it goes in certain.

Bro. T. J. Newell brings us under obligation for a catalogue of his fine school, Grenada Collegiate Institute for Young Ladies. He has just finished a prosperous session. The school is the property of the North Mississippi Conference, and offers superior advantages for mental and moral culture.

Bro. J. A. Randolph, pastor of our church in Starkville, Miss., in view of the commencement ball of the A. and M. College, issued a vigorous circular to his people, showing them the origin and tendencies and results of ball-giving, and called upon those who intended to withdraw from the church. The circular raised a howl so much for courage in duty. Bro. Randolph is hereby reminded that he has the sympathy and prayers of all true Christians, and, the best of all, God's approval. Ahead, brave pastor; the Lord will help you to win.

Receipts for Rev. H. G. Hawkins' traveling expenses to Japan since last report:

Unfilled (Clarke circuit) $4 00

Clarke Warrent 10

Unfilled Base 05

There lacks much of the amount needed. Not one-half has yet been contributed. Please, brethren in the ministry, call the attention of the laymen to this cause, and give them an opportunity to contribute "not grudgingly, or of necessity," but cheerfully. The full amount be reported next week. Bro. Hawkins is now on the Pacific Ocean. A friend advanced the amount needed; and it must be repaid—this is $200—by Bro. Hawkins, if not by us.

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

People who carry messages that come from heaven, will always be able to get somebody to listen to them.—Ram's Horn.

Trinity College, now of Durham, N. C., at its recent commencement, graduated eighteen young men, eight of whom were young ministers.

Up to and including Wednesday, the fifteenth, Crystal Springs had shipped 170 carloads of tomatoes; and it is said the receipts amount to about $5,000 per day for this crop.

Bro. DuBose, of the Pacific Methodist, thinks we ought to move northward as well as westward. His argument is good, and it may be worth while to consider the question, although we are hardly ready as yet to say, Amen.

Cards are out for the marriage of Miss Clara B. Harmon, of Meridian, Miss., to Mr. S. S. Cope, of Paulding, Miss. The wedding was to have taken place in Central Church, Meridian, at one o'clock, Wednesday afternoon, June 29. Miss Clara is the daughter of our Bro. J. W. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference. We extend to the couple our heartiest congratulations.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference was in session in Vicksburg the latter part of last week, and the first of this.

Rev. B. F. Jones, president of the Port Gibson Female College, preached the annual sermon, Sunday, at eleven A. M. Quite a large delegation was in attendance, and the presence of Miss Bettie Hughes was productive of quite a great deal of pleasure and profit.

Christ saves men that they may save others. He discipled men that they may make disciples. Christ has no idea that we shall take the bread of life and put it into our pouches, or lay it up in our barns. He expects us to break off a piece and hand it on. "Freely ye have received, freely give!" is the law of the kingdom. The concept of the believer as a herald, a witness, a winner of souls is everywhere in the New Testament taken for granted. It runs like a golden thread through all the discourses, parables and even miracles of our Lord.—Christian Alliance.

The closing of the World's Fair on Sunday came up in Congress a few days ago, and after considerable discussion a substitute offered by Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, was adopted, declaring that the appropriation should be made available, "provided that the government exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition shall not be opened to the public on Sunday." This leaves the larger question as to the opening of the other departments to be settled by the management, as well as the equally important matter regarding the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

"And Zechariah stood and said unto the Lord: Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold. And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, for as much as he also is a son of Abraham."

Restitution, my brother, is absolutely essential not only to your regeneration and present enjoyment of your religion, but to your eternal salvation. Would it not be well to read up on this subject?

MIL H. QUICK.

When the iron is hot, hit it quick. Our Book Agents, Book Committee and General Sunday-school Committee are very anxious to establish a high-grade weekly organ for the Epworth League. It is greatly needed, not only to assist in pushing the organization into unoccupied territory, but even more so, if possible, to help in thoroughly vitalizing and giving aggressiveness to existing Leagues. Such a paper will be a big blessing to the work.

To give it full, throbbing life right from the beginning it must have an assured patronage. Now, let every Epworth League in Southern Methodism canvass the matter at once, and send in as many subscribers as possible. For twenty and over the price will be fifty cents per annum. Very cheap for the character of it. Of course, if the proposition does not receive sufficient attention from our Leagues, the paper will not be published. Let no League neglect it. Almost every League in existence by a little effort among friends can send in, at least, twenty subscribers. Will our pastors and presidents of the Leagues see that a list goes to Nashville immediately? The iron is hot; hit it quick.

Yours truly, J. R. PEPPER.

Cor. Sec. Gen. S. R. Committee.

Buy Your Pianos and Organs NOW.

Philip Werlein, 150 Canal St., is offering special bargains in pianos and organs, and you would do well to send for prices and catalogues. Since the fire we have put prices way down, and now is the time to purchase. Pianos and Organs sold on easy monthly payments.

From personal knowledge we recommend our readers heedful photographs to go to the artist, E. Simon, No. 183 Canal street. None better in this city.

A Proposition.

To the Pastors and Presidents of Epworth Leagues in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

BRETHREN: The Sunday-school Committee submitted to the Book Committee, at its annual session in May, the question of publishing an Epworth League journal. After much deliberation the Book Agents were instructed to make inquiry into the probability of obtaining for such a paper, and report to the Book Committee. We propose to publish a weekly paper of eight pages, 14x10 1/2 inches, use good material, do the mechanical work in good style, and maintain in its columns a high literary standard. This paper we would sell at $1 per annum for a single copy, or in clubs of twenty and upward at 50 cents per copy. We beg that you will report to us at your earliest convenience how many copies of such a paper can with certainty be counted on to be taken by the Epworth League or Leagues under your care.

The Sunday-school Committee, the Book Committee and the Book Agents are unanimous and earnest in the desire and purpose to publish a journal for the Epworth Leagues, if such a paper can be supported; but its publication will not be undertaken without assurance of its support.

Please let us hear from you promptly, brethren. Very respectfully, BARKER & SMITH, Agents.

To the People of the Vicksburg District.

When the District Conference, just held in Port Gibson, resolved to purchase a district parsonage, I made in the Conference the following proposition, to wit: "I will be one of forty persons to pay one thousand dollars—that is, twenty-five dollars each."

I received, on the spot, responses to the amount of two hundred and twenty-five dollars, or nearly one-fourth of the whole number. The proposition extends to the entire district. Anyone who will join me, please send name and postoffice address to me at Port Gibson. The money will be due when called for by the committee, but can be sent any time to R. C. Kelly, treasurer, Port Gibson, Miss. Other means for raising money will go forward under the immediate direction of the committee. I want to publish in the Advocate the names of all those who respond to my proposition.

Correction.

I learn through Bro. B. F. Lewis that I had been misled by my informant as to his house being supplied and furnished "rent free" in West Jackson last year. It was only partially furnished by his people and the rent paid by himself.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected from Consumption, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting, he accidentally made a preparation of Indian Hemp, which cured his only child, and now gives this recipe free on receipt of two stamps to pay expenses. Hemp also cures night sweats, nausea at the stomach, and will break a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 109 E. Second street, Philadelphia, Pa., naming this paper.

Seashore Camp Meeting.

I want to announce through the Advocate for the benefit of the Mississippi Methodists, and people generally, that through the kindness of Mr. A. C. Danner, of Mobile, Ala., chairman of transportation committee, and the Illinois Central railroad managers, that reduced rates will be given to the Seashore Camp Meeting and return, and that tickets will be granted a short time before and continue good for a short time after the close of camp meeting.

Now, I think the weary itinerant or business man, and especially those who desire to seek a healthy resort, can not find a nicer place to spend three or four weeks in the Summer than Seashore Camp Grounds. Fine prearranging, nice grounds, pleasant sea breeze, salt-water bathing, fish and oysters to eat. All conducive, as I think, to good health of body and mind. Now, let us all go. I was suffering with indigestion last Summer, and went down, only staying a very short time, and I must say I felt greatly benefited. Who will go?

What Governor Foster Discarded.

In my late canvass of the State, in every parish and community I met students and graduates of Centenary College. Their influence for good is felt everywhere in society, in business and official life. The alumni of Centenary College have filled the highest judicial stations in our State with credit and distinction. The most honored of the legal profession, the most eloquent divines, and the leaders in all the useful and dignified lines of life are of her sons. If I were called upon to say what school had left the greatest and best impress upon the society, business and government of Louisiana, I would unhesitatingly say—Centenary College.

MANSFIELD, La., Oct., 1890.

Mr. RICKS—I have been entirely cured by the use of your Mineral Water of the most stubborn case of malaria I ever have known. I was on the eve of black jaundice. I tried several physicians to no effect; only grew worse. I abandoned medicine entirely, and in ten days after using your Mineral Water I was completely restored.

Mr. M. RICKS—The keg of your Mineral Water sent me has almost cured my daughter and myself of a severe case of chronic indigestion and constipation. Send another keg of water.

This is to say I have been a great sufferer of liver complaint and indigestion for more than thirty years. Ricks' Mineral Water has greatly improved me.

JUNE THIGPEN.

SHREVEPORT, La., May 5, 1891.

Mr. M. RICKS—I take pleasure in writing to you that your Mineral Water has relieved me very much; if I continue so I believe I am on the road to get well. I have had one of the most severe cases of nervous indigestion for over two years; have been so prostrated from it that it was a perfect invalid. Had the best doctors in New Orleans, Hot Springs and Shreveport. I found no relief until I commenced the use of your Mineral Water. I cheerfully recommend this water to all who are suffering with the above disease. Respectfully,

Mrs. A. A. ZODIAG.

MANSFIELD, La., May 25, 1891.

Mr. M. RICKS—Dear Sir: On the fifteenth instant, I had a severe attack of bilious dysentery with fever, resulting from a general bilious condition of the system when I began the use of the Mineral Water from your well. Since I began the use of it I have entirely recovered from my previous condition. My appetite has been entirely restored, my general condition greatly improved, and which I attribute to the use of your well water. I can cheerfully recommend it as a most excellent remedy for constipation and biliousness.

T. J. HILL.

MANSFIELD, La.

We, the undersigned practicing physicians of DeSoto parish, La., after having examined the analysis of Ricks' Mineral Water, as well as having tested its merits practically, cheerfully recommend its use to those who suffer with dyspepsia, constipation, torpidity of the liver or any chronic diseases of malarial origin.

OBITUARIES.

SELSER.—Mrs. MARGARET SELSER died at her residence, in Yocco county, Miss., on May 18, 1892. She was born on Dec. 22, 1815. Her father, Richardson Bowman, was a soldier of the War of 1812, and a pioneer settler of Yocco county. In 1832 Mrs. Selser was married to Philip O'Reilly, a merchant of Benton, with whom she lived happily until his death in the following year after their marriage. In 1835 she was married to Herman Selser, a devout Christian, a pure, upright, honorable man, who preceded her to the grave.

Before her first marriage, at the age of sixteen, she became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and ever after her life was that of a sincere, earnest, exemplary Christian. Religion to her was not an idle profession, nor empty show. It was a practical religion, ever borne with her in all the walks of life, and ever consistently portrayed in her conduct and conversation. With "quiet spirit," and gentle, unobtrusive manners, she was an earnest and effective worker in the cause of the Master. Her exemplary deportment and consistency were strongly persuasive in favor of the truth of her religion, and exercised a good influence over all with whom she came in contact. Conformity to the divine law, and the performance of duty in all things under business, was her rule of action. She was kind to all, generous, liberal, a good neighbor, a faithful friend, sincere in her professions, consistent in her conduct and speech toward others, and charitable to an eminent degree.

For years she was the victim of a slow, wasting disease, but bore her sufferings uncomplainingly, with fortitude and patience. She was loving, obedient daughter, a kind sister, affectionate wife, and devoted, self-sacrificing mother. She was beloved and esteemed by all who knew her, and had no enemies. She died, but blessings garland her tomb, and her far name and good deeds remain as a sacred legacy to bereaved relatives and surviving friends, and from the peaceful bosom of her grave none but fond recollections and tender memories spring.

LEE.—Died Feb. 18, 1892, BRANTON HENDERSON LEE, aged twenty-eight years two months and five days.

Truly has it been said, "Death chooses a smiling mark," and when his deadly arrow struck this, the heart of our dear friend and comrade, and blanching the cheek of him who was to be the pride and dush of useful, youthful manhood, we exclaimed, with all who love him, "Why him, O God? why him? whose plane of usefulness was so great, and who is so sadly needed by all to whom he is dear?" But the divine goodness of God is not to be questioned. And, help the bereaved ones to bow in submission to thy will.

Forty years Braxton had been fatherless, and in the home where he was called brother and son he became father to the fatherless, and the widow's friend. When a youth of twenty he shouldered a burden from which many a man, fully grown, has cowardly shrunk away; and this he made his duty, his work, his pleasure. Till God made him lay it down, to pick up the harp of eternal life in the land of eternal day.

Braxton was a successful young farmer, and his money improvements he made at his mother's home remain as lasting tokens of a dear mother's kindness, a loved son's affection. His work with the spade and hoe was for his loved ones at home; the last stroke of his ax was for a widow, an orphan who had no claim on him, except such as all like cases had on his kindly heart.

Honest, honorable and true, he has lived his life, but useful life. Ah! friends, we shall miss him! His cheerful voice and cheerful face gone from our midst; vacant is his home, and lonely the hearts who love him; but there is the hope that over the dark river his pure spirit will no more cross, we will meet him and greet him when parting shall be no more.

And then, dear friend, dear cousin, farewell! E.

JUMPER.—MALACHI WESLEY JUMPER, son of David and Annie Jumper, died suddenly of heart disease at the home of his son, in Sifton, where he was visiting, on April 23, 1892. He was born near Selma, Ala., Jan. 27, 1817. He came to Mississippi in 1846, and settled in Itasca county, living there till 1867, when he moved to Monroe county, near Nettleton, which was his home until his death. He was married when young to Miss Adeline Seymour, Alabama, who, after fifty years of devoted husband and children, went to her home on Sept. 13, 1890. To them were born seven sons and three daughters, of whom five sons are now living. Of these all save one are members of the church.

Mr. Jumper joined the Methodist Church in early life, and was a strong and earnest member until his death. He was a steward many years, old age and disease finally compelling him to decline to serve longer. His house was preachers' home. Many preachers of the South Mississippi Conference have good cause to remember him. Among his presiding elders were Ramsey, Kendall and Porter. Since his death, a year and a half ago, it has been the desire to follow her. His wish is gratified, and an exemplary husband, father and Christian has gone to his reward.

W. H. SANDERS.

WYATT.—WILLIAM CAMERON WYATT, infant son of Rev. J. M. Wyatt and Mrs. Mary G. Wyatt, deceased, died at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Cameron, in Winona, Miss., half past two o'clock, May 19, 1892. The death was very unexpected.

At four o'clock in the afternoon we laid the little one to rest by the side of his precious mother, in the beautiful cemetery near Okolona. The babe was not yet three months old, and so soon does the mother gather the little treasure to her arms in a land where there is no death. May God comfort those who are left behind!

RALEIGH, Miss.

TURNAGE-SALLIE VIRGINIA TURNAGE, daughter of J. R. and N. E. Bullock, and wife of J. C. Turnage, was born Jan. 15, 1861, and died March 31, 1892, aged thirty-one years two months and sixteen days.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." Sister Turnage was abundant in labors. When a child she was kind to her brothers and sisters. When at school her playmates loved and honored her because she was so kind to them. At twelve years of age she impressed others as being a Christian.

She joined the Baptist Church at Bethany, on "White Sand," in 1873; she was married to J. C. Turnage by Rev. D. F. Guice, Feb. 10, 1880. The Lord gave to them two sweet little girls. I know God will take care of them, for she was righteous, and often she has poured out her soul in prayer for them and her husband.

How did she die? Happy—seeing eyes as those of angels coming for her, and singing in her last moments, "Jesus, lover of my soul." She died in the Lord; her works will follow her—works of love for her God, husband, children, sisters, brothers, mother and many others will follow her. "Inasmuch as ye did, ye did it unto me."

God bless Mrs. Turnage and the girls and relatives, and bring them to the home of the soul. M. L. WHITE, P. C.

BROWN.—Sister ANNA E. BROWN was born Aug. 4, 1824, in Hinds county, Miss. In early life she moved to Chicot county, Ark. In 1852 she united with the M. E. Church, South, in which she has lived an humble Christian life until May 2, 1892, when the Good Shepherd folded her in his arms and gave her sweet rest from nearly threescore and ten years of wearisome labor.

The writer of this had but a short acquaintance with Sister Brown, but even in that short time learned to honor her many Christian virtues. I visited her in the morning before she died in the evening, and thought I saw plainly that the death angel had marked her for his own, and that her time was short. But there played such a peaceful, quiet calm on her brow. I did not enter into conversation with her; she remarked that she felt so much better. Alas! how subtle is this foe! At eight o'clock that night she sweetly passed away. How sad, and yet how sweet, to know she rests in peace, awaiting the resurrection morn, and her "works do follow her!" Sad it is to her weeping children left behind.

May the Head of the church sanctify this affliction to the best spiritual interests of her children! May they follow her as she followed Christ, and enter fully into that "rest that remains to the people of God."

H. A. PASTOR.

MYER.—Died suddenly in Paulding, Miss., April 17, 1892, Sister MARTHA J. MYER, daughter of J. M. and M. E. Childree. Sister Myer was born in Jackson, Miss., Feb. 22, 1862. She moved with her parents to Smith county, Miss., 1863, where she resided until Autumn of 1890, when she with husband and family removed to Paulding, Jasper county, Miss., where she lived until April 17, 1892, when she exchanged earth and her sorrows for heaven.

She was reared by Christian parents; hence she joined the M. E. Church, South, in her twelfth year; was happily converted, and lived a devout Christian until death. Hence, notwithstanding she died suddenly, leaving no declaration of her triumph, we knew her by her fruits of righteousness; we know where she rests under the shade of the tree of life.

Sister Martha J. Childree was happily married to Bro. Joseph A. Myer in 1880. She leaves husband and five children, father, mother, brothers and sisters, with a host of friends, to lament their loss.

The home of brother and Sister Myer was the home of the preacher, when he found it convenient to rest there. This writer was their pastor for four years; therefore, we speak that we do know. Farewell, sister, until we meet in the sweet beyond. May God take care of the dear ones and bring them all together by and by. She was known only to be loved.

R. A. SIBLEY.

MARCHAL.—ARTHUR JOSEPH MARCHAL, infant son of Mr. Alex and Sister Virginia Marchal, died in Algiers, La., May 15, 1892, aged two months and five days.

A sweet little life begun on earth; but, for reasons best known to "him, who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind," was taken up to heaven. May the grace of God enable the parents to see by faith their little one at the feet of the Master, and may they strive to enter heaven, too, at the end of their lives.

H. S. JOHNS.

Mr. P. D. Delacroix, Cypremont P. O., La., Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold, remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles, hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THOSE SENDING MONEY.—Remittances should be made only by money orders, express company orders, registered letters, drafts or checks on New Orleans banks or merchants. SEE WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT IT.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. It is full of choice new tunes, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone.—Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tone. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Miss M. M. Herald.

After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is unsurpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 131, 135, 137, 138, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Westleyan Methodist.

27% Difference

The "Royal" the Strongest and Purest Baking Powder.

Whether any other baking powder is equal to "Royal," let the official reports decide. When the different powders were purchased on the open market and examined by Prof. Chandler, of the New-York Board of Health, the result showed that Royal Baking Powder contained twenty-seven per cent. greater strength than any other brand.

When compared in money value, this difference would be as follows:

If one pound of Royal Baking Powder sells for 50 cents,

One pound of no other powder is worth over 36 cents.

If another baking powder is forced upon you by the grocer in place of the Royal, see that you are charged the correspondingly lower price.

NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1892.

WHOLE NO. 1872.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.
Rev. B. F. LEWIS, Asst. Editor.

PUBLISHED FOR THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Starkville and the A. and M. College.

Our pastor at Starkville, Miss., Rev. J. A. Randolph, is in the midst of a great fight in that town and community. He has antagonized sin, and sin and its friends antagonize him, as always is the case. It has been well known for years past that the "blind tiger" business flourished in that town. It has been run under the guise and in the name of drug stores. These dens of evil, where the laws of the State are wantonly violated, have been a curse to boys from all parts of the State. The grand jury of that county, Oktibbeha, says: "We find that the law in reference to druggists selling whiskey is most wantonly and persistently violated, and we acknowledge our utter inability to remedy the evil by indictment." Bro. Randolph commented vigorously on this public utterance by the grand jury, and his talk raised a storm. The wind, however, blew against the preacher instead of against the evil. Some who ought to have stood by the preacher, whose sympathy and hearty support he had a right to expect, turned against him and sided with the evil and evil doers. It is well to draw the line, now and then, and let men—and women, too—go to the side where they properly belong. It is greatly to be regretted that some women, as well as many men, aligned themselves on the side of evil in this fight.

When a college ball was announced for the A. and M. College, Bro. Randolph issued a well-timed "ball circular"—a copy of which I send you—to the members of his church, and to Christian people generally. (And a strong document it is.—EDITOR.) This brought another storm, and turned the guns of the dancing brigade against the preacher. So it is, always has been, and ever will be. Christ "came not to send peace, but a sword." In this fight it is war to the hilt, and a man's worst foes are they of his own house." So far as the pastor knows, only two members of the Methodist Church danced at the ball.

Card playing in the town and on the campus of the college—even among some of the professors—was a great and growing evil, and so Bro. Randolph turned his gun in that direction, when all the batteries of sin were turned upon him, loaded to the muzzle with hot shot. The guilty professors, like men, owned up to the charge, and the Board of Trustees passed an order forbidding all card playing on the campus. Bro. Randolph was charged with being an enemy of the A. and M. College, and with trying to injure that college in the interest of the devil. Bro. Randolph and every other citizen of Mississippi is a member in the A. and M. College. We own it. It is our school, and some of us do not want our boys to learn how to dance and to play cards at our State college; and we do not want the "blind tiger" of Starkville to make drunkards out of them. We shall keep on fighting these things till we are heard. We have enlisted for the whole war.

At the late commencement of the A. and M. College every pastor in town received some attention, and was put forward in some of the public exercises, except Bro. Randolph. He was deliberately and openly ignored by those in charge. This was a little, if not a mean, thing, and unworthy of an institution, and of those in charge of the exercises. Things of this sort hurt the A. and M. College with thirty thousand citizens of Mississippi more, too.

There is a brave man standing up for right and righteousness, and filling a representative position—the college pastor for eighty thousand citizens—ignored and snubbed because he has been true to God and his cause. It is the light were turned on. The college is generally understood that the card players and the weak-kneed students who side with one or the other of these classes of evil doers, and of those in charge of the removal of Bro. Randolph at the close of this year. Just so! No wonder it always has been so. The very reason why they need this brave man at Starkville is the very reason why they want him removed. If he is silent, non-committal, or prophesies smooth things; if he flatters the people; if he did not rebuke sin; if he put up sky rockets for them to look at;

If he did not hit evil so hard, and keep on hitting in the same place; if he used more "soft soap" and less solid gospel; if he gave the people what they want instead of what they need—why, he would be a great man.

If Bro. Randolph moves at the end of this year, as likely he will do (Not so sure of that.—EDITOR), it will be a great credit to him and a great reproach to that community. He is a true, brave, prudent man of God. In too many places popularity in a preacher is the one great thing required. He must be popular at any cost to the cause of truth.

At a supper given by one of the leading merchants of Starkville, not many days ago, where beer flowed like water, some one proposed a toast to Mr. Randolph. This was responded to by the merchant and host of the company. Among other things said of Bro. Randolph was this, "We trust that the good brother's presence will be inflicted on some other community next year." This was loudly applauded by the "beer-bibbers" present. This merchant is unlike his kinsman, Philip, so highly commended by our blessed Lord. He is full of "guile." If the "riff-raff," the card players, the beer drinkers, the whiskey sellers and the dancers are to be heard, then Bro. Randolph will have to go. They do not want a preacher who rebukes sin. Godless members of the church always side with this class.

Turn on the light. Light of the right kind exposes evil—makes it manifest. Evil doers hate the light, and will not come to it. Throw the light on them in all the dark haunts of sin. I have tried hard to make sure of the facts in this case. GILDEROT.

Among the Colleges.

The Mississippi Conference is justly proud of her female colleges. Edward McGeehee in the southwest, Port Gibson in the west, East Mississippi in the east, and Whitworth in the center—these colleges, wisely located, afford ample facilities for the higher education of our young women. Each college has sufficient elbow-room. When our people learn to appreciate home institutions, and remember that while distance may lend enchantment to the view, distance does not always give wisdom, then our own colleges will receive the patronage they so richly merit, and a new impetus will be added. We unhesitatingly say that our colleges can give as liberal an education as can be given by any college in the South.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

Commencement exercises of this institution of learning began with a sermon in Central Church, Meridian, May 29. A large audience greeted the preacher. There were interesting exercises Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday following. Dr. Hartman, of the Presbyterian Church, addressed the art class, and Rev. T. B. Holloman delivered the annual address, and reflected honor upon his Conference. Prof. C. W. Anderson, a graduate of Washington and Lee University, is the able president. He impressed us as a scholar of a practical type, a Methodist with a Christian experience, and a model gentleman—one to love and trust. Mrs. Anderson—firm, kind, modest, practical, cultured—possesses every element necessary to manage a student's home. The teachers of this college are equal to the best. We shall ever remember our visit to President Anderson's school as one of the most delightful events in an itinerant's life.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

This favorably known college closed June 7. As a member of the Visiting Committee, it was my pleasure to witness a part of the commencement exercises. Dr. Wheat, of the North Mississippi Conference, preached the sermon at eleven o'clock, and Dr. E. H. Moulton at night. Dr. Smith, of the Vanderbilt, delivered the address to the graduates. Hon. J. S. Sexton delivered the prizes. The essays and speeches of the young ladies were of the finest order of oratory. Music and art have been the pride of this college, and justly so. The conservatory of music is one of the finest this side of the Ohio river. Everything passed off to the credit of the president and teachers. President Fitzhugh is giving his talents to the building up of a great school. Dr. Johnson, of blessed memory—how we loved and honored him! And we pray that his honored successor may have great prosperity! PORT GIBSON FEMALE COLLEGE.

This is one of the oldest colleges in the State. In ante-bellum days it had great prosperity. Some of the most distinguished women in the State are numbered among the graduates. Miss M. E. Compton, a lady of rare worth, has been president for two years. As a teacher and manager, she is quite a success. Adapted by nature, education and religion, any school might well be proud of Miss Compton. What a home-like appearance the college has! Miss Compton continues in charge of the boarding department, and Rev. B. F. Jones is president. The commencement sermon was preached June 12, at eleven o'clock, and at night Rev. A. F. Watkins, A. M., preached a sermon of great beauty and eloquence. Hon. Mr. Martin delivered the address on Tuesday. The new president is a good preacher, an active worker, and possesses a character as fragrant as the roses and as bright as the sunshine. May Christ, who blessed Wilbur Fisk and Stephen Olin, bless our teacher! I. W. COOPER.

Commencement Exercises of Mansfield Female College.

The commencement exercises of Mansfield Female College began Friday night, June 10, with an entertainment by the preparatory department, and closed June 15, with the award of diplomas to the graduating class. The writer was not present Friday night, but was told that a full house greeted the juveniles, who acquitted themselves with great credit.

Sunday morning, commencement sermon was preached by Rev. J. L. Pierce, Rev. S. J. Davies filling the pulpit at night. Monday morning there was a reunion of the alumnae in the college parlors, and in the session hall a contest in elocution by the pupils. The contest was so close as to give the committee considerable difficulty in making a decision. The award, however, was given to Miss Fannie McClure.

Concert No. 1, Monday night, was a brilliant affair; the music, both instrumental and vocal, manifesting capacity on the part of pupils and efficiency on the part of teachers. The drill was grace itself.

Tuesday morning the musical contest occurred. We were given two hours of piano music, each competitor playing three pieces. Several of the young ladies deserve honorable mention, but it was evident that the audience endorsed the award of the committee in giving the medal to Miss Irma McVoy.

The writer herself was compelled to leave before Wednesday; but from what he had seen, was prepared to believe the report of a competent witness, that the graduating exercises were of a high order.

The reputation of this college in its musical and art departments is so well established that commendation by the committee would be superfluous. The committee, however, wishes to bear witness to the thoroughness of the work done in the literary department. The examination papers were called for and examined. The questions propounded were such as to comprehend the gist of the various subjects, and the answers revealed a knowledge highly creditable to the pupils.

The following young ladies constituted the class of graduates: Miss Gertrude Allen, Mansfield, La.; Miss Salie May Cooper, Rapides parish, La.; Miss Hattie F. Bailey, Mansfield, La.; Miss Annie E. Davis, Pleasant Hill, La.; Miss Zena N. Freeman, Robeline, La.; Miss Irma W. McVoy, Mansfield, La.; Miss Mamie E. Potts, Ouachita parish, La.

The Alumnae medal for scholarship was awarded to Miss Salie May Cooper, of Rapides parish, La. The Sutherland medal for elocution was awarded to Miss Susie Fraser, Mansfield, La. The Bland medal for classical music was awarded to Miss Irma W. McVoy, Mansfield, La.

With a large and beautiful campus, commodious and well-adapted buildings, a competent president and faculty, Mansfield College deserves the prosperity it has enjoyed.

If the Methodists of the State, and especially those of the northern portion of the State, were alive to their own interests and loyal to the educational policy of their own denomination, the future of this institution would excel its past.

The college is heartily recommended to all who are interested in the noble cause of female education.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. L. Carley, Jackson, La., June 27: "Rev. Levi Pearce, a superannuated member of the Mississippi Conference, who has been making this place his home for some months, is very near death's door. His wife and daughter and other kind friends are doing all they can to make his last days and hours comfortable. He abides in God's love."

Rev. G. E. Greene, Lind Grove, La.: "My circuit, on the north and east, is overflowed, and crop prospects are dark indeed. We have drouth on the hills; yet the people are responding very well to demands for foreign missions and other causes. We have a new well at the parsonage, with abundance of cool water, and more than half paid for. We have had the house-to-house prayer meeting in six different houses, and some interest has been manifested in this, the Bartholomew neighborhood. Church attendance is improving."

Rev. T. L. Mellen: "Rev. J. N. Ware, P. C., Clarke circuit, and myself protracted services after the Quarterly Conference at Winifred Church. Results: 8 accessions, 20 conversions, 10 recommitments, 2 new family altars; many men and women to lead in prayer, many led to a full consecration, differences adjusted, three young men called of God to preach the gospel—probably four, possibly five, are called; but of the three there is no doubt. The presence of the Holy Spirit was unmistakable. The Word was his, and will abide."

Rev. R. A. Burroughs, Kosciusko district, North Mississippi Conference, June 24: "The committee appointed by the District Conference to consider the propriety of securing a home for the presiding elder, met June 23, and located the parsonage at Durant, and determined to go to work at once to raise funds to put the house up, and have it ready for the presiding elder to live in next year. I think the district is in good condition, and, notwithstanding the hard times, the finances are coming up pretty well. We hope to have a clear record at Conference—Nov. 20."

Rev. W. D. Gaskins, Centerville circuit, La., June 21: "I think that the interest in this charge is growing; but there is not that interest in all of my churches that I would like to see, and which I am praying to see ere this year should close. I intend commencing a series of meetings at Jena Church, beginning on the first Sunday in July; and I want all of the Christians who read the ADVOCATE to pray for me, for the success of my meetings, and for a greater increase of interest in all of my churches. I believe in special prayer. Christ says that 'if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father, which is in heaven.' God blessed us according to the amount of faith that we have in him, and never does for us that which we can do for ourselves. Since I have been on this circuit I have been and am discharging my duty to the best of my ability; and now, brethren, please pray for me and for the upbuilding of God's cause in this part of his moral vineyard; for 'this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us.'"

Rev. J. N. Ware, P. C., Clarke charge, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference, June 27: "Our second Quarterly Conference was held June 18 and 19, and was protracted for a few days. Bro. Mellen, our presiding elder, was on hand, and did all the preaching but two sermons. Our church at Winifred is revived from the children to old age. The Lord was with us from the first to the last. We do not know how many conversions; we let God be the judge. Nine accessions to the church. Most all of our young men and women have made a good start in the prayer meeting. Our little boys and girls are praying in public. Some of our people backslid, were reclaimed, and renewed their covenant with God, and promised to do more in the future. Bro. Mellen left many friends, who will always love him. We are moving on nicely with the work. The Lord is going to give us many souls for Christ this year, I am quite sure. We are now living in the nice little parsonage, which is an honor to the charge. Pray for us, and may the Lord give us all a glorious year all over our county! I think we will have two or three young men for license to preach at our next quarterly meeting."

Rev. John A. Miller, P. E., Lafayette, La., June 22: "The vital forces of the Opelousas district are healthy and active. Every preacher is at his work, and pushing it with all his energy. Some gracious revivals have been reported in this second quarter. The District Conference at Franklin was a success, spiritually, from the first hour's service. There was a full attendance of the clerical members, but the per cent. of lay representatives was small. The business of the Conference was transacted without friction; the spirit of harmony and love characterized all the acts of the brethren. The Conference was delightfully entertained by the good people of Franklin. The spiritual preaching and services of the Conference were a benediction to the church there. The meeting was protracted, and several conversions are reported. I have been expecting to see a report of this district meeting from the secretary; but I suppose he has been too busy to write it up. On the fifth of June we dedicated our new mission church at Lake Charles, situated on Jackson street. It is a beautiful edifice, 26x40. It is now complete, with the exception of the painting. Including the lot and bell, the whole cost is not over $300. It is the best house for the least money I have ever known built in this country. This is greatly to be credited to the building committee: Revs. T. J. Upton, J. B. Kent and Bro. George Price. A splendid, sweet-toned organ was presented to the church by Mr. Poe. The new pastor of the mission is moving off well, with good prospects of building up a good work at that point. This church supplies a long-felt want in that portion of Lake Charles. It is convenient to mill-men and railroad men, who before could not get to church. Bro. Kent has a fine Sunday-school organized in the church. He also organized another mission Sunday-school above English Bayou, some two or three miles from the church. He will establish regular preaching at this latter place. This is a fine field, ripe unto the harvest," and Bro. Kent is thrusting in the gospel sickle to reap the golden grain. Bro. Staples is also doing a good work on Grand Chenier. He is building up the old waste places, and then reaching out into the regions beyond. Bro. Sweeney, a local deacon, gives his valuable assistance, working up 'Little Pecan'; and Bro. Berwick, a local elder, helps on 'Big Pecan.' These are places that the pastor can reach but seldom. Bro. Berwick has discovered a door opening into a perfectly new mission field on the Lacachou. He visited that point two weeks ago, for the first time, and held several days' services, receiving seventeen members into the church, baptizing eleven adults and sixteen infants. Cameron parish is now being cultivated by gospel workers as it never has been before. On my trip to Grand Chenier I contracted a severe cold which caused me to take my bed. I was four days on Bro. Upton's hands; but with him to administer the medicine, and Sister Upton to nurse, I was free of fever and able to return home on Friday, where I have been ever since enjoying a rest. I was compelled, on account of my illness, to miss several of my appointments, which I regretted very much, as it was the first I have missed since I've been on the district, now nearly three years. I hope, however, to be sufficiently restored to attend my next quarterly meeting, which will commence my third round."

R. M. Bruce, Rolling Fork, Miss., June 27: "By request, I give you an imperfect account of the results of our first protracted meeting of the season. Bro. F. M. Keen, having had Bro. Joe Jones with him, with good results, some years ago, at Amite City, La., and knowing the spiritual power of the evangelist, induced him to come to Rolling Fork, and deliver a series of sermons. Bro. Jones preached his first, second and third sermons on Sunday, June 5, and for ten days he preached three sermons every day, except two. On Monday, June 6, he omitted one service, and on the following Saturday preached to the colored people at their M. E. Church. On Sunday he preached at eleven A. M.; then at two P. M. to the colored people again. At four P. M. he preached to men exclusively, at which service we took up a collection for his expenses, and that of Mr. Gilreath, his singer (who, by the way, proved himself, to the satisfaction of our people, a first-class Christian gentleman of high musical talent), of $226, which speaks volumes for our village (for it is scarcely more), and in the midst of a very dull season. His congregations grew daily in numbers and interest, until Tuesday night, June 14, he closed, to meet an appointment at Guthrie, O. T., whence he started on the following morning with the prayers and a hearty 'God bless you, Bro. Jones!' from every Christian soul, irrespective of sect, including forty new recruits to our beloved M. E. army, and some eighteen others who gave pledge to join the church of their choice the first opportunity, and the well wishes of even the few sinners left in the devil's camp. Only those conversant with the condition of things at Rolling Fork for the past year could possibly realize so as to fairly appreciate the full glory of the result. First-class preachers—Methodist Episcopal, Episcopal, Baptist and Presbyterian—had preached and labored, labored and preached, and prayed and sang, and the Christian people had prayed, labored and agonized over sinners—whose name was legion in comparison with the professing Christians of the place—and souls seemed to grow harder and necks stiffer, with old Bacchus in command, till everybody (male) seemed to have resolved, come what would, they would go to hell in spite of God's mercies, Christ's suffering for them, and the herculean efforts of the agonizing Christians in their behalf, until about the seventh day of the battle, when the hosts of Satan began to waver under the mighty reasoning of the powerful evangelist; when the waters began to be troubled, and he, seeing his vantage, continued to pour volley after volley of hot shot, canister, grape and shell into the bulwarks of sin, gaining inch by inch until Monday, when the hosts of Satan broke ranks, and the devotees of profanity, vulgarity, obscenity, whisky, cards, the dance, theater, etc., walked up like the noble men and women they are, and laying down the weapons of their unequal warfare, manfully surrendered to the King of kings and Lord of lords, the God of their being, the God of their preservation, the blessed God of their salvation, and enlisted under the banner of our Emmanuel, and are buckling on the armor of God, and say they are in, not for six months, not for three years, but for the war. It is a complete, a glorious revolution. Whisky and its baleful influences must go; cards, with their damning effects, must go; licentiousness, with its degrading moral influences, must go; all manner of evil is mortally wounded or crippled for life. There are but few left to advocate the cause of the great enemy of God and of man, and that few are of a noble type of humanity, and under the influences of the ever-blessed Spirit; and the prayers of the righteous will fall into ranks, and the work for God and the right is accomplished in Rolling Fork. We earnestly ask the prayers of every Christian who may read this article, that the new recruits may prove faithful to the end of the war, and that the few remaining out of the ranks may speedily decide for God and a better life here, and a blessed life of purity, holiness and eternal safety over yonder with our blessed Jesus. On yesterday, Bro. Keen organized an Epworth League, that the young people of our community might find a larger field in which to work in the blessed cause, and all denominations are cordially invited to affiliate with us for the general good. The Baptists, the Presbyterians, the Episcopalians and our own beloved M. E. Church, South, have worked in unison—hand to hand, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart—for this glorious revival in our midst for years, and now, in patience waiting, we see the desire of our souls in the answer to prayer."

Vicksburg District Conference.

The Committee on Education submit the following report:

We deem it unnecessary in this late day to indulge in argument in the interest of Christian education. The intellectual and moral development of our sons and daughters is a matter that lies near our hearts as parents; and the question is, Where can this work be best accomplished? Fortunately for us, good schools have been provided, and are accessible to us, where our children can get the culture they need in a pure moral atmosphere, and under conditions favorable to their spiritual growth and Methodist training.

Centenary College, of Jackson, La., has just closed a prosperous session, and the affairs of the college are said to be in a better condition than at any time previous in its history. With an endowment of $89,775, which is being increased by the labors of an active and efficient agent in the field, and by the efforts of other friends of the noble institution; with its beautiful location, and the cultured and religious community in which it is situated; and with that elevated Christian gentleman, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, D. D., at its head, supported, as he is, by an able faculty, it is but reasonable to suppose that the college will continue to prosper, and to do valuable work for the church in the years to come.

We are pleased to learn that arrangements are made for the opening of Millers College on the twenty-ninth of next September. We commend the wisdom of the Board of Trustees in the election of the Rev. W. B. Munrah, D. D., to the presidency of this new educational enterprise. This is a sufficient guarantee of wise management and efficient work. Located at the capital of our State, well equipped and ably officered, with excellent boarding arrangements, with the promise of "firm discipline" and "wholesome government," and under the watch-care of Bishop Galloway, whose residence is near by, we are prepared to expect a large patronage and first-class work in every respect.

But we wish at this time to call special attention to Port Gibson Female College, located in this beautiful city. This school for girls, in the center of our district, has an honorable history, and has peculiar claims upon the support and patronage of our people. The Board of Trustees has wisely selected for its president Rev. B. F. Jones, who has the faculty of winning the confidence and affection of all who come in contact with him. With a competent faculty to assist him, and with that excellent Christian lady, Miss Compton, in charge of the boarding department, we do not see what better provision our people can ask for the education of their daughters. We are glad to learn that steps are being taken to secure an endowment for this college, and to otherwise more completely furnish it for its good work. We offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we heartily endorse the action of the Board of Trustees in the election of Rev. B. F. Jones to the presidency of this school, and of Miss Compton to take charge of the boarding department.

Resolved, That we urge all our people to rally to the support and patronage of this, their own college, located in their midst, in a healthy and refined Christian community.

Resolved, That we commend the plan devised for securing an endowment for this college, and urge our people to assist in this worthy enterprise.

Resolved, That in all our church schools we have a right to expect, and do insist on special religious and Methodist training for our boys and girls.

Respectfully submitted,

Mission Work in South Louisiana.

"MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to suggest a few thoughts on missionary work in South Louisiana.

It is generally known that this is a missionary field. While we have quite a number of churches able and willing to support the ministry, the territories unoccupied are much larger. Why should missionary grounds—such large fields—contiguous to our respective churches remain untouched? People and preachers answer with one voice, "We have not the men and the money." When do we expect to get the men and the money? Are we nearer the solution than we were twenty years ago? In the meantime souls are lost in the country remains in superstition and darkness, and Christ's blood is split in vain, so far as these people are concerned. Something must be done! We are constantly asking for a French-speaking missionary. But I ask, What would one man be to all this vast country? Why, my dear sir, it would take, at least, fifty men to do the missionary work of this country. You had as well send one man to all the churches of this country, and expect him to meet the growing demands of each church. It is simply impossible to do this work with less than the force that is now in charge of the organized churches. It is not absolutely necessary that every missionary speak the Creole language.

The Crookes are learning English, and, generally, prefer it to French.

Here is my solution: Let our Bishops send as many men—single, and married men with small families—as may be needed to meet the demands. There are two difficulties apparent to most minds that offset this solution. One is, Where are we to get the men? and the other is, How are we to maintain them? Answer: Let our Bishops concentrate their forces on this field for a few years as they would upon a foreign field—as they have done upon China and Japan—as well as other territories; and while we have not a sufficient number of men in our Louisiana Conference for this work, there are men suited to this field in other Conferences, who may be transferred to Louisiana and appointed to this mission work. As to their support, let there be one or two churches connected with each mission. This would cause our churches to develop their missionary grace and liberality; would cause them to feel more interest in the conversion of the natives, and the said church, or churches, be a nucleus and headquarters for the mission. By this means our church members would both see and feel the importance of paying more money for the salvation of their country, resulting in, perhaps, twice as much money from the average church member as realized under our present operations. Besides, there will be found interspersed throughout each mission men who will take stock in the enterprise. Business men, or any common-sense man, will be more liberal when we show more wisdom in our ministry. We must get in earnest, and take hold upon this cause, if we expect men to rally to our support. Of course, we should collect money from the stronger church of the Conference to help run this operation. I might further suggest that we need brave-consecrated men—soldiers for Christ.

I have had nearly four consecutive years' experience in this Creole country—in the Plaquemine, Brulee and Rayne circuits. Here is the sum of my experience in the very work that I have written about in this article (though in a limited sense): I began with three appointments. Now the same field, with its adjoining missionary grounds, contains ten appointments, one of which (Crowley) has developed into a station. The work is now divided up, and there are three of us in the field, and yet we have one appointment filled by another pastor. Each year, God sent me a young man, who assisted me a portion of the year, and to whom much, if not the greater part, of the development of the work is due under Christ. My salary is better than it was the first year, and each young man was liberally supported, considering the limited expense of living out on the work with the pastor in charge. Of course, converting and sanctifying power has been upon us.

A Little More Light.

Bro. D. G. W. Ellis has been asking for light on some of the acts of the Conference Missionary Board. And he has given some light himself in an array of facts and figures. That is all right. The people have a right to know where the money goes that they contribute, and when you are handling money let there be light, full light, not twilight.

Bro. Ellis' inquiry may help the Board in their difficult duties. They are not infallible men; they have made mistakes, no doubt; they don't hold that their acts are above criticism. The fund placed in their hands, I think, ought to be appropriated with great care, and with economy. It is hard to raise the amount needed, and what is raised ought to be used economically, and where it will accomplish the most good. This fund is not to be confounded with our Conference collection; and if the Board use it in that way, they lay themselves liable to censure. The fund is to help weak works, and not to help needy men. If a brother breaks down suddenly, be he ever so worthy and ever so needy, the Board has no right to help him out of that fund. Though they make their actions legal by improvising for him a sort of temporary domestic mission, it is, nevertheless, a dishonest act.

The presiding-elder case that Bro. Ellis referred to displeased many of the brethren. I don't know all the circumstances in that case. I think our presiding elders ought to be our best and strongest men, and I think they ought to be paid good salaries—at least, as good as the same class of men receive in other parts of our work. A difference in salary seems to be the point where the shoe pinches; and why this difference, is where the light is needed.

I suppose a difference in men will in some measure explain it. Do you say we are all brethren and servants of the same Lord, working in a common cause, and why so differently remunerated? There is a man here working at $1 per day. He has a wife and four children. He pays house rent, feeds and clothes his family and helps to support the domestic missions out of that dollar. I wish he could get better wages, for he is a good man and he is hard pressed; but I don't know a place on earth where he could do any better than here. Another man here gets $5 per day, and he need not stay here a day longer unless he wants to, for he can command the same wages at several other places. He is a very different man from my first friend. He is, perhaps, no better man, but he is a more useful man. Ability and availability has its worth in every market.

Among the preachers, some are in much greater demand than others. The difference in their ability, their manners, their tact, is the cause of this. Some men not so able have the tact that wins success, while others much more able are greatly hindered by an anti-tact. Many preachers of good ability fail of full success, because they lack energy; others of meager gifts succeed finely, because they are, to use a Western word—hustlers. I know a preacher that does, I verily believe, twice the work that I do. And I know several others not far behind him in labors. Some others don't do half as much as I do; pardon me for saying so. The man most able to work is not always the man that works the most. I know a little old crippled preacher, dim of vision and hard of hearing, that does every part of his work as well as any man in his Conference. He is as well-posted in church literature and the news of the day, I think, as any man among us. He is one of the very best pastors we have. He keeps things in order about the personage premises, keeps his garden well worked, though he has to work it crawling around on his knees. I doubt if there is a man in our Conference that does more know-work than he does. I feel ashamed when I contrast myself with him. We great, large, hearty—and shall I say, lazy—young men ought to stand with our heads off in his presence.

I know a very large, stout, healthy young man—well, I won't describe him; but will just say he is not out of his A. B. C.'s in energy. He is an unlucky young man, and happens always to fall into little missions. If a man enters the Conference, as I did, in middle life, and is poorly equipped in the way of culture, has a wife and four or five children, he is in the race at a great disadvantage with the well-educated and bright young man that is unencumbered. Your availability, here as everywhere else, more than your mere goodness, or the size of your family, affects your salary. Though I think the appointing power in some measure considers the size of a man's family, ten children, however, is not sufficient to procure a fine appointment for a preacher unless he has some other qualities that make him the suitable man.

Here favoritism, partiality, fortuitous occurrences, may have some influence in shaping our salaries. A preacher said to me once: "Charge never pay me what they pay other men. I have frequently been sent to works that are in the habit of paying $400 or $500, and they pay me about $200 to $250." I suppose all have noticed this. So the mere difference in the salaries would not prove an injudicious distribution of the fund. We must look beyond this for the fault, if there is a fault. I don't say that the distribution of the domestic mission fund is always wise; but I do believe the Board does the best they can with the lights before them, and we need more light. The policy of the Board is to put the money where it will pay best. If $300 is appropriated for a few years, and a fine self-supporting work is built up at that point, we think the money is as well spent as an appropriation of $75 or $100 to some mission annually where there is no hope of doing more than supplying the gospel regularly to the poor.

I know a work that was a city mission a short time ago, with a rather large appropriation from the Domestic Board. Now it is a good station, and pays domestic missionary money enough to keep up C—Mission—that is, not far from it. This C—Mission is among my earliest recollections. The first Methodist preacher I have any remembrance of went from our circuit to C—Mission nearly a half-century ago. With some change of boundary, and sometimes of name, it has continued there until to-day. Year after year $75 or $100 has been appropriated, helping some old preacher, usually a supply from the local ranks, in the close of his labors, or some inexperienced young man, poorly equipped, to begin his. A larger appropriation would accomplish nothing, for there is nothing there to build on with. Now, at those points where something is to be done, you must have the man there that can do something. If you don't send a strong, active man to those places, you need not send any. It would be a waste of the fund, hurtful to the map, and do the work no good. It is very unfortunate to the man to place him where he can't sustain himself. Meroy is shown to many of us just at this point that we fail to appreciate.

But these active, vigorous men are in demand. If a presiding elder has such a one, on a work that pays $600, and they want him back, and then other similar works in his district ask for him, he is unwilling to send him to a mission that pays only $200, unless there is, at least, an appropriation of $300. He feels it would be unjust to the man. And if his popular turn and multitudinous labors cause the people to double their gifts, and they pay him $400, though he has no family, how can we help the matter? Would it do for the Board to reconsider his case and give him now only $100, and give the other $200 to the slow and needy brother with a wife and seven children on some C—Mission?

"Take another case: A presiding elder has a preacher on a work that says, 'Don't send him back to us; we will not support him,' and several other works in his district say to him, 'Don't send him to us.' This presiding elder goes into the cabinet praising this good brother, and saying that he is in trouble about him, for he can't find a work in his district that will exactly suit him. 'Can't you find a place for him in your district?' 'No!' 'Can't you?' 'No! Unless I give him C—Mission.' 'That won't do, brother; he has a wife and six children.' 'What will they pay him there?' 'If he takes well with them, perhaps, $300, and there is an appropriation of $100.' At last the presiding elder has to consent for his men to go to C—Mission. He is sad over it, for he knows how he will take. He knows he will not get the $300; but what can he do. This is a sad case. I wish it was only a fancy sketch.

I know a preacher to-day. He is a good, sensible, but slow man. It has, for the twelve years that I have been somewhat familiar with the work of the cabinet, been difficult to get for him any sort of an appointment that would fairly support him. In this time he was sent to one good work; but at the end of the first year he rebelled against his return. This brother feels that the presiding elders have treated him badly, and every work he is sent to feels the same way toward the sub-bishops.

ONE OF THE BOARD.

A Liberal Offer.

Few men are so liberally used in the advancement of enterprises in and out of the church, and yet so poorly remunerated for services rendered, as are Methodist preachers. For the most part, their salaries are barely sufficient to meet the necessary demands of their families; and yet none but themselves know how much of that, and of their more precious time, is spent in answering the demands made upon them, with no compensation save the consciousness of having done some good to others. This is called laying up treasures in heaven, and is all very nice; yet it is often the case that it would be well if others would lay up a little treasure for themselves, and allow the preacher to spend some of his for the comfort of his family. Preachers' wives and children do not wish their husbands and fathers to be the only rich men in heaven.

President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College, appreciating what the preachers have done and are still doing for the college, makes this offer to them:

"If you have a daughter whom you wish to educate, I will furnish her board, tuition in the English branches, washing, fuel, lights, medical and fuel fees, for the entire session, for one hundred dollars." And in addition to the fact that he offers to his patrons advantages equal to any female college in the South, with a conservatory of music and art under the management of the best-equipped and most skillful teachers that money can secure, he makes it possible for them to greatly assist their pastors without one cent of additional cost in this proposition to the preachers: "I will allow you a commission of ten dollars for every pupil who comes through your influence, and who pays the catalogue rates." Thus, without any sacrifice of your daughter's interest, you can aid your pastor in the education of his daughter, without any additional cost to you.

President Fitzhugh says he does not make this offer to the preachers as a charity, but as a just remuneration for what they have done and are still doing for the college; and that as the patronage of the college will justify, he will do yet more for them. Such a spirit is worthy the consideration of our people.

Louisiana Annual Conference Holiness Association.

In reading postal-card reports from the work in the last issue of the ADVOCATE, I notice one from Bro. Van Valkenburgh, our Conference colporteur. In this card he mentions, among other things, the fact of his having attended the Holiness Association of the Louisiana Annual Conference, at New Iberia, La.

Without going into a discussion for or against Holiness Associations, as to the good they may or may not do, I want to say, There is no such thing in existence as "The Louisiana Annual Conference Holiness Association." The Louisiana Annual Conference, as a Conference, has at no time in its history organized, set apart or endorsed any such association as that referred to in Bro. Van Valkenburgh's card. Very few of the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference, I am happy to say, belong to any such association. To call an association that may meet somewhere in the State of Louisiana, "The Louisiana Annual Conference Holiness Association," is, to say the least of it, misleading. I hold that no one has the right to call the meeting of a few of the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference, in what they term a "Holiness Association," "The Holiness Association of the Louisiana Annual Conference."

Suppose that a few of the members of the Louisiana Conference should become mightily convinced that the cause of education was being neglected by our Conference, and of their own motion should call a meeting to promote the cause of education, would they have the right to name their association "The Louisiana Annual Conference Educational Association?" I answer, No; not until it was endorsed by the Conference in open session, thereby becoming, in some sense, the creature of the Conference.

The Louisiana Annual Conference has never in any way endorsed this "Holiness Association." It is in no sense the creature of the Louisiana Annual Conference; consequently, it can in no way properly claim to be "The Holiness Association of the Louisiana Annual Conference."

The Descent of the Spirit.

Acts II, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth."—John, xvi, 13.

The disciples had waited ten days since the ascension of our Lord to the coming of the Holy Ghost. At the regular hours for temple service they assembled there; in the large upper room at Jerusalem, set apart for their use, they communed with each other and prayed, in a state of earnest expectancy. They were ready for great spiritual blessing—ready to receive, ready to use it.

Pentecost (from a Greek word meaning "fiftieth") was "fifty days after the day following the Passover Sabbath." The Mosaic festival (see Lev. xxiii, 15, 16) of Pentecost was at the completion of the harvest, a season of joy and of thanksgiving. It was appropriate that the "harvesting of souls," by the power of the Holy Ghost, should begin then.

Vers. 1, 2. No doubt the fact that Pentecost had come increased the expectancy of the disciples (to whom there were one hundred and twenty) inasmuch as it was an important day among the Jews. They had been praying earnestly and waiting confidently, in pious unity with one another. Suddenly the Spirit of God came upon them, with a sound "as of a rushing, mighty wind." There was no wind—only a sound. Wind was an emblem of the Spirit (John, iii, 8; xx, 22; Acts, xxvii, 9), and the sound, filling the house, was the announcement to them of his coming.

Vers. 3, 4. The disciples were witnesses for Christ. This power necessary would, the Lord had promised, be given after the Holy Ghost came upon them. As the "sound of wind," indicated the coming of the Spirit, so the "appearance of tongues like as of fire" indicated the effect purpose of his coming; that they, being endowed with power, might proper witnesses for Christ. First symbol of fervency, energy, spiritual force. There was no real flame—only the appearance of it, tongues in shape.

All were to be witnesses, and so sat upon each, old and young, male and female. Immediately, under power of the Spirit, all began speak; not each in his own accustomed way, but in other language just as the Spirit gave power. The whole scene was miraculous. It expressed the power and agency which the gospel is to be preached to all men; it was prophetic of preaching of the gospel to "every creature."

Vers. 5. Many had come to Jerusalem to spend their old age; many others had come up to feast. The more devout would most apt to come.

Vers. 6. Some, who were near house when the "sound" came, were amazed, and rushed together to ascertain the cause; others came after the rumor of the strange things had spread over the city. Each heard, in his own language, "the wonderful works of God."

Vers. 7, 8. Judea Israel—"had gone to his own place"—Judean; the eleven were Galilean; were, also, the majority of the hundred and twenty. The impression would be, on strangers, that all were from Galilee, where the average intelligence and culture was lower than in Judea. That Galilee should have this wonderful power truly amazing.

Vers. 9-11. The list is intended to show how completely the nations were represented. The idea is that wherever a man might have come to be heard, from Galilean lips, "works of God" proclaimed in own language.

Vers. 12. No wonder they were amazed; and, being "devout men no wonder that the amazing inquiry and—as will appear later—to conversion to Christ.

The church is a spiritual force, as it depends upon and is used by Holy Ghost. All other sources of sorts of power are insufficient. Power and unity, and patient end expectation, now, as then, are the conditions of his coming.

No one is a competent witness for Christ who has not received from the Holy Ghost. This power never given to an unconvinced heart. You are a Sunday-school teacher have you been converted? Have you sought spiritual power that you witness for Christ before your class? If those who have been long Jesus for three years needed spiritual power in order to witness him, how much more do you need

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT.

CONDUCTED BY REV. J. P. DRAKE.

Why Are His Chariot Wheels Delayed?

We do not allude to Sisera's at this time, but to the impediments on the highway which the King of all the earth has thrown up across the continents. Why does not the car of salvation roll on in triumphal progress to the ends of the earth? With the world's wealth in the hands of nominal Christians; with railroads and steamship lines crisscrossing the world, while electricity, as a handmaid, on their movements; with an opulence of talent and education among the members and ministers of the Christian Church, why should millions of heathen still "in darkness bow down to wood and stone?" An easy answer, and largely correct, would be that the majority of Christians are themselves still howling before the idol which brought woe to Israel at Sinai's foot. The golden calf is yet the guide back into Egypt of many who have once crossed the Red Sea and started well toward Canaan's fair and happy land. But the worship of this creature is not generally in so direct a way, or so palpable a form that it can be discerned and discarded by the devotee. We are willing to regard themselves as being regarded in the sordid light of a money-loving or miserly life. It comes rather in the insidious form of devotion to something that the possession of wealth may procure. We imagine the desire for fine clothing, houses, equipage, etc., for pleasant food, drink, etc. These forms of self-indulgence are so common, almost universal, that we take them as matters of course. Indeed, they are so seldom rebuked from the pulpit, that the preacher to-day who denounces these things is regarded as a fanatic. Information is looked on as a fanaticism in modern nomenclature, "a crank." We shall cease to cry aloud against special sin of the age, and content ourselves with a general declaration against covetousness, lest we offend the sensibilities of some of our chief (7) in the church of God? God forbid! It is true that an exhortation to self-denial for Christ's sake does not come with much grace from lips that are stained with tobacco juice or lips that are clogged with narcotic smoke, nor should the man who indulges his appetite for expensive food, whose in amount or quality, have the nerve to preach a Christ-like self-abnegation to the people. Nay, rather let him go and sit at Jesus' feet, and learn that true love delights in such sacrifice as will enable him to help others.

Controlling all sensual and vain desires in ourselves, brethren of the ministry, we shall be able, with open and unobscured face, to proclaim the whole truth to an easy and self-indulgent people. How dare we hold our peace longer when it is known and fully accepted that our church membership many times more on tobacco and stuff than they do to bring the word to Christ; our women spend more on gawags, ribbons and expensive girdles to belt the world with an army of missionaries. Where is the boasting, while this reproach rests on the stigma on the character of our Christianity! Brethren, let us all remember. Judgment must begin at the house of God.

We would call attention of all our members, superintendents and teachers to Sabbath-school—not excluding others—for God's cause—to a beautiful plan for enlisting the young in the work of paying off the missionary debt. This plan was devised by our beloved and consecrated Sister Daisy Lambuth, from whom all needful cards, cards, etc., can be had. A beautifully decorated card, with form of name and golden text from Scripture, supplied at most reasonable rates.

The "Penny Helper's Card" has one dollar small stars outlining the form of the large star. As each penny (one cent) is collected, a pin is to be thrust through one of these small stars. When the one hundred cents have been collected, and all the small stars punctured, the card held up to the light shows streams of beauty from above. Above all, the light of new spiritual life will beam on the heart and of the collector or giver.

Brethren, push the plan! Address Daisy Lambuth or Miss Kate Lambuth, at Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

The Japanese in San Francisco.

The Japanese community in this city, and surrounding town numbers about 200. This small colony receives additions by every steamer from Japan. They began to come about ten years ago in very small numbers. They are all young men, except one or two of women, and mostly students, seeking for something from the West to enrich and beautify their home land. Still there are some merchants and laborers among them. Those who push out home into a new and distant country are usually self-reliant, energetic, and energetic, much above the

For some time this renewing and strengthening power was confined chiefly to church members, though many sinners were being converted all the time. About one year ago, however, the brethren, filled with the new wine of the Spirit, went forth to testify among the unsaved. They met with startling success, and rejoiced with unspeakable joy. Within the past six months more than 400 have been hopelessly converted. Of this number 188 have been baptized and received into the church. But few of these have been converted in the regular preaching services. In private rooms, in class meetings, in the field at work, in the quiet places, the great transaction was done. It is a personal work. Two things, the two great facts of the Bible, sin and salvation, have been preached and held up to the Japanese, and pressed upon the conscience and the heart. Conviction of sin, and in most cases intense suffering, followed by faith in Christ and rapturous delight, are the usual characteristics of the revival.

The believers carry forward the work with great energy, both in the city and country. They meet and welcome the comers by every vessel. All the clubs and lodging-houses are regularly visited. For months past they have printed and circulated over 3,000 tracts each month. These have been prepared here, with special reference to the needs of their people.

Many workers now in Japan were converted here, and many more are being raised up to glorify God in Japan.

Chinese Mission in San Francisco.

Our first convert was baptized in 1871; since then 394 adults have been admitted to church membership. At least 90 per cent. of these converts remain faithful. Of the 5,000 scholars who have passed through our schools, hundreds who have not had the courage to confess Christ before men have, in theory at least, accepted the great doctrines of the Bible, and have forever broken with idolatry. The open air services, in which other missions take a part, are full of interest and encouragement. It was an impressive scene last Sabbath afternoon to see 400 Chinese gathered around our preacher, the Rev. Chan Hon Fan, to hear the gospel on the open street. On the very pavement that a few days before had been red with the blood of murder, and under the rooms of a highland society, the crowd stood for an hour while this brave young preacher preached on "Resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also," and openly denounced the murderous societies that had disgraced their nation and terrorized over China.

Recently a Chinese convert, of San Francisco, who refused to reveal his name to Rev. Dr. Masters, handed him a little package, directing him to expend the amount in securing a native Chinaman to preach the gospel in China. It embodied nearly all of his earthly possessions. The package contained $100 in gold coin.—Rev. F. J. Masters, D. D.

Protestantism Looking Up.

"Never perhaps, since the Reformation," writes a French lady—Miss Bertrand, the daughter of M. Bertrand—"has there been such a religious awakening throughout France. Workers of the great cities, Paris, Lyons, Marseilles, coal miners of the North, peasants of Western France are thirsting for a pure religion. In a hilly region in the centre of France the whole country seems to be ripe for the preaching of the gospel. Through the courageous testimony of a Protestant postmaster whole families were converted and meet together to pray and sing and to spread the good news. Some peasants walk miles to attend the meetings. 'The work at St. Aubin,' writes one, 'almost makes me weep for joy.' One year ago there was not a single Protestant there, and now sometimes there are 300 present at the morning service. They are sincere, for recently the mayor assembled them and addressed them somewhat as follows: 'If we want to be helped we must help ourselves first. We sadly need a chapel and we are poor. I will give $500. I have no money,' said one man, 'but I have a beautiful oak tree worth $50, which I will give.' 'I,' said a third, 'have a quarry of stone worth $40, and will give it.' A fourth said, 'I will give my horses and men to carry the oak tree and the stones.' And together they gathered $1,000." Such is the cheering intelligence taken from the Congregationalist.

Great Missionary Conference Next Year in Japan.

At a meeting of the Central Japan Missionary Association, held on the fifteenth instant, in Osaka, it was decided that a general missionary conference, to be composed of Protestant evangelists missionaries in Japan, be held in 1893, to discuss the religious interests, prospects, and other important subjects pertaining to the cause of Christianity in Japan. A few present at the meeting were not in favor of a conference, but after the question had been put to the vote, and it was found that a large majority were in favor of holding a conference, these declared themselves ready to do all they could to further the object desired by the majority.—Exchange.

Some one wrote Chaplain McCabe, asking him to take stock in a silver mine which was to be worked in the interest of missions and church extension. His reply was as follows: "We have two mines already, which we are working with great success. One of them is 'Self-denial,' situated in the valley of Humiliation; the other is 'Consecration,' which is entered on the heavenly side of the book. Neither of these are glorious mines! Their riches are inexhaustible. There is enough in them to bring the world to Christ."—Missionary Review.

World-Wide Missions has this to say of a Hindoo-Christian belonging to the North India Mission: "The Rev. Ibrahim Solomon is a remarkable man. He came to Rev. Dr. Parker thirty years ago, a wandering Jew. One of our native Christians entered into a discussion with him concerning the Messiah, and kept him in his company for a few days. Finally, the native Christian young man said to Dr. Parker, 'If we could find that Jew some work, I believe that his study of the Gospels would lead to his conversion.' Dr. Parker at once employed him as a personal teacher to aid him in reviewing the Hebrew Bible, at $2 per month. He was a splendid Hebrew scholar. The result was his conversion. He afterward married a noble Christian woman, a native of India, and has a beautiful family. One son is now entering our ministry. After several years he was sent to his present field to open missionary work. There was literally nothing there in the way of a church. He now has Christians in more than 100 villages; has over 400 Christian workers; has 1,701 members and preachers, a Christian community of 1,436, and has 327 Christian children in school. He has the evangelistic zeal of an apostle. He made out of nothing an entire presiding elder's district, and has raised up so many workers that at the last Conference Bishop Thoburn was advised to make him presiding elder over the work he had created. This was accordingly done, and he now rides at the head of his forces with the zeal of a crusader."

FRANCE.—The work of the Salvation Army in France is conducted at 216 stations and outposts, in 23 of the departments of France and 10 of the Swiss cantons. There are 430 French and Swiss officers aided by 300 local officers. Three Salvation papers—2 in French, and 1 in German for North Switzerland—are issued, and 24,000 copies are weekly set before the people in every possible way. The hymn book, recently published, has reached a sale of 34,000 copies in the year.

The first subscription for mission purposes in modern days was made by Sir Walter Raleigh in 1589, when he gave £100 to the merchants to whom he resigned the Virginia patent, "in special regard and zeal of planting the Christian religion in those barbarous places."

Woman is most beautiful when she is most really herself and the least conscious of it.

Nothing so much contributes to self-consciousness as the wearing of artificial hair to hide the ravages of disease or the effects of neglect. On the other hand, how much does the possession of fine natural hair contribute to ease and freedom which is as attractive in the mature woman as in the girl still in her teens?

There is nothing known that so effectually strengthens the hair, and gives healthful tone to the scalp, as Louisiana Creole Hair Restorer, which has been used for years in all the principal cities of the South by women noted for the beauty of their hair. It is one of the very few preparations that will cause the hair to grow, restore its color, and which is at the same time perfectly harmless. One bottle will convince. It is made by the Mansfield Drug Company, Memphis, Tenn.

A kind word costs but little, but it may bless the one to whom it is spoken all day. Nay, have not kind words been spoken to you which have lived in your heart through years, and borne fruit of joy and hope? Let us speak kindly to one another.—The Sunlight.

Dandruff is due to an enfeebled state of the skin. Hall's Hair Renewer quickens the nutritive functions of the skin, healing and preventing the formation of dandruff.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown. Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla. Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get Lynchings.

Ever and anon the telegraphic dispatches bring to our notice the perpetration of this most lawless of acts. The horrible tragedy was enacted in McComb City quite recently. A cold-blooded murder was committed one night and not discovered until next morning. The supposed perpetrators were caught, and one was hanged without even a formal trial; but the sheriff succeeded in spiriting away the other supposed culprits and—saved their necks. (This town does not stand alone with this dark blot upon her garments. Nor does Mississippi or Louisiana, nor the Southern States, though some of our fair- (?) minded Northern brethren would make it so appear. But if our telegraphic dispatches can be relied upon to any extent whatever, there is scarcely a State in this Union where such tragedies have not been enacted more than once. However, it becomes us to deal with facts at our own doors, and not with those thousands of miles away, as some others have done.

We profess to be a Christian people, governed by Christian laws, and the question looms up before us in a most formidable manner. Is it not time the Christian people of this country were rising up in righteous indignation and putting a stop to such barbarous proceedings? Can we, as Christians, count ourselves guiltless with such things happening in our very midst, at our very doors, under our very eyes, and yet remain inactive? No! no! What are we here for if not as messengers of light and opponents of evil? But do we oppose when we simply keep silent? Opposition is an active, not a passive principle. To say we condemn such lawlessness is speaking but lightly, and we know we voice the sentiments of all the best people of our patronizing Conferences—yea, of our country; but the time has come for our opposition to be felt.

The primary cause of lynch law is the tardiness and uncertainty of our courts of justice. Could we depend upon our courts in every instance to mete out justice to every accused, whether guilty or innocent, and that at the earliest possible opportunity, there is scarcely a crime in the great catalogue of crimes of sufficient heinousness to incite a quiet community to mob violence. But the people have lost confidence in our courts. Why? There are two answers to this question. First, our present jury system is so very defective that in some instances it becomes a farce. Second, two often our attorneys are actuated by greed of gain rather than justice—be it said to their shame. Could we have on our juries only men of intelligence, men capable of judging, men with consciences, a great step would be taken in the right direction. Who does not voice the sentiment, and say, Amen! to the scathing rebuke recently administered by a certain judge of Memphis, Tenn., to one of his juries, who brought in a verdict contrary to the facts in the case? "The people looked to you for a vindication of justice, and you defrauded them," was the substance of this rebuke, and he drove them from the courtroom. We could cite instances parallel with this in our own part of the country. There is scarcely a man of intelligence and refinement who is willing to stand by the side of the average jury of to-day and call them "his peers."

And then the trickery in law. Shrewdness, alacrity in picking flaws; subterfuges of all kinds—who has not seen them? Trickery is too often looked upon as essential to success in the practice of law. Anything to gain the case. We know an attorney whose fame has spread far beyond the bounds of his own State, who is said to have remarked that he could clear almost any criminal in the country if he had plenty of money to pay him. This is enough. It is no use to go further. Here we evidently have the primary cause of mob law—lack of confidence in the courts. They are nearly as uncertain as the wind for the above reasons.

As to the remedy, we do not propose to deal with that, as it is out of our line. Suffice it to say, every Christian man owes it to himself, his country, his God, to cast an honest ballot for the man who will dare face the evils and conscientiously set about remedying them. It can be done. It will be done, if we vote as we pray. Then let Christians of all classes, ages and conditions frown down the corruptions too often practiced at the bar. Something ought to be done, must be done, and Christians are the people to do it. Let us get at it.

On the Atlantic.

MR. EDITOR: On Saturday morning, at 6:30 o'clock, June 11, the good ship Servia, of the Cunard Line, loosed her cables, and amid the waving of handkerchiefs and tender good-byes, of friends, on deck and on the dock, swung out into the river, and turned her prow to the open sea. The sky was cloudless, the morning air was crisp, the passengers were merry, and everything betokened a pleasant voyage. As the tall buildings of our greatest city faded from view, and we sped past the Statue of Liberty, and on by Sandy Hook, and met the full swell of the ocean, I felt a stronger love for my native land than ever before. If she has not so long a history as the countries I hope to see, it is far more brilliant, and eclipses the world in her sublime destiny. She has yet too much movement to have monuments, and is too enterprising to have ruins.

The Servia is a staunch vessel, 530 feet in length, of four thousand tons burthen, and has capacity for over fourteen hundred passengers. She is not the largest and fastest of the line, lacking some of the modern improvements that give speed and popularity to Atlantic travel; but she makes fair time, has excellent appointments, is ably officered, and furnishes every imaginable comfort. She is lighted by electricity, serves four meals a day in the best English style, and rides the waves so admirably that her praise is on the lips of all the passengers. It is said the Cunard Company have two new vessels on the docks that purpose to break the record of the world—bridging the ocean in five days. This line was established in 1840, and claims the distinction of never having lost a passenger. One of her new and strongest boats went down a few years ago, but every soul escaped safely to land.

Our ship's company is, on the whole, most agreeable. My room-mate is an accomplished professor in Vassar College—that chief school for girls in

New York State. We have several ministers on board, a missionary and his family en route to Turkey, college professors going abroad for recreation and study, ambitious young women proposing to perfect themselves in music and art, business men bent on better bargains and the latest styles, Englishmen homeward bound, and many others "on to Europe" because it is the latest fad of their section. Mr. Edward Loyd, the great tenor of England (alas! for my ignorance; I never heard of him before) is returning from an engagement in "the States" which netted him the neat sum of $4,000. Lord Onslow, a short, well-built, red-whiskered, bald-headed, "modest gentleman" of about forty-five, is going home from his five years' service as governor of New Zealand. A captain of the English army on the retired list carrying a wooden leg, and accompanied by his pretty, pleasant, little wife, is peering his native shore from a trip around the world. An interesting old gentleman, who has spent twenty-seven years in Ceylon engaged in coffee culture, is going back to Old England for the remnant of his days, and at length find sepulture among his friends. And thus the ends of the earth have come together on the decks and in the salons of an Atlantic steamer.

Two gentlemen from Dallas, Texas, engaged in the cotton business, are the only persons from the South I have had the pleasure to meet. A surgeon-general of the English army, now on the retired list, and residing in Ireland, I have found a most agreeable and intelligent traveling companion. He was the chief surgeon of the forces under Sir Garnet Wolseley, which started, you remember, to Khartoum for the relief of Gen. Gordon. From him I heard many thrilling incidents of that bootless expedition—how they encountered the fierce heat of the desert, endured the long, weary marches, carried water for great distances with which to sparingly satisfy thirst, and how they sustained life on Armour's Chicago beef. He is something of a military critic, and told me it was the unreserved opinion of most military men in Europe that Gen. Lee displayed more genuine genius than any commander on either side, during our late war between the States. He is returning from an extended tour of the United States, which embraced a month in Florida, a glance at New Orleans, a trip through Texas on to California, and most of the Northern cities. Quite agreeably was he impressed with our Southern parallels, and was amazed at the recuperative energy of our people.

On Sunday morning, at ten o'clock, the service of the Church of England was read by the ship's surgeon. He has the broad English pronunciation, but altogether read very well, and the solemn service was much enjoyed. It gave comfort and sense of security to see the captain, officers and crew join so reverently in prayer and praise. To me it was an hour of great spiritual profit.

On Wednesday we had a funeral at sea—in many respects the saddest service I ever witnessed. A young man of about twenty-three years—a bar-tender by profession—after several days of unrelieved agony died of delirium tremens. He came on board just from a long debauch, became violently ill at once, his trouble being aggravated, I suppose, by the surging of the sea, and finally passed away, pursued, in his diseased imagination, by the most horrid monsters of the mighty deep. He was placed in a plain, wooden coffin, stained black, a few faded flowers were laid thereon by some gentle hand, the funeral service was read by a Catholic priest, one of the passengers, and the poor fellow was lowered into the remorseless waves. Some heart's love was buried in the sea that day. With all his faults, he had good traits, and there will be sorrow in an Irish home when this vessel steams into Queens-town harbor with one passenger left far away in mid-Atlantic. He had various little presents purchased for the different members of the family and, no doubt, had planned to give dear old mother and sisters great joy on the occasion of his expected coming. But, alas! how vain his hopes! How crushed their hearts!

Every day out except one has been quite cool, requiring the warmest winter clothing. For two days, when off the banks of Newfoundland, it was too chilly to stay much on deck.

There is always a sensation when another vessel is sighted or a spouting whale discovered. It is some relief to our sense of isolation—an assurance that other living things are walking these waves—that on this world of waters there are other venturesome human feet. There is strength in such companionship.

Our ship's log shows a daily run of from 374 to 383 miles. We have had a smooth sea and a pleasant voyage—no storms to encounter and no rough billows to ride. A few days we had white caps and a number were sick; but I have been able to occupy my seat at the table with every sound of the gong. If a good Providence continues thus to favor, we will reach Queens-town to-morrow night, after a run of seven and a half days. I shall make short stops at Cork and Dublin, and hasten to Belfast for a look upon the Irish Methodist Conference, which met on yesterday. Fraternally,
CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

P. S.—The Irish coast is now in full view, and in a few hours the Queenstown passengers will be ashore. As opportunity offers I will send you notes of observations.

Christian Work in Our Colleges.

During the last days of June there was assembled in the city of Knoxville, Tenn., one of the most important and significant gatherings that has ever been held in the South. This gathering is known as the Convention of College Y. M. C. A. Workers, and is the first of its kind ever held in our section of the country. Several years ago the idea of uniting all the Y. M. C. A.'s in our colleges was conceived, and so favorable was the impression made by this idea that to-day there are over four hundred such associations banded together in the inter-collegiate movement. The very purpose of the movement stamps it as one of the most powerful evangelistic agencies of the times. It has two great aims: first, to guard, develop and train the young men who enter college as Christians; and, second, to lead non-Christian students to Christ.

It has been found by experience that the day of a boy's arrival at college is almost invariably a crisis in his life. He has been severed from the sheet-anchor of home and parental influence, and the slightest breeze may shift forever the course of his life. What is to become of his character if there be no direct efforts made for holding it to the right? Now, no agency can do so much for such a boy as one made up of college students. They can appeal to him; they can enlist his sympathy. Valuable as are the aids afforded by the churches and the religious organizations which may be in the place where the college is situated, nevertheless, the most potent influence that can be brought to bear upon the new student entering college is that of the students themselves. He finds himself on common ground with them; they have common sympathies; and a helping hand is not far distant when true sympathy is present. But the work required to make this influence felt in the right way is not easy. To be done satisfactorily, there is need of the most careful equipment and the most consummate skill in applying the means.

To meet this demand for trained workers in the College Y. M. C. A.'s, the Intercollegiate Committee has instituted the idea of a Summer School. This idea in its inception is due to Mr. Moody, who, in 1886, invited the college men of the country to meet at his home in Northfield, Mass. From there the movement grew and extended into the West, and at Lake Geneva, Wis., a Summer School has been held for two years past. The enthusiasm engendered at the first meeting held by Mr. Moody has spread all over the world, and now the Summer-school idea has been crystallized to a permanent institution in Germany, Scandinavia, Ceylon, Japan and India. This year for the first time one has been projected into our midst. There were present from a hundred and seventy-five to two hundred delegates from about forty of our Southern colleges, all representative Christian young men. One of the main features of the gathering was the attention given to Bible study.

The conferences which have been held from time to time in regard to the study of the Bible in our colleges have revealed a woful state of affairs in this particular. In over one-third of our colleges there is no opportunity for the study of the English Bible, whether as optional or compulsory. In a much less degree is there any systematic training. And all this in spite of the great historical and literary value of the Book. It ought to be a recognized falsity to call a man's education well-rounded when he has not an adequate conception of the Bible—the gem of English literature, and the most wonderful historical collection of which the world has any knowledge. Bible study is the ground-principle of the projectors of the Summer School. They are all men whose hearts and lives are deeply saturated with the truths of God's Word; with them the Bible is first, last and all the time.

The crying need of the world to-day is an intelligent conception of Bible truths and knowledge of Bible facts. The individual Christian needs it; the churches all need it; the world needs it; the great social questions that agitate the minds of political economists to-day need for their perfect solution but a proper conception of the scope and application of the truths of the Bible.

So that this one phase of the College Y. M. C. A.—and it is but one of many—is sufficient to commend it to all those who have any due regard for the spread of scriptural truth in the land. The Summer School is doing a grand work in this particular for the colleges. Meeting just at the close of the college year, plans are laid three months ahead for the work at the beginning of the Fall term. Necessarily, the limited time of twelve days precludes going over any great field in the various departments of Bible study; but the work that is done is systematic and thorough. Moreover, the greatest benefit of the scheme is in the new methods that are brought into practice and the enthusiasm that a gathering of such men "learned in the Scriptures," which compose the teaching force of the school, is designed to instill into the minds and hearts of those that attend.

If the Summer School becomes a permanent institution in the South—and from the success of the past one all the tendencies are in that direction—we have great cause of thankfulness to God that he has granted to us one more agency for the propagation of the gospel and the upbuilding of the church. The future of the church, as well as the country, lies in the hands of the college men. May this attempt to save them for Christ be blessed with the success that God gives!

The missionary character of our religion is seen in the fact that inactivity is the only thing that can kill faith. In the nature of things that which is inactive dies. Hence the command: "Go ye." The life of religion is bound up in those two little words.

NOTES.

In making estimates of the results of a preacher's work, this fact should not be forgotten: "It requires quieter as much skill to compel small results from meager resources as to bring forth great results from abundant means."

What curious things "conscientious scruples" sometimes are! "Did you ever analyze a set of them? If you have, we will warrant that you have seen many of them to resolve themselves into simple stubbornness, and nothing more."

As an itinerant preacher, can you appreciate the truth of this sentence taken from the Ram's Horn?

Elijah in one place all his life would very likely have been a failure. God has to move some men around a good deal to make a success of them.

Too much religion can no one have; but there are numerous side-tracks made by the devil and his helpers on any of which it is easy to get switched off if we are not watchful and humble. Religion keeps between extremes, and that which leaves the blessed middle ground is not religion, but one of the devil's side-tracks, and it is only a question of time as to when it will curve into the broad way of sin.—Florida Christian Advocate.

All successful preachers will tell you that the circulation of a religious paper within the bounds of their field of labor greatly assists them in their work. Reading Methodists continue the very backbone of the church. By keeping themselves posted on the movements of the church, our local membership may and do rightly appreciate the needs of Christ's Kingdom. Every preacher should preach an occasional sermon on religious literature, and should pray for the success of the religious press.—Western North Carolina Methodist.

It is reported that at a recent interview, Mr. Gladstone, on being asked what he regarded as the brightest hope for the future, replied:

I should say a maintenance of faith in the inextinguishable. This is the great hope of the future, the mainstay of civilization. And by that I mean a living faith in a personal God. I do not hold with "stream of tendency." After fifty years of public life I hold more strongly than ever this conviction, deepened and strengthened by long experience of the reality and the nearness and personality of God.

Our lamented Spurgeon, in his valued volume, "Lessons to my Students," condemns, in unmeasured terms, the "dignified, doctrinal, indignant, bombastic style of preaching," characteristic of some men. He calls it "Ore rotundo." When a reverend brother was blowing off steam in round, rolling and swelling manner, man in the aisle thought the preacher had swallowed a dumpling, but another man close by whispered: "No Jack, he ain't swallowed it; he's got it in his mouth a wobbling." One of these wobbling speakers, a young aspirant, once discoursed in a bombastic style on, "The expansive character of the human mind." Said he: "Yea, friends, the mind of man is so expansive that it can soar from star to star, from atom to atom, from hell to heaven, from cherub to cherub, and from seraph to seraph, and from thence to the centers of the dome of heaven." Old John Wesley used to describe all such flights as "the man tried to soar above his natural capacity, as 'grasping at the stars, and sticking in the mud.'"—Exchange.

In the Arkansas Methodist, of June 28, there is a report of a sermon preached by Bishop Wilson at Conway, Ark., in which occurs this paragraph. Yea, and women of wealth, read it with trembling.

God appropriates every dollar of your property to his purpose—if not with your consent, then against it; not in one way, then in another. You say you have the right of discretion in the matter. As between you and your have; but not between you and God. You have no right to invest dime except in harmony with the will of God. The man with $50,000 who brings $5, $20 or $100 to the altar, God and says, "This is all I have to offer," if he does not like to God, Ananias was did. Tens of thousands are proud in luxury, spending millions for vanity, gluttony and sensuality, mistaking a mere bagatelle to the use of the Holy Spirit; and yet datter themselves that they are on the way to heaven and sure of glory. Beware! lest a worse fate than that of Ananias overtake you!

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Carlinio says: "Genius is an immense capacity for taking trouble."

It grieves us to learn that our Brother, P. Drake and wife, of Shubuta, Miss., have been called to mourn the loss of their son, Howard.

A private letter to the editor contains this significant sentence: "The Sabbath was made for man as much as Eve was; Adam, Eve, Sunday—that is the order of the Lord's morales."

The corner-stone of Logansport Methodist Church will be laid July 17. Rev. Jas. M. Beard, D. D., officiating. Reduction of one-quarter will be given on the Houston and Shreveport railroad. All are invited.

We are in despair. We have often requested the brethren to send us short, crisp notices of their meetings. A brother has just sent us six closely written pages of note paper, and adds a postscript of five closely written pages on same paper. Alas! alas!

The Advocate will have a representative at the Seaboard Camp Ground, who will receive and receipt for subscriptions. A set of the Encyclopedia Britannica will also be on exhibition. Price of this set of 20 volumes and the Advocate one year, $7.50 cash. Take the trouble to see this wonderful set at the postoffice.

Rev. M. H. Moore, Columbia circuit, June 20: "Our second Quarterly Conference for Columbia charge was held at Hopewell Church on June 11 and 12. Sickness prevented our presiding elder, Bro. J. A. Ellis, from being with us. We missed him very much. Reported five infants baptized and twelve received into the church otherwise during the quarter. On Sunday we raised $150 in cash and good subscription toward paying off an indebtedness on the new church in which we worshipped for the first time that day. Owing partly to the scarcity of money in the country, finances are somewhat behind. We hope, however, to carry up a full report to Conference."

NOTES FROM OUR JACKSON OFFICE.

Tomatoes recently shipped from Crystal Springs to Liverpool brought sixteen cents a pound.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate is out in a brand "new and handsome head-gear." It is very becoming.

The missionaries of Shanghai have decided to invite the Y. M. C. A. to establish a secretary there for work among the Christian young men.—Missionary Reporter.

Religion in the heart, not Hebrew in the head, made American Methodism. Reading through gold glasses, on perfumed pages (tied with a ribbon), a sermonette will never shake sin out of soul. It is the age of the dress sword. The day of the claymore has passed. Then mourners wept. Now they trip to the chancel and touch the tips of the white fingers of the dear little pastor with a smile. And they are saved.—Richmond Advocate.

A recent writer in the St. Louis Christian Advocate shows that, in proportion to the population, six times as many negroes are lynched North as South. And the Pacific Methodist thinks an extra session of the M. E. General Conference should be called on account of the recent many lynchings and other lawless acts north of the Mason and Dixon line.

It is claimed that out of a school population of 13,000,000, nearly 5,000,000 young people are enrolled in some society of Christian work. If the leaders of this army of young workers could feel the responsibility of their work, and train up the children in the way they should go, what a mighty host of recruits would soon join in the great battle of right against wrong!

The Committee on "Plan of Work," at the recent Woman's Missionary Conference, in Vicksburg, brought in a resolution which was unanimously adopted, the import of which is:

Resolved, That no indirect methods be used in raising our funds, but that they be thank-offerings from our hearts.

This is a move in the right direction. Now, let all our church organizations resolve the same and stick to it, and we will have taken a very long step toward abolishing niggardliness in giving, and worldliness among the young.

At the annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, which closed a most delightful and profitable session in Vicksburg, last week, the following statistics were read by the corresponding secretary. We reproduce them, that they may be an encouragement to our sisters who were unable to attend:

Number of adult auxiliaries, 86; number of members, 2,000; young people's and juvenile societies, 20; number of members, 400; total number of societies, 106; total number of members, 2,400; number of life members, 27; subscribers to the Woman's Missionary Advocate, 400; subscribers to the Little Worker, 75; number of adult societies organized during the year, 12; number of adult societies reorganized, 3; number of juveniles organized, 1; increase in membership, 100.

Annual Meeting of the W. M. S. of the Mississippi Conference.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference met in its thirteenth annual session in Vicksburg, Miss., Saturday, June 25, 1892, at nine A. M. For nearly twenty-four hours ladies from various parts of the State had been arriving, and by the time of the opening quite a large delegation was in attendance. The president, Mrs. Lillie H. Wimberly, occupied the chair during the session, and the secretary, Miss Agnes Chrisman, showed much skill in keeping the records.

The Conference occupied two and a half days, exclusive of Sunday. The reports of the district secretaries and from the auxiliaries showed the society to be in a fine condition. While in a few instances affairs were not what might have been desired, nothing of a discouraging nature was developed. Many of the ladies have gone home more forcibly impressed with the magnitude and importance of this work than ever before. How could it be otherwise?

The annual sermon was preached Sunday, at eleven A. M., by Rev. B. F. Jones, president of Port Gibson Female College. After a short service at night, conducted by Bro. Jones, Miss Bettle Hughes, our returned missionary from China, addressed the large audience which had assembled to hear her. The presence of Miss Hughes has been a benediction to us all. Did she have the physical strength and time to visit each of our auxiliaries, an inspiration would be imparted to each, and the waste places would blossom and flourish as the rose.

One circumstance must not be omitted. On Monday evening the Conference was treated to an excursion on the river. Boarding the steamer Blanks Cornwell, they were carried several miles up the river to view an overgrown section of Louisiana, thence to the National Cemetery, and time was allowed to go over it. The trip occupied full three hours, and was the delightful surprise prepared by the Vicksburg auxiliary.

There were two essays read before the Conference, both of which deserve mention. One by Mrs. J. P. Drake, of Shubuta, and the other by Miss Addie Purnell, of Jackson. Both were replete with interest.

The officers for another year are as follows:

President, Miss Addie V. Marshall, Brookhaven; vice-president, Mrs. L. H. Wimberly, Wesson; recording secretary, Mrs. C. W. Cochran, Daleville; corresponding secretary, Miss Annie E. Linfield, Crystal Springs; treasurer, Miss Mary Andrews, Meridian; auditor, Mrs. T. L. Mellen, Meridian; editors, Mrs. E. D. Jones, Carlisle. District secretaries: Brandon—Miss Bettle Waits, Newton; Brookhaven—Miss Myra Magee, Wesson; Jackson—Mrs. B. F. Lewis, Jackson; Meridian—Miss Sallie Smylie, Meridian; Seashore—Mrs. J. S. Parker, Hattiesburg; Vicksburg—Mrs. W. B. Lewis, Vicksburg; Woodville—Mrs. P. A. Johnston, Jackson, La.

The next session will be held in Newton, Miss., convening Friday before the fourth Sunday in June, 1893.

We query if many are really too poor to take a religious newspaper. Why, a single hen fed on what is thrown from the kitchen would lay eggs enough for that purpose, to say nothing of what a brood of her chickens would bring.—Baptist Record.

It is not easy to be eloquent with a depleted purse and a menu reduced to porridge and salt bacon; though men who went supperless or dinnerless have stirred the hearts of their fellows with the power of their words, in oration and song. Genius is a sleek rascal, and does his best work on a good pay roll and with a respectable number of covers at each repast. You want good work out of your preacher; you demand that he should always be at his best. Reduce the temperature of his brain, and increase that of his heart, by keeping him free from care, and he can then give you his best in everything.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

What Governor Foster Discovered.

In my late canvass of the State, in every parish and community I met students and graduates of Centenary College. Their influence for good is felt everywhere in society, in business and official life. The alumni of Centenary College have filled the highest judicial stations in our State with credit and distinction. The most honored of the legal profession, the most eloquent divines, and the leaders in all the useful and dignified lines of life are of her sons. If I were called upon to say what school had left the greatest and best impress upon the society, business and government of Louisiana, I would unhesitatingly say—Centenary College.

OR, THE BIBLE AND ITS MISSION.

By Rev. L. L. PICKETT.

280 Pages, Cloth. Price, $1.00.

This book is in two parts. Part I, shows why we believe the Bible. This is good to put in the hands of infidels and skeptics, and will strengthen the faith of believers. It will make you know and love the Bible better.

Part II, gives us holiness as the "theme" of the Bible, that is to say, the mission of God's Word. It explains the passages that seem to contradict the doctrine, and for this reason, no other, ought to be in the hands of every worker. But it explains what holiness is, what it is not, how to get it, and its bearing on many other questions.

HOME LIFE.

WORK AND WAGES.

BY CHARLES EDWIN NICHOLAS.

The Time-Spirit cries from its cliff in the work "thy burden, O man, and more work is thy wages."

Rest is endeavor.

Then forward forever!

Every attainment is only a camp for the night.

When the daybreak comes pushing its beams through the mist,

Rebuilding the palace of light.

Then up and away toward the summit afar—

Toward the peak hanging dream-like and eerie,

Under the morning star.

The Christian Life a Mystery—A Standing Miracle of Grace.

The second blessing theory of exterminating inherited or inbred depravity from the body, as abiding in advance of conversion or regeneration, brings to light the fact that it is believed that nature is changed, in which case a holy life is expected to follow as a natural consequence; whereas, the Bible doctrine is, that it is a standing work of Christ wrought daily—a mystery which hath been hid from generations, but is now made manifest to his saints;

which is Christ in you, the hope of glory; whereunto I also labor, striving according to his working, which worketh in me mightily. (Col. 1, 26-29.)

Many have been misled to ascribe a miraculous work in conversion or regeneration to Christ, and have, therefore, looked for natural fruits; whereas, every day after is as much a mystery as the day of conversion. By the fall we lost the divine nature of our creation, and instead thereof there was "wrought in us all manner of concupiscence," so that it is constitutional with us to be sinful, by reason of which we are dead to God, dead to all righteousness—that is, void of righteousness both as to nature and life. So we may say, just as a sundered piece of iron is destitute of heat, so man's nature is destitute of righteousness. But when a fire is kindled in the stove, it expresses the heat of the fire; so when Christ dwells in our hearts by faith, he develops our dead humanity, or performs continually a resurrection of our lost manhood; so that, by our consent, we become mediums through which he shines and expresses his quickening humanity. In conversion the unclean spirit of the devil is cast out; but our nature, both soul and body, is left intact as fallen and sinful, helpless, and ever needing the quickening power of Christ. This must be, else our children could not be so fallen, which we know is the case.

St. John makes it very clear that to ascribe the Christian life as a natural result, rather than to the abiding presence of Christ in us, is the spirit of anti-Christ. (1 John iv.) If it is true, as professed by the above theory, that nature is changed, then the Christian life is a natural result; and while the change is ascribed to Christ as a mystery, yet the life is a natural result, and while the change is ascribed to Christ as a mystery, yet the life is a natural result, and while the change is ascribed to Christ as a mystery, yet the life is a natural result.

God's Love.

Human love may change. The friendship of last year has grown cold. The gentleness of yesterday has turned to severity. But it is never thus with God's love. It is eternal. Our experience of it may be variable, but there is no variability in the love. Our lives may change; our consciousness of his love may fade out; but the love clings forever; the gentleness of God abides eternal.

"For the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." There is never a movement, nor any experience in the life of a true Christian, from the heart of which a message may not lastingly be sent up to God, and back to which help may not instantly come. God is not off in some remote heaven merely. He is not away at the top of the long, steep ladder, looking down upon us in serene calm and watching us as we struggle upward in pain and tears. He is with each one of us on every part of the way. His promise of presence is an eternal tonic: "I am with thee." So "Thou, God, dost move" hoomes to the believer a most cheering and inspiring assurance. We are never out of God's sight for a moment. His eye watches each one of us continually, and his heart is in his eye. He comes instantly to our help and deliverance when we are in any need or danger.

The Right Kind of Religion.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I am working for a revival of religion—a religion which converts people, renews them in the spirit of their mind, creates them anew in Christ Jesus, delivers from the bondage of sin, injects new ideas, purer, better than the old; brings them out of the world, and separates them unto Christ; a religion which redeems a man from all sin, and sets him on fully living—our self-denial, imitating Christ, and prayer; which imbues his spirit with love, seasons his conversation with grace, and makes him a witness for the truth as it is in Jesus; an example, a model, an Israelite without guile or hypocrisy or wavering. In a word, let us, in the name of the Lord, have a revival of pure, unadorned religion—a religion which makes the church liberal, which lifts up the fallen drunkard, sets him upright on his feet, makes and keeps him sober; which erases the pride of life, the lust of the eye and the lust of the flesh, roots out the love of the world, and fills the soul with the love of the Father, a consistent, steadfast, uncompromising religion, always abiding in the work of the Lord. —Bishop Pierce.

An Unforgiving Spirit.

Do not carry an unforgiving spirit with you through all your life; it will hurt you more than anything else. It will destroy the happiness of many around you, yet its chief suffering ground will be found in your own heart. You hate your neighbor. You are his dwelling, one hundred and fifty yards away. Suppose you pass by a wood fire, and as you pass you pick a half-consumed brand from it, flaming and gleaming, and, thrusting it under your garment to hide it, you start for your neighbor's dwelling to burn it. Who gets the worst of it? You find your garments on fire and your own flesh burned before you can harm your neighbor. So he who carries an unforgiving spirit in his bosom. It stings his own soul like an adder shut up there. Forgive your enemies and get down on your knees and pray for them, and salvation will come into your own soul like a flood. "Father, forgive them." Sweet prayer and blessed example. —Rev. R. V. Lawrence.

Blind Eyes Opened.

A little boy was born blind. At last an operation was performed; the light was let in slowly. When, one day, his mother led him out of doors, and uncovered his eyes, and for the first time he saw the sky and earth, "Oh mother!" he cried, "why didn't you tell me it was so beautiful?"

She burst into tears, and said, "I tried to tell you, dear, but you would not understand me."

So it is when you try to tell what is in the Bible.

Unless the spiritual sight is opened, we can not understand.

The Psalmist prays, "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." —Selected.

MAN WHO MEANS BUSINESS.—The servants of God mean business. They do not play at preaching, but they plead with men. They do not talk for talking's sake, but they persuade for Jesus' sake. They are not sent into the world to tickle men's ears, nor to make a display of eloquence, nor to quote poetry. They are sent of God to lead men to the Father. They are sent of God to lead men to the Father. They are sent of God to lead men to the Father.

They have something to say which so presses upon them that they must say it. "Who is with me? I preach not the gospel!" They burn with an inward fire, for the Word of the Lord is as fire in their houses, consuming them. The truth presses them into its service, and they can not escape from it. If, indeed, they be the servants of God, they must speak the truth, which they have seen and heard. The servants of God have no feathers in their caps, but they are on their hearts. —Canadian Churchman.

THE FINEST BURN.—"While I was musing the fire burn," said the Psalmist. The preacher's message and meditation will yield little advantage to his flock until he reaches the burning point. No preacher should expect to succeed without a present practical knowledge of his hearers and of his Bible. He must have an ever-present and real sense of the sins and temptations, the wants and the woes, the inner life and the outward environment of his people. Then he must find in the Word of God the truths which will meet the emergencies as revealed in his study of that portion of human nature committed to his care. The people ought to receive help from the sanctuary, and to be strengthened out of Zion, and the minister ought to be largely the channel through which that help comes. —N. Y. Observer.

WHITE HAIRS.—White hairs have been called "flowers of the cemetery," but it is not better to think of them as a "streak of the dawn of the eternal day." And will not this thought tend to make us more patient and considerate toward those aged servants among whom our lot is cast? Often their waiting time is dreary. Old friends and companions have passed away, and these survivors are among the loneliest of the lonely. Their ways and their habits of thought can not be exactly those of younger folk. It will help us to brighten the close of their pilgrimage if we accustom ourselves to look upon them as having already seen "the dawn of the eternal day." —The Quiver.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

OFF FOR SLUMBERLAND.

Purple waves of evening play Upon the western shores of day. While hushes sail, so sale and free, Over the mystic Slumber Sea.

Their little boats are cradles light; The sails are curtains pure and white; The rudders are sweet lullabies; The anchors, soft and sleepy sighs.

They're outward-bound for Slumberland, Where shuffling dreams lie on the sand. Live whispering shells that murmur low, The rudders are sweet lullabies; The anchors, soft and sleepy sighs.

And there, among the dream-shells bright, The little ones will play all night, Until the sleepy tide turns—then They'll all come sailing home again!

—St. Nicholas.

MR. EDITOR: As I am a Mississippi boy, I have decided to write to the little Mississippi cousins from the beautiful "Rock City." My papa is pastor of the Methodist Church at Hattiesburg. He and mama and I are here on a few weeks' visit. I have seen many things interesting to a boy of eleven years old. I have been in the beautiful city of Chattanooga, and saw the grand scenery there. Lookout Mountain rises 2,700 feet above the city. We ran along, at its base, with the Tennessee river right off on the other side. I attended the commencement exercises of Vanderbilt University.

There I saw seven of the Bishops of our church, and had the honor of becoming acquainted with some of them. I have been through the Publishing House more than once. It was a wonderful sight to me. There are many places of interest here, and, altogether, Nashville is a splendid city. It has fine churches, fine public buildings, and is noted for its elegant private residences. The most elegant church I have seen is the New Third Street Church in East Nashville. I forgot to say that at the Publishing House I saw them printing our Sunday school literature. There is much more I could say; but for fear of wearying the little cousins, I will close. Your little friend, BENNIE PARKER.

Nashville, Tenn.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen a letter in your paper written from Springfield, I will try and write one to you. I am a little boy seven years old. My mama died when I was a little baby. Aunt and grandma have taken care of me ever since. I have one sister and one brother older than me; and I have two little cousins. Their papa and mama are both dead, and we live little children have lived with grandma ever since I was a baby. We go to school to Miss Bell Kemp. We have two pet cows. My uncle and teacher get corn and frogs for them; they fly all around the house and field. I wish I knew where Mrs. Hervie Melard was. He was our preacher last year. We all loved him. I wish he would come back. When he reads this letter I hope he will write to me. He used to tell me of my grand-grandma Carter that lives in Jackson, La. I have never seen her. It was a man, I would go and see her. I would like to know how old Noah was when the flood dried up. I hope you will not turn this up, Mr. Editor, for I want to hear from Bro. Melard, too.

From your little friend,

MARCUS CARTER ROYCE.

Springfield, La.

We hope Bro. Melard will write to you right away.—Editor.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to your paper in a long time, I thought I would write. My mama takes the dear old Advocate, and I love to read the children's letters very much. I live on Snodgrass river, and we see the pretty boats. Our school is out, and we had a grand time. One of our little schoolmates was crowned the Queen of May. I have two little adopted brothers, and one sister dead. My papa and mama are the light of my heart. I go to church every fourth Sunday. Bro. Hawkins is our pastor this year. We all like him very much. I am the only child my parents have. One of YOUNG.—Died, on June 21, at Labell, La., RE. A. S. YOUNG, aged thirty years. Southwestern Presbyterian please copy.

BUCKINGHAM.—In Rapides parish, at the "Willow Glen Plantation," on May 28, Mrs. ANNE BUCKINGHAM—eldest daughter of the late J. D. Brantley, of Alabama, and wife of Geo. F. Buckingham—passed from her bed of pain into the rest of the saints.

Mrs. Buckingham's happy girlhood was spent in Lafayette, Ala. There in the dew of her youth she united with God's people. Her early married life was passed in Memphis, Tenn., and in Arkansas. In the days of her highest prosperity she was earnestly and lovingly helpful to all who needed her; and such were always found near at hand. Her breadth of sympathy, her patience in well-doing, her cheerfulness of hope, were such that no one could come under her influence without finding themselves buoyed up, no matter how depressed their condition.

Under the varying fortunes and adversities of her maturer life, the noble courage with which she did what she could, and the exalted spirit with which she met and accepted the trials and sorrows manifold that came into her life, were to those who knew it all an evangel, teaching encouragement under difficulties, meekness and cheerful endurance under dark and gloomy prospects, and steady assurance that light and hope and love exist for us all here, even under clouds and darkness. Truly she was a creature of heroic mould, showing forth in her healthy life of Christian uses the spirit of the Master. She "forgot the things that were behind," and in the true and faithful use of every opportunity and responsibility presented indicated her deep faith.

The last years of her life have been years of intense and hopeless suffering, but through it all, in the confidence of a certain faith, and in the comfort of a holy hope, she displayed such uncomplaining sweetness, such high and brave Christian fortitude, that the friends around her likened her to the Christian martyrs, who, while experiencing the flame of the laque, sang hymns of lofty cheer. Bro. Randle, of the church at Alexandria, soothed her by his visits and gentle ministrations. With thankfulness and comfort she partook of the Holy Communion a few weeks before her translation to her more congenial abode—to the Father's "house of many mansions."

The grand lessons of her life survive, and, I trust, may bring forth fruit in the purer, higher, holier living of those who witnessed the triumphs of her faith, in living, suffering and dying. The desolate orphans, who by her love and care were reared and made happy, rise up and call her "blessed." Yes, verily, "her works do follow them." A. E. HEARD.

McGOWAN.—Mrs. SUSAN E. McGOWAN (nee Edridge) was born near Huntsville, Ala., Oct. 13, 1816. She was converted and joined the Methodist Church at about the age of thirteen years. She remained a consistent and useful member to the close of her earthly life. In 1855 she was happily married to William McGowan. In 1857 they settled near Quitman, La. (late county, Miss.). Bro. McGowan erected a large and comfortable a prophetic chamber, which continues the lodging-place of the "very itinerant," and where have we found a more comfortable and hospitable home? In 1858, by the efforts of Bro. McGowan and his brothers, McGowan's Chapel was erected. It continues a prosperous community and a blessing to that section.

Bro. McGowan accumulated considerable property, served the church faithfully, and was called to his reward in 1870, leaving Sister McGowan and three children, one of whom has since died.

Sister McGowan died in peace and resignation on March 22, 1892. She was ready and anxious to depart. This elect sister was well and favorably known to a large number of God's ministerial servants, many of whom will read this notice with pleasant memories, though with sad hearts.

May the blessings of heaven rest upon the surviving children who take the place of the departed parents! H. S. RAYNES.

LEGGETT.—RICH. T. LEGGETT was born Nov. 10, 1815; was married in 1835, and died after a brief illness, May 7, 1892, being at the time of his death forty-six years five months and twenty-seven days old.

Bro. Leggett was one of our best men. At what time he joined the church I have not been able to learn. He was elected steward in the early part of last year, which office he filled well until the day of his death. He was a good, quiet, religious man—one that the people all seemed to have confidence in. To do right seemed to be his aim in life. His death will be a great loss to the church and to the community in which he lived, and more especially to his family; but we are confident that our loss is his eternal gain, and while we give him up with sad hearts, he is, doubtless, rejoicing in his triumphs around our Father's throne.

May God give us the grace of resignation, and in a special manner bless his bereaved family and relatives, and help them to prepare to meet Bro. Leggett in a better world than this. Their pastor, A. D. MILLER.

LOWRY.—The following resolutions were adopted by the Quarterly Conference, Spartanburg, Columbia district, North Mississippi Conference:

Resolved, That the Rev. T. J. Lowry, a distinguished preacher of the North Mississippi Conference, lately deceased, having long resided among us and having expended a large part of his life-work to our fathers and ourselves, bringing him very near to us, and to feel as one of us; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death we regard ourselves deeply afflicted, and do feel to mourn our loss in his death.

Resolved, That we do hereby express our heartfelt sympathies, and tender our condolences to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also that they be spread upon the Minutes of this Quarterly Conference.

Signed on behalf of committee, J. D. NEWSON.

CANNACK.—Mrs. MALISSA CANNACK was born in Copiah county, Miss., Aug. 1, 1850, and died in Shelby county, Texas, April 29, 1892. Her maiden name was Tillman—being the daughter of Thos. and Elizabeth Tillman, of Gallatin, Miss. Her marriage to T. J. Cannack took place July 23, 1873. Six children were born to them; two of these left the earthly pilgrimage in advance of the mother.

This devoted wife and fond mother was a patient Christian sufferer. Her sickness was of months' duration. Day by day she slowly weaker grew, but without complaining. Her Christian life began in childhood. At fifteen years of age she united with the church. It was the privilege of this writer to be with her in her last sickness and, with Stephen Olin, can say: "I have gone from the pulpit to the sick-bed and found it to be the holier place." Disease had strong hold on her body; but her faith was anchored in God, through Christ. She patiently awaited her release.

GOLLE.—Mrs. LIZZIE GOLLE, wife of Seth R. Cole, and daughter of Antiph Eschus and wife, was born in Galveston parish, La., March 3, 1859, and died Dec. 8, 1891, aged thirty-two years nine months and five days. She was happily married to her now bereaved husband, Dec. 21, 1876; joined the church under the ministry of Rev. John W. Hoar, in 1879, and ever afterward lived a devoted Christian life.

A little while before her death she begged her husband to "train her children up for the Lord, and not to grieve for her." Sister Cole lived the life of a Christian, and died in religious triumph, and has gone to the home of the glorified.

She leaves an affectionate husband and four sweet little children and a host of relatives to mourn their loss; but, thank God, not without hope. They expect to meet her in heaven. T. J. UTECH.

Lake Charles, La.

HENDRY.—The subject of this tribute, DAVID LEE HENDRY, was born in the State of Georgia, June 15, 1831. Bro. Hendry moved from his native State to Mississippi in early life, living a number of years in Jasper county. From there he moved to Perry county, and from there to Jones, where he lived up to his death. He joined the M. E. Church, South, about thirty years ago, and, I am told, has lived an upright Christian life ever since.

Bro. Hendry left no dying testimony to his family; for he had no time; the end of his life being severed almost instantly, his disease being heart trouble. His works testify of him. May God comfort the bereaved widow and daughter, and finally save them in heaven! G. H. ELLIS.

Eastabuchie, Miss.

BEESON.—OTTIE JANE, infant daughter of Harvey and Sallie Beeson, was born April 12, 1891, and died May 12, 1892, aged one year and one month. Oattie was a sweet and sprightly child, a flower too pure for this sin-cursed earth; so he who said, "Sister little children to come unto me," has taken her to himself. Oh, what a joyous meeting when baby gets home where mamma is, who had preceded her only a few months!

May the Lord bless the bereft husband and father, and may he so live that when he goes home he may find the loved ones at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for him! E. E. BEESON.

Hermit.

BOUNCEY.—Mrs. S. J. BOUNCEY was born in West Feliciana parish, La., Feb. 22, 1827, and died at Waterproof, Texas parish, on May 10, 1892. Her mortal remains were deposited in the Natchez Cemetery. She was married to B. E. Bouncey, March 22, 1855, and leaves husband and six children—three sons and three daughters—voyagers on the sea of life.

Sister Bouncey was faithful and true in all relations sustained, patient in suffering. Death to her had no terrors. She was ready and willing to go. Her death was peaceful, and in full assurance of a glorious resurrection. PASTOR.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results to make it a proprietary medicine.

Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Hatcher, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was to the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

We use Alcohol

pure alcohol to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING. Alcohol is good for leather; it is good for the skin. Alcohol is the chief ingredient of Cologne, Florida Water, and Bay Rum the well known face washes. We think there is nothing too costly to use in a good leather preservative.

Acme Blacking retails at 20c. and at that price sells readily. Many people are so accustomed to buying a dressing or blacking at 5c, and 10c, a bottle that they cannot understand that a blacking can be cheap at 20c. We want to meet them with cheapness if we can, and to accomplish this we offer a reward of

for a recipe which will enable us to make WOLFF'S ACME BLACKING at such a price that a retailer can profitably sell it at 10c a bottle. We hold this offer open until Jan. 1st, 1893.

SEE WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT IT.

Now here is a book that will last for a long time. Its full and choice new music, and the good old hymns and tunes are also there in abundance. A million copies ought to be sold in the Southland alone.—Rev. J. O. Foster, Author, etc.

This is the latest and the best of the many music books which have been published, and is well adapted for use in the home, in the social meeting, and in the camp-meeting. Many of the songs were written especially for this volume, and are rich in sentiment and sweet in tone. The balance of the book consists of the richest and best productions culled from the whole range of sacred song. We shall be surprised if the book does not have a large sale.—Western Herald. After a careful examination of this book, our candid judgment is that it is surpassed by any book on the market in the correctness of the sentiment of the songs and in the beauty of the music. We would call the attention of anyone who examines the book to pages 131, 135, 157, 186, as being of special merit. There are a goodly number of the immortal tunes and hymns of the long ago.—Western Methodist.

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food.

The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Dr. Haines, of Rush Medical College, Consulting Chemist of the Chicago Board of Health, says: "Royal is not only the purest, but the strongest baking powder with which I am acquainted."

"Ould Ireland."

MR. EDITOR: We reached Queenstown harbor about twelve o'clock on Saturday night, and, after some little delay in passing through the custom-house, I found a comfortable room at the Queen's Hotel—glad to sleep again on land. In truth, however, I had become so accustomed to the rolling and rocking of the ship, it required a little time to readjust myself to the new situation, and court the coming of "Ireland's sweet restorer." The quaint, antique furniture in the room; the candle which gave light, and other appointments, evinced that I was in "the old country." Purposing to attend the Sabbath quietly in Queenstown, after a late breakfast I sallied forth to find the Methodist Church, and had the pleasure of worshipping with the little congregation who teach and sing the gospel according to Methodism. The pastor, I afterwards ascertained, was away at Belfast attending Conference, and the service was conducted by an intelligent young man, who gave an excellent, instructive talk from this text, "At thy word, I will lie down this night." I met him and others at the close of the service, and learned that the preacher of the morning was a layman in Cork, and not a Methodist, but a member of the Church of Ireland; or, as we would know him in America, an Episcopalian. He was raised a Methodist, however, and his brother, a leading Queensdown member, is a local preacher, who showed me much kindness and hospitality.

After this very helpful worship I walked up on the high hill overlooking the magnificent harbor, and attended another elaborate and imposing service at the Catholic Cathedral. An immense concourse was present—it being the feast of Corpus Christi. A street procession had been arranged, many decorations and arches prepared, with hundreds of children in line of march, each dressed in white, with a long white veil over the head, and carrying a bunch of daisies; but the falling rain prevented. So the procession was within the spacious cathedral—down one side aisle, across the vestibule, and back to the altar by the other side.
Banners and mottoes were many and significant. When the canopy which covers the Blessed Sacrament was slowly borne through the vestibule, men and women standing outside, in their best Sunday garb, fell to their knees on the wet ground. I did not much to the scandal of some pious onlookers. By such spectacular performances the superstitious people are awed into continued and increased reverence for the authority of the church. The venerable Lord Bishop of the diocese, Dr. McCarthy, was present; the jubilee of whose priesthood, by the way, was to be celebrated the next day. After the immense multitude filed out of the building—the most of them of the lower classes, and giving evidence of dense ignorance and squalid poverty—I was conducted through by one of the "halli-hui," and had its points of beauty and interest explained. It is an unfinished structure, but projected upon a magnificent plan. In exterior expression, crowning the lofty hill that overlooks the Cove of Cork, it is massive, commanding, and in perfect Gothic harmony. Over one hundred thousand pounds have already been expended on it, much of the money coming from America, and half as much more will be necessary to its completion. Within the building is the stone tomb of Dr.
Keane, Bishop of the diocese at the time it was entered. I noticed some poor, ignorant old woman kneeling at his tomb in worship. They probably knew him in life, and were worshipping him now that he has become a saint.

From that and other greater elevations one gets a fine view of the splendid harbor, with the two forts, Camden and Carlisle, the three beautiful islands, the war-ships at anchor, the numerous vessels darting here and there, and the great ocean beyond, whose waves are rolling westward to the land where are those most dear to me. It is said this harbor is large enough to accommodate Her Majesty's entire fleet. The hawk drivers are not slow to tell you that in this harbor Drake took refuge when pursued by the Spanish war-ships, and of his place of concealment, yet known as "Drake's Pool." They also tell us that Queenstown was originally known as Cove, but was changed in 1849, in honor of young Queen Victoria's visit—the first place she landed in Ireland.

This is quite a health resort, because of its soft climate, and many persons engaged in business at Cork reside in Queensdown. I regretted very much that I had not another day to remain, so as to travel somewhat over the island and visit the grave of Wolf, author of the lines on the burial of Sir John Moore, who is buried in an old cemetery some distance from the town.

In the afternoon I had "a cup of tea" with Mr. James T. Budd, a local preacher, and manager of a large business in Cork. He is brother to the speaker of the morning. I had a delicious visit to his charming little home on the hill. He has an intelligent, happy, religious family. Immediately after tea we had family worship, with singing, all joining in the hymn. At seven o'clock that brother preached. I would gladly have accepted an invitation to "take the service," but a wretched cold, contracted on shipboard, made it impossible for me to speak. We had a good, earnest, spiritual sermon. And thus my first Sabbath in the land of St. Patrick was pleasantly spent.

On stepping out in the morning I had my first view of an Irish jauntingcar, on two wheels, and drawn by one horse. The seats are on the side—the passengers sit back to back, and have good opportunity for observing; but, I would suppose, have some difficulty in holding on.

On Tuesday morning I went up to Cork—a short, pleasant run up the river of half an hour. This is an ancient city, and typical of the Roman Catholic population, which control almost wholly the south of Ireland. It figured prominently in the early history of the country, and in these latter days has been distinguished politically as the parliamentary constituency of the late Charles Stuart Parnell. The city is built on both sides the River Lee, and up the steep hillsides. As I crossed Patrick's Bridge, which spans the river, en route to the hotel, I was first attracted by the statue of Father Mathew, the "apostle of temperance," which occupies a conspicuous position on a principal street. It was sadly significant, as I paid a second visit to the monument, to note that the large buildings in that immediate locality were saloons—called here "public houses." On Saturday night, I was told, that section of the city is made hideous by the drunken orgies of the besotted "faithful." Alas! what a mistake Father Mathew made, and which he freely acknowledged in later life! When he had wrought a revolution in the south of Ireland, and had the country in his hands, he failed to crystallize that reform sentiment into statutory and constitutional law. Now the very shadows from the outstretched hands of Father Mathew's statue fall nightly upon scores who have no knowledge of the grace he preached, and are the pitiable victims of rum and rage.

I visited the Cathedral of St. Finn Bar, a building owned by the Church of Ireland. This is a handsome place of architecture—said to be unexcelled in all this Emerald Isle. It has cost over a half-million dollars, and is yet incomplete. The magnificent towers were erected, as a friend accompanying me facetiously remarked, by "porter and whiskey"—that is, by a brewer and a distiller, and at a cost of $150, 000 each. The "Bishop's Throne," made of oak and elaborately carved, was presented by the clergy of the diocese at a cost of $7,500. The Mosaic work about the altar is ingeniously wrought and most beautiful in design. On the steep hill-side across the river is another prominent church, which has a longer history, and looks to be a representative of a past age. It is the Shandon Church—made famous in literature by the well-known lines on the "Bells of Shandon."

Mr. J. H. Thompson and his wife, who attended the Ecumenical Conference at Washington last October, showed me a much kindness. Mr. Thompson is a prosperous business man of the city, and a liberal, earnest Methodist, and his good wife, the daughter of a missionary, born in India, is one of the most ardent and effective temperance workers in all Irish Methodism. They gave me a delightful drive over the commanding green hills of the surrounding country, and an opportunity to admire the wonderful scenery from several "inspiration-points" of observation. What splendid roads, firm and smooth; made and kept so by contract—the only plan that will secure good roads to any people. After our drive of three hours I had tea with the family, to which the pastor, Rev.

Mr. Crawford, and other friends were invited. Cork, as you know, shared largely in the labors of Mr. Wesley.
He found here occasionally rather rough treatment—having at times fightings with mobs and fears within;
but he planted wisely, and to this day,
Mr. Crawford tells me, the type of Methodism in this city has not been excelled in the country. Though not strong in proportion to population—this being a Romish city—it is vigorous, loyal, spiritual. All the people attend class meetings and pay regularly their "class-money," as in the early days. I insert here one of the quarterly tickets, which are given to each member of society. The name is written in the blank, and the initials of the pastor, giving it out, just above:

Methodist Society.

ESTABLISHED 1739.

God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind.
2 Timothy 1: 7.

N

After tea at Mr. Thompson's I made a short call at the parsonage to shake hands with the pastor's family. These are warm-hearted, fraternal Methodists, and have vied with each other in making my short stay here most pleasant and profitable. Mr. McGuire, a young Methodist man in fine business, accompanied me to the cathedral and other places of interest, and is to drive me out to Blarney Castle this morning, and to other points of interest.
He and Mr. Thompson, with his wife, will leave this afternoon for the Conference at Belfast. As the representative session begins a day earlier than I supposed, I shall go up this afternoon to Dublin, and on to Belfast to-morrow. On this account I shall have to forego a visit to the Lakes of Killarney.
Fraternally,

Letter from North Carolina.

MR. EDITOR: An evil disease had been cleaving unto me for two or three months, pronounced by one physician intercostal rheumatism; by another, in-tercostal neuralgia; but, as "a rose would smell as sweet by any other name," so "it hurt me just as bad," no matter what they called it. Anti-kamia and other anti-suffering mixtures had been faithfully tried, and still the disease refused to mollify itself. I, therefore, resolved to try what virtue there was in change of scene, mountain air and mineral springs. I had seen a notice of the wonderful healing properties of the Bromine-Arsenic Springs in Ashe county, N. C., and also a statement of some almost miraculous cures which it had wrought.
The free use of its waters was said to utterly rout such inveterate foes to hospitable ease, and frequently to human life, as rheumatism, eczema, scrofula, dyspepsia, insomnia, kidney complaints, et id omne genus. If this is all true, I thought, this is the place for me to go to. I accordingly started on June 20, taking en route East Tennessee and Western Virginia, for the purpose of visiting my brother and other relatives whom I had not seen for nearly thirty years. I found my brother somewhat feeble, though quite well-preserved for one of his age. "By reason of strength, the days of his years were nearly fourscore years." He preaches occasionally, and is passing the evening of his life restfully and serenely, experiencing, as yet, very little of the labor and sorrow allotted by the Psalmist to fourscore years.

After spending a few happy days with brother and his family, I set my face towards North Carolina, leaving the railroad at Marion, Va., and embarking in a buggy for a 45-mile ride over the mountains to the springs.
Just from the low grounds and high waters of Louisiana, you may imagine how refreshing to my eye were the rock-ribbed, verdure-clad mountains of Virginia, and the luxuriant crops of wheat securely waving their golden heads on hill and mountain-side, above the reach of disastrous floods. No man-constructed leveas are needed in this favored land to confine the turbulent stream within its proper channel, since Nature has fortified her river banks with rocky barriers, which can defy the on-rushing sweep of destructive floods, affording the husbandman a reasonable hope that, if he sow, he will also reap. I sadly thought of the desolation and widespread havoc which the rivers of my own State, in their unbridled license, were then making of the crops and property of many of the dwellers on their banks. There may be danger in high places, but there is often security. As we slowly wound our way up the mountain height, our ears were greeted, every now and then, with the musical tinkle of some mountain spring, as it came oozing from its rocky breast, to go dancing and sparkling down to the depths below. Having gained the summit, there lay outspread before and below me a billowy and almost boundless expanse of green hills and forestfringed heights, stretching as far as I could see—a novel and charming view to me, and one of which, it seemed to me, my delighted vision could never weary. The sides of many of these hills, steep almost to perpendicularity, were cultivated to the very top, and aproned with ripening grain. Sickie and reaper were already busily at work harvesting the wheat. The harvest here is plentiful, and the laborers, too. Although climbing the mountain was slow and tedious, the facilis de-scensus proved both expeditious and exhilarating. Soon after reaching its foot, it was time to stop for the night, and we put up at the house of a farmer whose substantial fare, with its trimmings of milk and honey and strawberries, and whose clean beds and low-rates withal, will ever commend him to the patronage of the tired traveler.

After an early breakfast a ride of ten miles landed me safely at the springs, where a pleasant greeting awaited me from the proprietor and his excellent wife, and I was soon made to feel at home and at ease.

These springs are situated 2,725 feet above the sea level, in a little valley shut in by hills. A commodious hotel, neat white cottages, and every appliance that can contribute to comfort and convenience, furnish accommodations for 75 or 80 guests. A varied and delicious bill-of-fare (to say nothing of the altitude) afford as high living as any health seeker need desire. The general effect upon the newcomer is one of exquisite coolness, cleanliness and repose. The water of these springs is colorless, tasteless, cold as ice, and clear as crystal. I have been here only a day or two, but I purpose to remain long enough to give it a fair trial. I shall drink freely of its healing waters, take a daily plunge into its pellucid depths, and, should its blood-purifying properties be all that is claimed for them, I shall expect to leave here with my blood as pure as that which courses in the veins of any of the very first families of Virginia.

Yours, etc., G. H. WILEY.

The Commencement Ball.

At the recent commencement of the University of Mississippi the trustees of the university appropriated $100 to defray the expenses of the commencement ball. Now, in the name of the 80,000 members of the M. E. Church, South, in the State of Mississippi, who are taxed to keep up State institutions, I protest against this perversion and waste of public money. The university is deeply in debt. Some of its buildings are in a very dilapidated condition, and so much so that the last Legislature of the State appropriated $5,000 to be expended in repairs, and a much larger sum is needed, and yet the trustees take $100 out of the treasury to pay for a ball.

I protest against it because our church teaches that dancing is a sin, and the State has no right to tax a part of her citizens to pay for the amusements of others, and especially so when those taxed believe that the amusement for which the money is appropriated is sinful and hurtful.
Christian parents do not desire their children taught to dance.

The catalogue for 1891-92 gives the entire number of students of both sexes during the session as 205. The State appropriates annually $32,500 to run the university. We are told that everything is free at the university—that is, it does not cost the student anything; but the State paid the last session $18 tuition per month for nine months, or $162 for the session for every student who entered the university, whether he remained one day or nine months. The State also provides rooms free of cost for the students, and the last Legislature, in order to make these rooms comfortable and attractive, appropriated $5,000, or $24.35 per student. This is very liberal on the part of the State, and of this liberality I approve; but it appears that all of this is not sufficient, and that the public must also pay for the amusements, and the trustees appropriated $100 out of the treasury to pay for the ball. A ball is offensive to Christian people, and should not be sustained by public money. I enter my protest against this perversion and waste of public money.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. A. P. C. C. Belzona, Miss., July 7: "Our second Quarterly Conference was held on Townsend Lake, June 11. Our presiding elder was with us, and preached four times, to the delight of all present. We had seven additions, and baptized thirteen infants.
Our circuit has grown from three to nine appointments, and the people continue to call for the gospel. The harvest, indeed, is great, but laborers are few. We have organized two Sunday-schools since our last report that are doing fairly well. There is a growing interest at most of our appointments, and we are praying and working for a blessing in this part of God's heritage."

Rev. Eugene Johnson, Senatobia, Miss., June 29: "We have just closed a meeting here of two weeks' duration.
Bro. Humphries preached two sermons;
Bro. Stuma preached one. These brethren were of the Presbyterian Church. Bro. J. W. Malone, of Cold Water, was with us two days; Bro. M.
E. Tumlin, of Verona, four days. All these brethren did faithful, earnest, efficient work, for which we are very grateful to them. The vital forces of the church, I think, was greatly quickened by the preaching and other services. The current of spiritual activity flows more rapidly through her veins, and purposes were formed and promises made to make still higher attainments in practical and experimental godliness. We look for better things before this year closes. Pray for us."

Rev. J. W. Treadwell, Sturges, Miss., July 1: "When we came to the Sturges circuit we found the good people of the charge very much discouraged.
No parsonage or rented house having been provided for the pastor in charge, he rented one for himself, and paid the rent, until he succeeded, by the help of those interested, in building a parsonage sufficient to live in the present year. Our parsonage, though unfinished, is worth about $250. Our charge is improving on every line.
Sabbath-schools and prayer meetings are in progress, and we are praying for a gracious revival all over our charge, and believe we will receive the blessing. We have just returned from Maban circuit, where we assisted Bro.
Dollar in a meeting, and can say, if those people will, they can be one of our first-class circuits. May the Lord help them to be so!"

Rev. H. M. Ellis, Wesley Chapel, Natchez, Miss.: "They say, 'Friday isn't a lucky day,' but I shall never refuse welcome to one that brings the 'luck' the last June twenty-fourth brought our home. Supper was over, the children in bed, and, after a busy day, wife and I were seasoning our rest with a song, when the click of the gate-latch and tramp of feet announced the approach of visitors. Right on to the dining-room they hurried, smiling and 'howdying,' but with hands too full to shake. How they transformed the appearance of that room!—for everything was there from a place of fast pine up to dainty preserves and trembling jellies. You may be sure our hearts were happy and thankful, and that we are braver and stronger for work among such dear, good people.
May God bless their homes and hearts with peace, plenty, contentment and heavenly grace!"

J. M. Deavenport, Pontotoc, Miss., June 27: "The Lord is blessing his work on this charge. Our people are growing spiritually stronger and more alive to the work of the Master.
We have six regular organized and flourishing Sabbath-schools on the work, all using our Sunday-school literature, with man at the helm filled with the Spirit, laboring for the salvation of the souls of our children. We have four appointments, with a parsonage almost in the centre of the work, which has been contracted for and over half paid since we came to the work. We are short somewhat, financially, with bright prospects ahead for more prosperous times. We are looking forward, and have faith to expect great things to be done for God and the cause this year, for surely 'the lines have fallen unto us in pleasant places,' and we know that 'that is in us is greater than be that is in the world.'"

Rev. S. H. Whitley, Keachie, La., July 8: "Protracted meetings begin this week, and will run at the different appointments till harvest-time. Congregations are increasing in numbers and interest. The Woman's Missionary Society held at Keachie made us a good beginning in revival work. We felt the Holy Ghost imparting needed strength during our attendance. Mrs.
T. P. Fullilove presided. 'She put her left hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workman's hammer,' finishing every item of business in a very satisfactory manner. Their attendance was small. Several read important papers, which were as good as any I have ever heard. Miss Eliza Logan was elected State organizer. May God bless her in this work! 'The surplus' called forth the parable of the talents.
The difficulty of 'digging to hide' might be obviated, but what of the responsibility? A succession in the line of prophets has appeared at the parsonage. We call him Robert, to place him in line with the Roberts of the Louisiana Annual Conference. Pray
for us."

Rev. J. M. Pugh, Binnsville, Miss.:
"I have the pleasure of reporting one more gracious revival on the Binn-sville work. We commenced a meeting at Scooba station on the fifth Sunday in May, and continued it eleven days.
There were, at least, forty conversions, and a general revival of church members. The accessions to the churches, as the result of the meeting, will be about twenty-five. Christians of the various churches entered into the meeting with interest and great harmony of Christian fellowship. The Presbyterians have the ascendancy in the community, and all denominations have been worshipping in the same building. This we hope to change by erecting a Methodist Church in the near future. A committee has been appointed, and subscriptions are being solicited. Bro. N. M. Clark was with us, and did the most of the preaching.
In his peculiar and forcible manner,
Bro. T. L. Melton held his Quarterly Conference on one day, and gave us two stirring and forceful sermons.
Bros. Moore, Abney, Buck, of the North Mississippi Conference; young Bros. Browning and Huff, and the Rev. B. Witherspoon, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, assisted in the meeting. It was said before the meeting that no revival need be expected;
but false prophets were put to shame, and the whole community was stirred as never before, and Christians of all denominations have been moved forward to a better religious life. We took our organist, Mrs. A. B. Archibald, with a corps of singers and young workers from Binnsville, and religiously at Scooba on fire. The people of Scooba, without denominational distinctions, won the hearts of all who attended. Their doors were thrown open, and visitors could not accept all the warm invitations they received to share their hospitality. I hope I shall not be considered as making invidious distinctions when I mention especially Capt. James Watts and Capt. A. M.
Moore, whose hospitality was bounded only by the capacity of their homes and not the generosity of their hearts.
The people of Scooba will gladly welcome our next District Conference.
This meeting has united the Christian hearts of Binnsville and Scooba. 'How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!' What more need I say? I feel grateful to the brethren for their labors, and especially to the young women and young men who labored so faithfully and so successfully. The Lord's name be praised for such a signal victory.

"P. S.—Please permit me to correct some statistics in my Binnsville report.
Read 36 accessions by ritual and certificate, 21 sermons and 15 days instead of 22 sermons and 16 days."

JOY OF NATURE.

BY EMILY HAWTHORNE.

But rising as dawn of the morning,
Or morn'g out of the sea,
Or from the sunset adorning,
I came a semblance of beauty to me.

It was Nature in transient beauty,
As fair as a vision of dream,
And I felt as if I were dreaming,
And I felt as if I were dreaming.

I brought to the thoughts that came thronging,
And I felt as if I were dreaming,
With the sun's light and the moon's glow,
And I felt as if I were dreaming.

Thus while at her feet I was kneeling,
She touched me with magical wand,
And I felt as if I were dreaming,
The joy in my own heart was found.

She opened the heart in my being,
And took from the heart the key—
Endowed me with new sense of seeing,
And unlocked the treasure for me.

And leaning so softly on me,
She made me look lovingly round,
And the meaning of scenes spread before me,
Should all in the volume be found.

Broad Daylight—High Noon.

Not in response to any demand, but in reply to an erroneous combination of facts and of figures, I, as presiding elder of the Meridian district, and as a member of the Board of Missions of the Mississippi Annual Conference, wish to state a few matters of fact pertaining to affairs in this district.

1. I have seen a preacher—earnest, laborious and zealous—grow old gracefully, and with a spirit almost as sweet as the spirit of the Master. I have seen another preacher, dissatisfied with his appointments and disposed to find fault with everybody but himself, demand to be moved from a good circuit and a comfortable parsonage, and resolutely refusing to be returned where the people wanted him, feel grievously aggrieved by the only other appointment possible for the Bishop to make for him; and, apparently becoming sour, strike right and left regardless of consequences—even if it did reduce the appropriation made by the Board of Missions to assist a circuit of 350 members to support him and his family. (Judges xvi, 21-30.)

2. Appropriations are made by the Board of Missions at one Conference, to be paid at the next. The preacher appointed is advised of this appropriation, and enters upon the work expecting to be paid according to promise. These appropriations are always fully discussed by the presiding elders, and by them agreed upon; then submitted to the full meeting of the Board of Missions composed of preachers and laymen from every district in the Conference. At the last session the following constituted the Board present—J. H. Thomson, of the Brookhaven district, and E. S. Drake, of the Vicksburg district, being absent: W. C. Black, J. P. Drake, T. W. Adams, T. S. West, J. V. Penn, P. Howard, W. B. Lewis, J. C. Enochs, J. S. Turner, E. F. Griffin, Irvin Miller and H. C. Newsum. The proposed appropriations were (as is the custom) freely discussed, some were rejected, and others unanimously allowed. The appropriations are never made by "one-man power," nor recklessly.

3. At the Conference in 1889, West End, Meridian, was granted $200 to aid in supporting an unmarried man—the fourth time an appropriation was made to that charge. At the Conference in 1890 (the close of my first year on the district) I sought for a preacher of greater experience in city work, and found that the one wanted was soon to be married, and having some knowledge of the cost of living in Meridian, and also of the expenses of a preacher in developing such a work as West End (having served Wesley Chapel, Natchez), I asked for and obtained an appropriation of $300, as the faithful preacher for 1889 had only been paid $337 by the 202 members. What were the results? In December, 1891, the membership had increased to 240 and their contributions risen from $587 to $773.45, not counting the rent paid for a parsonage nor money expended for furniture. Because the preacher had done his work well, should his wages have been discounted and our contract violated, even though the members had paid $525 instead of $337? The only honest thing to do was to reduce the appropriation for 1892, and this was done, only $290 being asked for by me, and unanimously granted by the Board of Missions. And who could have objected to such an appropriation, except one who looks upon a preacher as a beggar, and a preacher's family as paupers dependent on the charity of niggardly church members?

When the Rev. H. C. Brown was appointed to East End, Meridian, it was looked upon by some good people as "ill-advised, premature and Utopian." Not a foot of land did we possess. Not a church member—not even a Sunday-school organization. It was an experiment, undertaken, however, with an abiding faith in God and firm conviction that good would follow. At the Brookhaven Conference, December, 1891, Bro. Brown reported 128 church members, a church and other property worth $2,714; $300 paid to himself; $20 to the presiding elder, and $40 to the Conference assessments; a Sunday-school with 13 officers and teachers, 184 scholars, contributing $13.69 for missions, and $54.32 for other purposes. Was not his work well done? Did not the $300 yield ample returns? Ought we to have discounted our promise to him and withheld a part of the appropriation? Can the history of the Mississippi Conference furnish a parallel to the work done in one year by Bro. Brown? As his work was so well done, the appropriation for 1892 was reduced to $200 (the young brother intending to marry immediately after Conference), the expectation being that after this year the need for aid would cease.

4. These were the only appropriations made to the Meridian district for 1891, and these were reduced $200 for 1892, while $50 was granted to another work. But in the Brandon district for 1892 appropriations aggregating $600 were made to ten pastoral charges, almost every one of which is far more able to support a preacher than either East End or West End, Meridian. The aggregate wealth of either East End or West End does not equal the aggregate wealth of the members at Mars Hill, Neshoba circuit, Brandon district, and certainly does not exceed the ability of the 380 members on the Decatur circuit, Brandon district, from which comes this complaint or insinuation against the Board of Missions.

5. As this seems to be only a new phase of the outcry of country against town, it may be well to inquire what proportionate amount of money is contributed by the country and by the towns.

It is not necessary to take up the Seashore, the Woodville and the Brandon districts, contributing, respectively, $402.25, $323.30 and $276.45—the foregoing being sufficient for my purposes, and showing that while the towns in the three districts have contributed $684, the country has given only $736.05.

6. The members of the Board of Missions are becoming reative under the constant appeals for help from so many pastoral charges in the Brandon district, which has within its borders as much financial ability as any other district in the Conference, excepting the Meridian district, and we are beginning to think it is time for Hillsboro, Fannin, Westville, Decatur and other venerable veteran pensioners, which have "come down to us from a former generation," to stand alone and not be dependent on other districts for help. In the District Conference at Hickory, last year, a reverend and honorable member said that the Brandon district was "ours with a stinginess" (and he ought to know, for his circuit with 400 members once contributed $2.50 to foreign missions and only $4 to the Conference fund). The pathetic "demand" of the Brandon District Conference, at the season for 1892, was very touching in the light of contributing $276.45 last year to domestic missions, and receiving $600 in appropriations this year, and about the same last year! Such complaints, insinuations or "demands" can only result in decreased collections this year and an enforced scaling of the appropriations made by the Board of Missions; and the Brandon district, including Decatur circuit, will suffer accordingly, and fewer and smaller appropriations will be made to the Brandon district next year. And this is not all. An excuse has been furnished to mean people to be meaner; and I have heard of one man—he wears a moustache—in the Meridian district who had subscribed two whole dollars on all the Conference assessments; but since the publication of the "demands," refuses to pay anything on any of the assessments whatever! And so dear old Bro. T. Y. Armstrong, and the other superannuates, and the widows and orphans will have to get along without the aid promised by that honest (?) church member and now repudiated.

7. Only within recent years has any help been given to new works in our towns; but from "the beginning" the country circuits have been helped and helped until some of them bid fair to be "professionals" for all time to come.

8. The Conference floor, and not the church papers, was the proper place for these discussions; but the Board of Missions has naught to fear from daylight, high-noon or electric light. And no other district will suffer one half so much as the Brandon district and the missionaries preaching therein.

T. L. MELLE.

Letter from Japan.

MR. EDITOR: A few (?) words from this part of the field, I hope, will not be unacceptable to the readers of the ADVOCATE.

Hiroshima is a city of eighty-five or ninety thousand inhabitants—the largest city in this part of Japan. It is situated about two hundred miles west of Kobe, and is connected with Kobe and Osaka by three lines of steamers, which make the trip one way in about eighteen or twenty hours. It is to be connected by rail as soon as the road, which is already running to a point within fifty miles of the city, can be finished; but, as the company is suffering quite severely from "impecuniosity," it is very uncertain, unless the government takes hold of it, when the road can be finished.

Situated in the delta of the river Ota, the city of Hiroshima is perfectly flat, though it extends on each side to the foot of the mountains. It is not considered by the Japanese a very healthy city, especially in Summer. The water is bad, and many people are not careful about their drinking water; but, with proper care, I have never found any reason for considering it especially unhealthy. The climate in the Fall and Winter is delightful. All of the foreigners who live here, I think, have become very much attached to the place. It is quite a flourishing business city; but, in education and in conveniences of living, it is behind many much smaller places. The original Hiroshimites have not a very good reputation either as to education or as to morality, and, as may be easily imagined, among them Christianity does not find a ready acceptance. In fact, in all the Christian Churches here there are comparatively few original Hiroshima men. But of late years there has been a strong tendency to move about, and the government officials especially have been frequently changed, and in this way many strangers from Tokyo and elsewhere have brought with them broader ideas and better principles, and the character of the place is steadily improving.

This Hiroshima section of country is very thickly populated, and a great many of the working people go elsewhere in search of better wages. Many went to Hawaii to work on the sugar plantations, and we were hoping that many of them would be converted there, and would return earnest Christians; but our hopes in that direction have been but very partially realized. Many of those who become Christians there do so from worldly motives, and when they return, their worldly motives prompt them to a disavowal of Christianity; so that our country work has not been helped from that direction as we had hoped it would be. We have found only two whom we could receive into the church.

The Christian Churches now at work in Hiroshima are: the Presbyterian, Episcopal, Methodist, Greek and Roman Catholic. Of the work of the Greek and of the Roman Catholic Churches, I can not speak particularly, as they do not work with us, and I see but little of them. They have no church-building, but carry on their work in chapels. There are two Roman Catholic priests; but only a native pastor of the Greek Church.

The Protestant Churches work together very pleasantly and harmoniously. We have every month a union workers' meeting and a union prayer meeting, and on three successive nights in each month we have a union preaching service.

The Presbyterians have a church and two chapels, with a membership of about one hundred. The Episcopalians have only a chapel, with a membership of ten or twelve. We have a church and one chapel, with a membership of about fifty in the city. We have also a girls' school, a kindergarten, a school for poor children, and three Sunday-schools in a different section of the city from the church. And yet, what is that for the ninety thousand who have not heard the gospel?

If we compare the conditions of work now with the conditions when I came to Japan about the close of 1887, we shall find a great difference. Then there was a great demand for foreign things. It was scarcely any trouble to get a good English Bible class. Many came to enquire about Christianity; but, as you know, there has been a reaction against that wholesale demand for foreign things. Fewer people are so anxious to learn English, and fewer come to enquire about Christianity.

That difference is seen in the general statistics of that time and of the present. While the net increase in all the churches in Japan in 1888 and 1889 was between five and six thousand for each year, the total net increase in 1890 and 1891, for each year, was between one and two thousand. Last year the total number of missionaries was fifty less than the year before; the number of out-stations was 42 less than the year before; the number of baptisms was 713 less than the previous year. In the number of Sunday-schools there was a decrease of 92, and in the number of Sunday-school scholars there was a decrease of 6,489. This last item I can not well understand. The year before there had been a total increase of 2,518, and in other items there had not been such a marked difference between last year and the year before.

Japan is not so near converted as some people about two years ago began to think she was. There is no reason for discouragement, however, either in last year's statistics, or in the present condition and outlook of the church. Our church has advanced steadily. The churches that I am acquainted with are in better condition, I think, than ever before. At Nagasaki and at Fukuoka our M. E. brethren have had a glorious revival. The mail to-day brings a short account of a season of great refreshing from the presence of the Lord at our school at Kobe. Christianity will not spread throughout Japan on the tide of popular favor for foreign things, but it will be spread throughout the land by the power of the Holy Ghost working through a consecrated and trusting ministry and membership. May the Lord hasten the day! Pray for us.

Sincerely yours in Christ,
B. W. WATERS.

Hiroshima, June 7.

Letter from Texas.

MR. EDITOR: Inasmuch as several of my friends in the Mississippi Conference have requested me to write them about my new field of labor, and as I presume—all of my ministerial brethren would like to hear from this part of the Western field, I write as concisely as possible, giving my opinion of this country after six months' trial and careful observation. When we first reached this place I was not much prepossessed in its favor, though the people were quite kind to us. The weather and the financial condition of affairs made our first impressions rather gloomy; but, when Spring set in and the finances began to look up, we began to recover.

Wortham is a growing town on the Houston and Central Texas road, about eighty miles south of Dallas, in the most beautiful and fertile prairie country it has ever been my lot to see. The natural beauty of the country is an inexhaustible source of pleasure to one who loves nature. For miles in every direction the eye falls upon green, undulating pastures, clouded with banks of variegated natural flowers, dotted with fat cattle. Waving corn fields, brown squares of ripe oats, with here and there a comfortable dwelling in the midst of a fine orchard and excellent garden. I have heard of the garden spot of the world, and it is said that Bishop Keener has located Paradise somewhere in the South. This is the place. The people who live here make crops so easy that a great many of them have grown lazy, as it is not necessary to work more than half the time to make a good living. Corn, oats, vegetables, peaches and cotton, as well as quite a number of other things, grow finely here, and this year these crops are just as fine as they well can be. This is one of the best shipping-points for cattle in Central Texas. Thousands of cattle are shipped in one season to St. Louis and Chicago.

As to religion, there is as great a variety and diversity of opinions as there is of natural products. We have five denominations represented in (and around) our little town—Baptists (Missionary and Primitive), Methodists (Protestant and Episcopal), and Cumberland Presbyterians. We all worship in one church, and have a regular denominational, latitudinarian, hallelujah time during protracted meetings; but there is a great lack of orthodox systematic devotion to the cause of Christ between meals. The Arkansas woman described this part of Texas, as to religion, very well when she said that "they had the deepest creeds and the least water, the most ows and the least milk, and more preachers and less religion," than anywhere she had struck. Episcopal Methodism is holding her own and steadily gaining ground. All we need to help us to the final occupation of this part of the Northwest Texas Conference is a few Methodist Churches and a little liberality on the part of the (our) members. I think our people are beginning to advance along that line lately, and if we make a fine crop this year, doubtless we will have a revival of liberality among our people. One thing we have to contend with—which can't last long—is the theory of the Protestant Methodist Church that we need but a little money to run the churches with; and so, as a result, we have no churches—except union churches; the preachers, as a rule, are poorly paid, and every other denomination suffers from their illiberal theory. This state of affairs can not last long, of course, as the church that first builds a house of worship, houses her people, and pays something liberal to the support of the gospel, will be the one that will secure their own respect and the confidence of the people, besides getting first-class men to fill her pulpits. The cry has been that the Conference won't send them the kind of men they need. The real trouble is, that they don't want the kind they need.

Tell the brethren in the Mississippi Conference to come over to this Conference, if they can get a transfer; that our Conference includes all of the pan-handle country west of here, including about sixty-five counties, and they will find plenty of room for their varied gifts.

Our District Conference met at Mexia (pronounced Mehla), on the Houston and Central Texas road, about eight miles south of Wortham, and we had a royal time. The preachers are a hearty, whole-souled, straight-up-and-down set of men, with strong convictions and frank statements on all questions that come up, as in other places a few glib fellows do the most of the talking.

Take it all in all, this is a great country, filling up with good people, and we are trying, with considerable success, to hold our own against the world, the flesh and the devil. I prefer this State to Louisiana or Mississippi, because we have less negroes and more native Anglo-Saxon people than in other places.

Explanatory.

I am sorry that my article of June 10, under the caption, "The Light is Dawning," should "grieve" my good Bro. Drake; and that "other brethren, not of the Mission Board, are troubled in spirit because the facts have been published." And yet I can not think his "grief" inconceivable, since he says he "does not share the terror of his brethren." But why not, if there is anything alarming about or in that publication, which he says "may result in much harm."

I wonder how many brethren are in mortal dread of some impending catastrophe as the result. It is difficult to treat such a transparent absurdity with seriousness. I published certain facts and figures without note or comment, which I took from the Minutes and from Bro. Drake's own statements published over his own signature; and if "much harm results," he, and every other member of the Mississippi Conference that votes for and contributes to the publication of the Minutes, must share with me the responsibility. Does my younger brother presume to rebuke his "venerable critic" for simply calling attention to facts and figures already published for which he himself is largely responsible? The mistakes referred to by Bros. Drake and Burton I cheerfully correct. But I must remind Bro. Burton that he is in error in supposing that I brought an "accusation" against him or anyone else.

Bro. Drake is mistaken in supposing that I "insinuate" that anything was withheld from the public by the Board of Missions. I am not in the habit of resorting to insinuation, and I do not know where he finds it in my article, unless he imagines he detects it in names and figures. I did not have at hand a copy of the Minutes for 1887 when I wrote that article, and hence I stated that "I got the information from reliable sources."

The advice Bro. Drake volunteers to "complainers" is well enough, and I hope every disturber of our Israel who needs his pious homily may profit by it.

D. G. W. ELLIS.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have thought it might help Bro. Drake to know that while he "grieves," and some few brethren to whom he has unhurried his grief are "troubled," that others are "glad" because I published that article. I have received several postals from brethren of this Conference, and one from a brother of an adjoining Conference, thanking me for that publication. I give a quotation from one, as a specimen of the whole: "I write to ask you to please continue 'to turn on the light.' I am so glad you have taken the matter in hand; hope you will not cease until you have exposed the whole thing. To give a single man on a $500 work an appropriation of $300, while men of families on $300 and $100 circuits get nothing, is an outrage that ought to be exposed." Verily, there are two sides to this question! D. G. W. E.

University of Mississippi.

A WOMAN GRADUATE.

Speaking of the class of '92, twenty-three in number, The Times-Democrat, of June 30, said: "Chancellor Fulton read out the names, and, as each name was called, the graduate took his place on the bottom step of the platform. As each one received his diploma, the audience enthusiastically applauded him. Miss Minnie Cowan, of Lafayette county, the only woman in the list, received a big ovation."

Miss Cowan is an alumna of that well-known Methodist school, Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss., graduating in the "highest course" with distinction in the class of '90. September following she entered the University of Mississippi, and after two years' faithful work finished her course in this excellent institution of learning, with the very best record as a student. Thus closes a brilliant collegiate career of five years.

OBSERVER.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON.—July 17, 1892.

By REV. W. H. LAFFRADE.
The First Christian Church.
Acts II, 37-47.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Verse 47.

Our last lesson closed with a statement of the amazement and perplexity of the multitude when the assembled disciples spake "with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." St. Luke goes on to state that some mocked and accused the disciples of being drunken. Peter immediately replied to the accusation, explaining their conduct as a fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel. (See Joel II, 28-32.) Then he preached to them the first sermon ever delivered by a disciple of Jesus Christ after the gift of the Holy Ghost. The sermon is an earnest, clear statement of the righteousness and power of Jesus; of their guilty participation in his death; of his resurrection from the dead, as David had prophesied; of the exaltation of Jesus and his pouring forth of the Spirit; and of his divinity, as declared by God the Father.

Our lesson for to-day begins with the effect of the sermon upon the audience.

Ver. 37. The same Spirit who gave utterance to Peter stirred the consciences of his hearers and brought conviction of sin. They had rejected Christ; their action they did not attempt to defend. Recognizing Peter and the eleven as the accredited messengers of Christ, they appealed to them: "What shall we do?"

Ver. 38. Peter's reply contains instruction and promise. They must repent. They had rejected Christ; now they must receive him, not only in their hearts, as Savior, but openly as he had appointed, by being baptized in his name. Anything less than such open profession of faith in him would have indicated lack of complete surrender to him. This baptism was, with them, a declaration of repentance; and of faith in him as granting remission of sin and the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Vers. 39, 40. Further encouraging them by assurances of God's gracious promises, Peter continued his explanation of the way of salvation, urging them to action and exhorting them to separate themselves from their unbelieving fellow-Jews.

Ver. 41. The word "gladly" implies fully, undoubtedly, an acceptance of all conditions, as well as rejoicing. They openly, by baptism, confessed the cause of Christ, declared their faith in him as their Savior and Lord, and, we may rest assured, received the Holy Ghost according to promise. They were not regenerated because they were baptized; they were baptized because they accepted Christ.

Vers. 42, 43. Fuller instructions, closer communion "in fellowship with another;" earnest union of prayer. These now, as then, are conditions of establishment and of growth. The "outside world" was deeply stirred. "Fear (awe) came upon them. In furtherance of their claim as Christ's ambassadors the apostles wrought miraculous things.

Vers. 44, 45. This is a remarkable statement. We are not to understand that any law was passed by the apostles, or by the church, requiring distribution of goods. This Christian communion sprang out of the demands of the occasion and the spirit of brotherly love. Love for Christ and for one another was strong enough to overcome love of money. Could there be stronger proof of the genuineness of their conversion? If this same spirit dominated the church to-day, all our mission fields would be supplied, the debt paid, our colleges endowed, "the masses" reached. Such expression of love the world can always understand. (Read I. John, III, 17.)

Vers. 46, 47. Note the type of life of these consecrated, spiritually-minded men and women. They assembled for worship, were in constant association and fellowship, were in a state of gladness, were perfectly sincere; their hearts and their lips were full of praise to God. No wonder the people believed in them. The world, however it may hate them, will always believe in people who attach great importance to the fact that they are Christ's followers, and who are evidently striving to live, as he commands, in helpful and joyous fellowship one with another. No system of public charities, no plan of "Conference assessments" can ever take the place, in Christ's estimate or the world's estimate, of the helpful spirit that is born of love.

John Stuart Mill gave utterance to a valuable thought when he wrote: "One person with a belief is a social power equal to ninety-nine who have only interests." And in proportion to the strength and intensity of such belief will be that power. All more exalted and temporary interests will give way in the end before the outworking of deep conviction.—Mid-Continent.

The City Problem.

The statement has been made that Dr. Chas. A. Briggs, Rev. Lyman Abbott, and other prominent preachers of New York and its vicinity, have joined the Salvation Army as co-operating members.

Whether such action was wise or not, it is suggestive. These men, whatever their doctrinal differences, are agreed at one point: the methods and agencies hitherto in use do not meet the demands of Christian work in our larger cities. Churches many, with open doors, stand with half-filled pews, except in fashionable portions of the cities, while thousands of men and women never hear the gospel. Thoughtful men are alarmed, and theories, new and old, have been offered, purporting to account for present conditions and offering remedies. Of one fact no doubt exists—the church must go to the people, inasmuch as the people will not come to the church. Perhaps, time-honored methods must be laid aside; long-cherished views of policy discarded; many opinions touching ecclesiastical propriety surrendered, however reluctantly. Perhaps so. Well, to go into highway and hedge and persistently urge people to come to a wedding supper may not have been according to precedent—but it was done. Protestantism, and particularly Methodism, must not so bind itself to plan or precedent as to cease to do its appointed work.

The Salvation Army seems to these New York and Brooklyn preachers to furnish the agency needed. Perhaps it does. In London, and elsewhere in Great Britain, it certainly does. As in other movements, so in this, much that appears to be essential may prove to be merely incidental and entirely unnecessary, or even harmful. The law of "the survival of the fittest" will operate here, and the movement will "hold fast that which is good."

But we are not set for the defense of the Salvation Army, nor of its new recruits. That is not our affair. To reach the constantly increasing army of men and women in our cities and larger towns who seem to be utterly indifferent, if not antagonistic to the church and her mission, is our affair. The Sunday newspaper is reaching them; the beer-garden is reaching them; the Sunday excursion and picnic are reaching them; the church, in the main, is not reaching them. Is it lack of wisdom, or of tact, or of enterprise, or of interest? To some extent, yes; lack, also, of spiritual power, to some degree.

It is a problem, this whole matter. The how of its solution we do not attempt; we simply call to prayer; to much careful, honest consideration of all the factors involved; to re-adjustment of plans that have failed; to soulful, hearty work that braves criticism and dares to be irregular.

W. H. L.

A note from Rev. I. T. Reames, of Bayview, La., gives the welcome news that he and his people have finished and are occupying a new church at Girard, La.

The Seashore Camp Meeting.

This annual meeting began Friday evening, July 8. This is the twenty-first meeting that has been held on these grounds. During all these years the trustees have worked with zeal and earnestness to make the place pleasant and the meetings profitable. The grounds have been improved year by year, and now present a very attractive appearance. Several handsome cottages have been erected since the last meeting, and an artesian well has been sunk, which affords an ample supply of good water. During these years the spiritual influences that have radiated to all parts of the country from this camp ground are incalculable. Year after year scores of people have here entered upon a new life and gone to their homes in different sections to scatter the good seed of the kingdom of God. It would be interesting to know how many preachers of the gospel have been sent out by the influences which this camp meeting have set in motion, but we have no means at present to guide us even to a rough guess.

There were about 400 people on the ground by Friday night. The first service was conducted by the presiding elder of the New Orleans district, there being present about 150 persons. The service was brief, and quite a number of Christians met at the altar and consecrated themselves to the work of saving souls during the meeting. This service resulted in leaving a good impression upon all the attendants, and was a foretoken of spiritual blessings to come.

The Saturday's services were opened by a plain, practical, strong exposition of I. Cor. iii, 21-23, by Rev. A. J. Lamar, of the Alabama Conference. This was followed by the time-honored custom of an experience meeting, which was a time of great tenderness and much deep feeling. Several persons gave brief recitals of experience and many realized it good to be where the Spirit of God was so manifestly present.

The sermon, at eleven, was preached by Rev. J. D. Simpson, of the North Alabama Conference. It was an excellent exposition of that incident in the history of Israel relating to the wonderful victory which God achieved through Gideon and his three hundred. The application to the present circumstances and surroundings was very felicitous and affected the congregation so favorably that many came forward and gave themselves unreservedly to the furtherance of the work of grace.

The three o'clock service was conducted by Rev. Robert Harry, of the Louisiana Conference, and agent for Centenary College. He gave a stirring exhortation from the last invitation of the gospel. (Rev. xxii, 17.)

At night Rev. S. Halsey Werlein, of the St. Louis Conference, gave a carefully prepared sermon from "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." It was an excellent discourse, and was listened to with great attention by the large audience. At the close many came to the altar seeking a closer approach to God through Christ.

The Sabbath dawned in clouds, and before seven the showers began, but the services went on as usual. Rev. W. P. Dickinson, of Mobile, preached at eight and conducted the experience meeting, which was a time of great refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

Rev. S. H. Werlein preached at eleven. The subject was "Sowing and Reaping." It was treated in a masterful manner, and the large audience was held at will by the preacher until a rain-storm came which somewhat interrupted the exercises and marred the effect of the sermon.

The afternoon service was a season of good, many realizing the refreshing presence of the Holy Ghost. It was conducted by Rev. J. D. Simpson.

At night Bro. Lamar gave one of his strong sermons on the "Barren Fig Tree." The impression was deep and powerful.

Thus ended the first two days of the meeting. The preaching has been as good as was ever heard on this camp ground, is the judgment of a friend who has attended many meetings here.

Laborer and Capitalist.

The recent scenes enacted at Homestead, Penn., are expressive of a state of things not confined to any State of the Union, nor to any nation of the world. The murmur of discontent among the laboring classes is heard everywhere, and in response comes the cry from the office of every capitalist and corporation that labor is organizing to the injury, if not the ruin, of vested interests.

As to the merits of the case in any one of the multitude of them we have nothing to say. Painstaking and patient investigation of all the facts can alone justify a judgment here. We are concerned rather with a truth that underlies this whole question of labor troubles: the truth that no man, and no combination of men, whether of capitalists or of laborers, can project life on a plane of self-interest solely, without inevitably involving self in trouble and doing damage to others. The declaration, "No man liveth to himself," is not of application to Christians only, nor is it based on social, or family, or community compacts. Its basis is in the need of each life, for its own sake, to get out of itself and into other lives for beneficent ends, and in the law of the universal brotherhood of man independent of humanly originated combinations. No money-getter, singly or in combination, can limit to himself the application of his earnings. No labor union, of any sort whatsoever, can exclude other men fully and finally from the benefits of its operations. To attempt it is to meddle with fundamental things, of God's appointment; to persist in the attempt, whether by force, or by process of obstruction, is to bring discord—and so death through strife; or unhealthful luxury—and so death through sensualism.

To enterprise for the general good is, therefore, an obligation of common manhood as well as a Christian duty. No corporation that does this ever oppresses the poor; no labor organization that does this ever obstructs progress or sheds blood. When capitalist and laborer say to each other, by deed as well as word, "My brother," issues are settled and Pinkerton's occupation is gone.

The Sermon on the Mount is not the creed of a church, nor the theory of a philosopher. It is the fundamental law of relations for the whole universe of God, operative whether acknowledged or not. All other plans of life are founded "on the sand."

The Sabbath—No. 1.

The Sabbath, as a day of rest and devotion, is of divine origin and appointment. One of the leading purposes of this divine institution was to make it a commemorative institution. To our father and mother and their immediate posterity, the recent creation of the world, or its adaptation for the abode of the human race, was the greatest and most impressive fact of which their age was historical. It was fitting that this great event should be monumentally commemorated. So the seventh day was set apart and separated from days of common use to recall the great fact that there was a great Almighty God who had created the heavens and the earth. This monumental purpose continued without change until the exodus of Israel from Egypt. In Deut. v, 15, God said unto them: "Remember thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and a stretched-out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." This miraculous deliverance from the great power of Egypt, and from hard and cruel bondage, was the greatest and most interesting fact to them as a people, and so it was most proper that this event should be monumentally commemorated through the generations to come. So to the Jew each Sabbath recalled their deliverance from slavery and their elevation to liberty and nationality. This divine arrangement continued near fifteen hundred years.

Our Lord Jesus Christ was crucified on the Jewish Sabbath (our Friday), slept in Joseph's new sepulchre on the Jewish Sabbath (our Saturday), and rose early on the first day of the week (our Sunday). The resurrection of Christ from the dead by the exertion of his almighty power was the crowning glory and great confirmatory proof of all his claims to be God manifested in the flesh, God over all, blessed forevermore.

The disciples and apostles of our Lord, inspired men, began at once to commemorate and celebrate this most illustrious day by holding their solemn devotions and worship of the God-man on that day. Christ confirmed and endorsed this action of the apostles by meeting with them again and again on the first day of the week. Paul preached the Word and celebrated the holy sacramental supper on the first day of the week (our Sunday).

This day of immortal memory was soon called "The Lord's Day." It was not called Sunday until the reign of the first Christian emperor Constantine, the Great—Solis Dies.

Thus the Sabbath continues to be what it always has been—a monumental and commemorative day; of creation, of Israel's deliverance, and of the triumphant resurrection of our Lord.

The apostles, as their apostolic letters recorded in the Acts of the Apostles show, had, in matters of usage and ecclesiastical customs, power to bind and loose. Then, as these inspired men set the example of religiously observing the first day of the week, it seems clear that the first day of the week was to be observed as commemorative of the resurrection of Christ, and ought to settle the question as to the authority and propriety of changing the day of rest and devotion from the last day to the first day of the week. As was to be expected, the Jewish converts in relegating the seventh day (so long venerated and religiously observed) to the secular days of the week would move slowly. It is physically impossible all round the globe to observe exactly the same identical hours. As this can not be done, it would seem that the present arrangement ought to be readily adopted by all. A uniform Sunday is essential to public convenience and the best business conditions. The attempt to observe different days of the week as days of rest and devotion by different portions of the community, would result in great confusion and loss.

The day of rest is God's gracious gift to a working and a weary world. It is the poor man's day, when he enjoys a brief release from the exhausting toils of the ordinary days. In the quietness and repose of his modest home he seems to have a pleasing reminiscence of Eden's rest and Eden's joys. It seems a prophecy, a herald and a pledge of the rest that remains, the endless Sabbath of the soul.

No class of men ought to be so united and so resolute in the maintenance of the weekly day of rest as the wage and toiling classes. Many of the laboring classes seem anxious to turn the day of rest and devotion from a holy day to a holiday of various revelry, excursions and sensuous amusements. They seem to be unmindful of the fact, if we permit the day to be perverted from its divinely appointed uses, that not only will men rush into all sorts of sensuous amusements, but many will say (in fact, have said) if the uses of the day may be perverted to all sorts of play, why not to all sorts of work? The laboring classes will be the victims of this increase of toil without any increase of wages.

J. B. WALKER.

Forces of Youth.

[From Commencement Sermon by Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald.]

There is a true psychology as well as a glorious promise in the pentecostal prophecy that your young men shall see visions. Young men are the seers of the race. Youth looks upward, and moves forward. Age looks backward. Before the rapt and eager vision of youth the future unrolls its varied panorama. Age in its serene passivity hears songs in the stillness of the night, and, in the language of that great dreamer, Thomas DeQuincey, "catches reflections from eternities that lie below all waking life."

The promise of this pentecostal age was the promise of power. The specific promise to young men is the seeing power, the power of vision. Upon the tall and kingly Saul the divine afflatus descended in his early manhood. David, soldier, poet, statesman, did his greatest work and sang his sweetest songs ere age had frosted his locks or weakened the beating of his mighty heart. Solomon had his vision of the Divine, and made his choice of wisdom as the better part, in the morning of his manhood—a morning so bright, followed by a day so full of clouds and by a night that we can only hope was not endless. His name is omitted from the roll of saints and heroes in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, though written highest on the scroll of earthly wisdom. John the Baptist awakened a nation, finished his course, and died at thirty. While he was yet a young man, freshly graduated from the school of the great Gamaliel, the heavenly vision burst upon the sight of Saul of Tarsus. The God-man himself, Jesus Christ, taught all his truth, finished his wondrous work, and died while he was yet a young man.

"I write unto you, young men, because ye are strong," wrote with trembling fingers the holy Apostle John in his old age. They were strong of purpose, strong to will, strong to do, strong to wield the sword of the Spirit, strong of vision, discerning the signs of the times, heralding the coming of the kingdom of God, with assured hope and mighty joy.

I am no mind reader, young gentlemen of the graduating class. I can not read your thoughts nor paint the visions that are now flitting before your imaginations—visions that hereafter substantialize into real achievement and character. There is but one eye that can see that inner world of your souls, the eye of God. Happy for you, happy for your country, if he sees there the honest purpose, the noble impulse, and holy aspiration that will enable you truly to discern the signs of the great times in which you live, and to act well your parts.

NOTES.

If you would develop the best possible self, keep self in the background of life's plans and purposes.

He who proclaims a truth should never apologize for its utterance. Truth is regal, and all her heralds are clad in purple livery. Let them speak boldly, as they ought to speak.

We have received a programme of the exercises on Children's Day at Salem, New Port circuit, North Mississippi Conference. Evidently the occasion was profitable and enjoyable.

It is a poor type of piety that employs itself in scolding out corruption in others. As between a religious culture and a poor, dead dog of a sinner, we would prefer to be—neither.

Many of our exchangers are much agitated concerning the "Woman Question," in Church and State. However men, or women, may reason about that matter, the first premise must be taken from Genesis II, 15. That is where the question originates.

Dr. Hoss, of the Nashville Christian Advocate, is learning something about "cotton picking." The field is broad one. An agricultural convention orator once said: "This question of picking cotton is a small question of large proportions." Even so.

The "commencement hop" is coming to be recognized as worse than nuisance. Whether encouraged or simply permitted by college authorities, it is an insult to the churches which disapprove, whose membership largely support the college. Let the whole business be stopped.

The type of religion that finds expression in a monastery, or any form of cloister, is not always cowardly nor selfish, but is the product of misconception of the true idea of holiness. Not innocuous secluded from temptation, but purity in the midst of temptation, is true Christian holiness.

To force error to abdicate is well, but not enough; the truth whose place it had usurped must be enthroned. Otherwise some new error will seize the sceptre—perhaps, a worse one. Truth must occupy. It is one thing to capture territory; it is quite another thing, and fully as important, to garrison it.

Cleveland or Harrison, Bidwell or Weaver—which will you take? This is a free country; vote as you please and allow others to do the same, "with out let or hindrance." Of one thing you may be sure: no political party can seriously injure a nation "whose God is the Lord," and no party can save one whose god is Mammon.

It is fair to judge of a sermon by only by the pleasure which it gives the hearer while listening to it, but the abiding impression which it leaves upon his mind.—Congregationalist.

The sermon which made the most lasting impression on the writer's life had little merit, either as a literary production or as a body of thought, nor was there sufficient pathos in it to start a tear in the entire audience. It was a simple, plain, earnest presentation of Christ as the Savior of sinners.

Rev. Moses U. Payne, who gave $25,000 to Payne Institute, Augusta, Ga., has further shown his interest in the colored people by giving $500 to assist in constructing the main building of Lane Institute, at Jackson, Tenn. Rev. Dr. James A. Orman, of this city will act as trustee for this institution, receiving and receipting for any funds that may be sent him.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

As we see things, no other school for the colored people are doing so good, thorough, practical, sensible work as Payne and Lane Institutes. Money invested in these schools is well invested. We hope that the good example of Bro. Payne will be followed by many.

Meridian District.

With the approbation of Bishop Hendrix, a new work has been formed south of Marion circuit and north of the Clarke circuit. The new work called for the present Why Not circuit, and the Rev. F. B. Ormond, L. P., appointed to supply the same. The new work embraces Why Not, Toomubee, Caseyville and Oak Grove, and several other neglected points.

Rev. W. T. Brownning, L. P., will supply Lauderdale circuit until Conference. He takes the place of Rev. M. Clark, who has been "translated" to Meridian, East End.

T. L. MELLIS.

"The Old Harbor Town."

We have received from the publisher, G. W. Dillingham, a novel, entitled "The Old Harbor Town," by Augusta Campbell Watson. It is a charming story of the Revolution, which is a true and graphic account of the battle at New London and Groton, Conn., fought by the British under the traitor Arnold against a handful of brave defenders of our rights. Price of the book, 50 cents.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Several brethren have passed through the city en route to the Seashore Camp Meeting, which began last Friday night.

Persons wishing to get a catalogue of Centenary College will please address Prof. G. H. Wiley, Jackson, La.

Bishop Keener, who is spending the summer at his home in Ocean Springs, gave us a brief call last week. He is looking well and talking cheerfully.

We are indebted to Isaac Doles, publisher, Indianapolis, for a very fine quartette, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," arranged with soprano, tenor and alto solos. Price, ten cents per copy.

Bro. Van Valkenburgh has a very nice supply of our religious books for sale at the Seashore Camp Grounds. All of our friends can supply themselves with good reading matter for the summer.

"A Defense of the Jericho Robbers," by W. W. Satterlee, is a temperance campaign document issued by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, at Chicago, and is quite a readable little pamphlet.

We are indebted to Dr. Baas for a catalogue of his fine school, Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga. The graduates of this college date back to 1810. In all, there have been 2,170 young ladies graduated from this college.

Dr. A. W. Jones has favored us with the forty-eighth annual catalogue of his school, the Memphis Conference Female Institute, at Jackson, Tenn. This prosperous college will begin its forty-ninth collegiate year, Monday, Sept. 5.

The first number of the Birmingham Methodist is on our table. It is to be devoted to "the various interests of our church in Birmingham and North Alabama." Rev. Z. A. Parker, D. D., is editor. We wish great success to the Methodist, and to all the interests it represents.

Rev. W. J. Roberts, who recently took the M. A. degree at Vanderbilt, has been selected to fill the chair of English in Centenary College. Mr. Roberts took the first honor in a class of thirteen where he was graduated a few years since, and now goes to fill a professorship in his alma mater.

A correspondent writes that the poetry, entitled "Waiting," which was published in our issue of June 30, as original, was published in this paper as a selection in the Summer of 1879. We do not pretend to know "original" poetry either by sight or sound. We are sorry to know that some folks will fool the editors sometimes.

Mr. W. H. Carter, a graduate of the University of Mississippi, has been chosen to fill the chair of Mathematics in Centenary College. He was graduated with distinguished honors, has had several years' experience in teaching, is an earnest Christian worker, and comes with the highest recommendations of the faculty and others as to his fitness for the place.

To the Auxiliaries of the North Mississippi Conference P. and H. M. Society.

Dear Sisters: We call your attention to several matters of interest and importance to our work. Our society is doing a work that is needed. Already, since our organization in March, 1891, we have helped three parsonages in our own Conference, besides contributing our share to the general work. We have made ourselves felt, and are now constantly receiving applications for aid. Most of these are for small amounts, and we are both surprised and thankful to find that much good can be done with a small amount of money.

The last application received is an urgent one. The applicant states that the parsonage will be sold unless they can get help, and says: "We have no church-building at this place; but if we can hold the parsonage, a good charge can be built up; otherwise it will be discontinued." In view of the urgent need, we ask every auxiliary to report to our Conference treasurer during the month of August, so that we can make an appropriation in September. The money is needed, and we trust that you will make your remittance as large as possible.

Notice this point especially. When your treasurers make their remittances, let them state what amounts have been expended on local parsonages. We wish to get accurate accounts on money spent on local work.

Reports show that eight societies have been organized since our annual meeting in April. This is a most gratifying increase, and we are encouraged to believe that a great future lies before us. Yours faithfully,

Mrs. ROBERT SOMERVILLE, Pres.
Mrs. H. W. FOOTE, Cor. Sec.

Take Hood's Pills and only Hood's because Hood's Pills are pure vegetable, perfectly harmless, effective, but do not cause pain or gripe. Be sure to get Hood's.

Go Forward.

Hear the King: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." A greater than the Red Sea is before us, but the land of promise lies in the regions beyond, and the church, under her last and greatest commission, is commanded to go over and possess the land. We must not hesitate—hesitation means unbelief. We dare not delay—delay means disobedience, danger, death.

At the General Conference at St. Louis, in 1890, opening doors constrained the church to "heavily re-entrench our lines, especially in Japan. By this advance, and by a falling off in collections the following year, a debt for borrowed money, amounting to $118,000, has accumulated. The existence of this debt hampers the Board of Missions and endangers the work already entered upon the foreign field. Shall we, by failure to support our advanced column, undo the work and jeopardize the lives of our heroic men and women? Never! The debt must be liquidated. The only way to liquidate a debt is to pay it. Once out of debt, we need never become involved again, since the Board has adopted the following resolution, which has been embodied in its by-laws: "In view of the danger that may follow excessive appropriations, the Board will hereafter limit its absolute appropriations to a sum within the amount of the regular collections of the preceding year."

Upon the eve of sailing for Japan, with Bishop Key, to help our weakened mission for a season, my departure has been arrested by being detailed by the Board and authorized by the Bishops to operate a system of collections which has for its specific object the complete extinguishment of the debt by the close of the fiscal year ending April 1, 1893.

This movement contemplates simultaneous efforts, direct and personal, throughout the entire connection, to secure voluntary contributions in cash and unconditional subscriptions, to be applied strictly to the immediate payment of the debt. In order to the more thorough prosecution of the work there will be a system of special solicitation and publication.

A solicitor will be appointed within the bounds of each Annual Conference, and one in each presiding elder's district. Solicitors working within the limits of districts will report to and consult with the Conference solicitor, and he in turn to the Secretary in charge of the movement. Solicitations are to be made personally, and for contributions over and above the regular amount given for missions, that the special effort shall not conflict with the regular collections.

All remittances are to be made through Conference solicitors to T. B. Holt, Treasurer of the Board of Missions, who shall apply such funds to the specific purpose of liquidating the debt.

The editors of our Conference papers are respectfully requested to throw their columns open to Conference solicitors, who will report progress from time to time; and also to furnish such editorial matter as shall, in their judgment, further this cause.

The entire effort is to be a voluntary one. The larger amounts will be expected from the centers, but let every station and circuit and individual send up a contribution. The heathen perish without the gospel. A great church, under a great commission, has halted long enough upon the threshold of her duty. Our missionaries are disheartened, the Board severely handicapped, and the church discredited. Let us rise up, wipe off the disgrace of halting two precious years over a debt of nine cents a member, and, lifting high our standards, go forward to victory!

WALTER R. LAMBUTH.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE BISHOPS.

Whereas, The College of Bishops has been requested to approve the action of the Board of Missions authorizing Dr. W. R. Lambuth to operate a system of special collections, in each Conference and presiding elder's district, for the payment of the debt of the Board; and

Whereas, The Bishops have been requested to second, as far as possible, by personal influence and public appeal, the efforts of the Secretary in special charge of this work; therefore,

Resolved, That we heartily approve the action of the Board in this movement, and will second the efforts of the Secretary to accomplish the end in view.

HOW TO KEEP COOL.

If you are looking for pleasant locations to spend the hot days at moderate cost, write to D. G. Edwards, G. P. A., Queen and Crescent Route, Cincinnati, O., for copy of Queen and Crescent Book entitled, "Summer Days," which will be mailed promptly free of charge.

FOR DYSPEPSIA, Indigestion, and Stomach Disorders, take HOOB'S IRON BITTERS. All dealers keep it, $1 per bottle. Genuine has trade mark and crossed red lines on wrapper.

In either of these, with a little Pearline, you can wash clothes more easily, more quickly, and more cheaply, than in any other way. You can, we say—but perhaps you don't have to. Then (?) the ease of it doesn't affect you so much. But the quickness, the thoroughness and the economy of it does. The less time that's spent on your clothes, the less it costs you—it's money in your pocket every time they're saved from the wearing rub, rub, rub of the old way. But the water doesn't make any difference. Use what's handiest. Hot or cold, hard or soft, salt or fresh, rain or shine, it's all the same if you have Pearline. When you don't have it—then there is a difference.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you some thing in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

What Governor Foster Discovered.

In my late canvass of the State, in every parish and community I met students and graduates of Centenary College. Their influence for good is felt everywhere in society, in business and official life. The alumni of Centenary College have filled the highest judicial stations in our State with credit and distinction. The most honored of the legal profession, the most eloquent divines, and the leaders in all the useful and dignified lines of life are of her sons. If I were called upon to say what school had left the greatest and best impress upon the society, business and government of Louisiana, I would unhesitatingly say—Centenary College.

An Important Suggestion.

"Prayer is the power that moves the arm that moves the world." So education is the power that gives success to our enterprises, both in Church and State. One can not be expected to successfully operate a complicated piece of machinery without thoroughly understanding its component parts and subtle interconnections. Success in any avocation of life depends largely upon a complete and thorough knowledge of the business engaging our attention. Competency is one of the essentials of success. Education is the very essence of competency. Doubtless, one cause of so many miserable failures in life is the lack of adequate knowledge.

This is applicable not only to those engaged in secular business, but equally so to those who minister in holy things. For one to make a success as a preacher, it is very necessary for him to have some knowledge of business; but it is absolutely essential that he should be familiar with the theological truth—at least, the fundamental doctrines of our holy religion. He can not teach what he does not know. He can not know what he has not had an opportunity to learn.

Doubtless, there is a time in every successful minister's life when he felt the need of biblical instruction, of theological training.
Indeed, success in the true sense of the word, without realizing this, is barely possible. He who feels the absolute necessity of an education to realize the desire of his heart, and the deeper this need is felt, the more apt is he to obtain the priceless jewel. A deep heartfelt need is fraught with the probability of obtaining. To fully realize the exceeding greatness of sin gives birth to an ardent desire to be relieved from the scourging of conscience, from the bondage of habit, from the dread of wrath to come. Without this there could be no conviction, no repentance, no humility of spirit, and, consequently, no conversion.
This sense of need—need of God, need of a Savior—does not end with conversion, but is one of the chief characteristics of a Christian's life from beginning to end. The saint most ripe for heaven is the most aware of his own shortcomings.

To be conscious of our tendency to evil, and to be possessed of a desire to be and do good, is a mark of true manhood; so, also, to be convinced of ignorance and possessed of a thirst for knowledge, is hopeful. An ignorant person who does not feel the need of knowledge is apt to remain in ignorance.

Comparatively speaking, in God's Word we are all ignorant. St. Paul says: "Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then, face to face;
now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." Some of the wisest men the world has ever produced have devoted their lives to the study of God's Word, and its depths have never been fathomed, its heights have never been explored, its breadth has never been surveyed. All have seemed to merely play with the pebbles along the shore of God's great ocean of truths. The inspired Word comes howling down the ages a living, sparkling, inexhaustible and unquenchable stream. But we must not be discouraged, for the very foam of its waters is fraught with life and hope and immortality. If these wise and experienced fathers of Israel have only played with the pebbles along the shore of this great ocean, I suppose that we inexperienced, untaught preachers (in God's Word) have no more than caught a glimpse of its living waters.

Mr. Editor, I, for one, feel the need of theological training, as, doubtless, do all of my young colleagues. I should be ashamed to feel otherwise. I realize more and more, day by day, the grave responsibility of standing between God and the people; of breaking to the latter the Bread of Life. How dreadful would be the consequences should I mistake and break to them the bread of death! For how awful the sequel of eternal death! O, "who is sufficient for these things?"

I am very much gratified to learn the Bible is to be comprehensively taught in the new College, and congratulate those who shall be so wise as to avail themselves of its superior advantages. But, brethren, those who are in the regular ministry and encumbered with a family, shall be compelled to revert to other means. Aged, experienced and established brethren, true and tried fathers, we turn to you—to you who have borne the heat and burden of the day; who have been made wise by long years of hard study and severe experience. O, give us the advantage of these years; that we may be the better capacitated for usefulness! Do not pass cruel, heartless criticisms upon our feeble efforts, but gently, patiently, persistently, kindly impart the knowledge we so much need.

The young preachers at Annual Conference are on no Committee or Board, and, consequently, after their examinations are over, there being no evening session, half of the days spent in their leisure. We have no time to waste, and this could be remedied, if, after the examinations are over every evening, say at four o'clock, some experienced brother would give us a lecture on dogmatic or systematic theology, the time could be profitably, as well as pleasantly, spent.

Brethren, we, as young theological students, need all the instruction, help and encouragement you can give us. W. M. STEVENS.

The New Birth.

To every thoughtful person the Christian life must appear as a constant miracle, a life not of the natural order of things.

If the second-blessing theory amounts to a well-defined idea, it is that in regeneration the soul is changed, and in sanctification the body is changed, at the times specified in the experience of the individual. While the beginning was a miracle, the life that flows from this beginning must be a natural result.
Dr. Hays' theory is that the spiritual nature of man is born into this world in a regenerated condition, and that the body only carries the entailed depravity, and that regeneration becomes necessary only after personal transgression which becomes possible only after a moral being has been developed to be a moral agent.

The Bible doctrine is that the whole being, spirit and body, with whatever appertained to both, was corrupted—that is, affected. Death was the penalty—spiritual death and physical death. Spiritual death was the loss of the divine spiritual life, together with condemnation and impending eternal banishment and punishment, etc. In this fall a wonderful transgression must have taken place: viz, a change of nature, so that sinfulness is as natural and constitutional as holiness was before the fall.

The change wrought is thus described: "But sin (personified as the devil), taking occasion by the uncommandment, wrought in me all manner of iniquity." This affected the soul, so as to give it a tendency, or bias, naturally or constitutionally, toward every conceivable lust; for the body is incapable of action without the consent and co-operation of the spirit seated in that body. The devil also came within and took possession of this fallen being to control it.

To effect man's redemption the atonement was made, by which God was reconciled, and the Spirit of Life was restored, not constitutionally, but as a foreign helper in this life, and in the resurrection morning to recreate the body, which has been reduced to dust, or ashes in the life of eternal truth, a spiritual body on the basis of the spirit that was permitted to dwell in it and rule it.

It is exceedingly hard to understand what happened to man's spiritual being. Paul speaks of sin as a sting, lodging its virus. O! if we can have a conception of something on the material order; but what is man's spiritual being composed of? To be a conceivable thing it must be a spiritual substance, an invisible, ethereal being, the counterpart of the body. The mind is lodged here; that which in man is capable of persuasion, capable of choice, and love, etc. Whether inoculated or not, the whole being was changed to a bias toward evil. This is as true of childhood as of adulthood, so that we are not "only conceived and born in sin," but we "go astray from the womb," and "we are inclined to evil, and that continually."

In childhood there is nothing but entailed depravity in an undeveloped state, the offense of which is removed by the atonement universally, and as this is to be removed in the general resurrection, when a constitutional change of nature is to take place, it is clear that the whole infantile world will be saved in Christ.
Of adulthood, when we are persuaded of our fallen condition, and are persuaded to do right at the cost of our natural life, trusting in Christ in every sense in which we must trust, yet yielding to his persuasion—when we first began to yield to this persuasion to live a righteous life, then and there we were born of the Spirit—that is, began to follow or be led by the Spirit. However, nature is not changed. As fallen beings, we set contrary to nature, contrary to the devil and all his agencies, which are opposed to righteousness.

By a mystery absolutely inexplicable, our dead humanity begins to reappear, so that we see God and love him and love righteousness.
In fact, our experience is as if a dead being had come to life or the lost one had been found. While this experience abounds, we take but little notice of our proper natural self. The power of the devil being overcome by Christ, the bias of nature being paralyzed, for a time we feel every way as new creatures.
This is the effect of faith, the substance of things hoped for in the general resurrection.
So long as we remain in this condition we remain the adopted children of God, the fallen state to the contrary notwithstanding.

Birth implies life; life brings action, action implies intelligence, and the whole turns upon the persuasion of the Spirit of Christ, who has cast the devil out and has taken possession, to rule us unless we "refuse him."

The trouble with theologians is that they have studied theories. They have contended for a change of nature, whereas they should have beheld and studied a mystery, "a mystery hidden in other ages and to other generations, but now made manifest by the Spirit."
Since Christ has come he has demonstrated this life in us, as a work of grace, a mysterious life, a miracle to begin with and a miracle at every moment after.

J. W. ELLISON.

The Levee Street Mission, Vicksburg, Miss.

"The Levee Street Mission" was closed on Monday, the fourth instant, after nearly five months of most earnest labor to lift up and care for the poor degraded and his associates, the tramp, and those given to the social drink habit. In a most singular manner hath God blessed our efforts. We have provided shelter for over 1,850 men and boys (white only).
Some of these were sheltered one or two nights only; others for several nights in succession, aggregating a total of over 5,000 in all. To these we have issued over 3,800 meals and furnishings.

During the first two and a half months the religious services were held twice each day—viz., 8 A. M. and 9 P. M. The men were always very orderly and attentive. No swearing or boracious language was ever allowed in the hall.
Gentleness, personal purity and cleanliness were constantly urged upon them.

We have done our very best to persuade them to "clean up," quit the haunts of sin and vice, value their time, money and manhood. We believe many were made to see and deplore their miserable existence; and quite a number did make a decided and marked improvement in their behavior and general appearance. Yet only about forty-five so far as we have been able to learn—have entirely quit the accursed social drink habit and are now "total abstainers."

We are happy to note the most marvelous changes in some of these men. Amongst these we point with joy at heart and thankfulness to Almighty God in behalf of Joseph L. Moran, well known to many contractors, for some of whom he has worked as foreman and timekeeper. We bespeak for him a useful life, and believe that he will become a "shining light" in temperance reform in America. Already this man's temperance lecture are having a telling effect. At the close of his first public lecture thirty-five men came forward, signifying their determination to quit the accursed drink habit for one year.

Mr. Moran's conversion and reform is of a genuine type. He holds and moves his audience with almost magic power, as he persues his wonderful experience and observations in his own original style upon the platform. He is a living monument of God's redeeming love and mercy. The worldly-minded and wicked have most bitterly opposed our efforts; yet we saw and do see that this work is not only a direct benefit to the persons saved, but the very act of reaching out a helping hand to lift up and purify the fallen and to save others from falling further into degradation has powerful influence for the public good. Personal safety and public economy demand the support of all such efforts as this.

The following, clipped from the Commercial Herald, of this city, of April 13, 1892, is a very important item, and shows for itself:

NOTABLE DECREASE IN CRIME.

The amount received for fines and forfeitures assessed and taken at the March term of the criminal court, as footed by Circuit Clerk Cooley Mann, since their collection, was only $582.30, a remarkable showing when it is considered that during the tenure of office the recruits from these sources at a single term of court have been as high as $5,000. There were only eighteen convictions for misdemeanor at this late term, while in the by no means distant past 150 to 160 were not uncommon.

I thank God that my heart is moved in deepest Christian sympathy for these poor, discouraged, despoiled and starved men.
Some of them are iron once happy home-sides. They have wandered. They are lost. Our Christian religion demands our efforts to save them.

"Darkest Vicksburg" is at our feet, and from this drunken, felonious darkness comes trifling vices and manners that can only be eradicated by divine interposition.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

YOUTHFUL DEPRAVITY.

BY S. JENNIE SMITH.

"Mama, I think I am not well."
Said lazy little Mabel;
The beans I'd given her to shell
Neglected on the table.

Her dimpled cheeks with roses vied,
Her eyes the stars resembled;
The chubby form my faith defied
My darling had dissembled.

"I'm sorry, dear," I gravely said,
"Because you'll miss the puddings;
The place for sick folks is in bed,
With not a taste of good things."

She thoughtfully smoothed out her dress,
This naughty little snorer,
"Then I'm not sick just now, I guess, I'll wait till after dinner."

Letter from El Paso, Texas.

My Dear Children: We have succeeded, under many difficulties, in establishing a large school for Mexican children in El Paso. We closed for the Summer last week, with 103 names on our roll. The Lord has been wonderfully good in supplying our necessities; but we still need money for a great many things, to build school-rooms, employ assistant teachers, etc. One of the plans we have devised for increasing our funds is the publishing of a little paper. We propose to call it Our Mission, and I trust it will bring in many miles to help forward this great work. The matter will consist of reports of our school and church work, letters from the children, and everything of interest connected with the Mexican missions. The editors will be two of my little girls, Maria Laras and Arantia Aguayo. We hope to print the first number this month. The press was given me by Miss Melissa Baker, so well known throughout the church for her good works. The paper will be a monthly, and the subscription price will be ten cents a year. You will wonder, perhaps, what profit we can make at that rate; but I have carefully calculated the cost, and find that each copy will bring us a net gain of eight cents; so, if you will all go to work and send us subscribers by tens and hundreds, we shall realize quite a little sum. I don't think anyone will refuse you a dime for this cause, if you will only take the trouble to ask for it.
We can not enter the paper as second-class matter, and so get reduced rates of postage, until we have a list of regular subscribers; so we will not everyone of you try to send us a large number of names by the end of this month.
For every hundred subscribers, with $10 cash, sent before the first of August, we will give a picture of the school as a premium. The first proceeds will be used to help build a much-needed school-room. Yours in love, BLANCHE GILBERT.

July 1.

Mr. Editor and the Young People: I wish to propose to you something that has been in my mind for several weeks, and which would have been offered before Mississippi was left, had not the departure been sooner by six weeks than was at first planned. As some of you know, Bishop Koy, Yochioka and myself are on the way to Japan. The white-painted steamer, Empress of Japan, is here ready to take us across the great Pacific. I have already seen much that might interest the boys and girls who read the Advocate; and in Japan, where I am to teach next season, many things will be found which, if written of, would probably be worth reading by young students.
My proposal is to go to the trouble of writing about two short pieces per month on these things, if the editor, on his part, will give the space in the Advocate, and if the young people, on their part, will agree to read. We say, "It takes two to trade." Here it will take three. I will know that the editor agrees if he publishes this. I will know that the young people agree if some of them will write to me or Dr. Carter. My address will be Metamora, Japan. What do you say? Your friend,
H. G. HAWKINS.

Vancouver, B. C., June 24, 1892.

Mr. Editor: After reading the letters from your little friends last week, I thought I would try to write you one. I am a little girl six years of age. I live in Centerville with my grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Fly. My peppa, Mr. J. R. Kirkpatrick, lives in Natchez.
I have a little sister. Her name is Ida. I attend the Methodist Sunday-school. My grandfather is the superintendent. Bro. W. W. Simmons is our pastor. Mrs. Chapman is my teacher. We have a neat church and an organ. My grandmother is organist. I am taking music lessons; studying the fourth reader, spelling, and arithmetic. I will now answer Pearl Kalar's question: "Who was cast into the fiery furnace?" Three Hebrew children—Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego. I will close by asking a question: Who in the Bible is spoken of as being led out of prison by an angel, in answer to the prayers of the church? Your little friend,

Centerville, Miss. BEE KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. Editor: As I saw my other letter in print, I thought I would write again, and answer some of the cousins' questions. I will answer Susie Wood's question: Jacob was buried in Canaan. I will answer Frank Henderson's question: Jacob had twelve sons. He loved Joseph the best. We have Sunday-school every week. With best wishes to the Advocate, I remain, Your friend, Ray St. Louis, Miss.

LOUIS HALL.

TO A DAUGHTER AT SCHOOL.—"Finish" every day and be done with it. For manners and right living it is a vice to remember. You have done what you could, some blunders and absurdities no doubt creep in; forget them as soon as you can. To-morrow is a new day; you shall begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day for all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the rotten yesterdays.—Emerson.

QUEEN WILHELMINA.—A recent prank of the little Queen of Holland, Wilhelmina, is reported. Having forgotten to prepare her geography lesson on a certain day, she was required by her governess to draw a map of Europe as a penalty. This governess, by the way, is an English woman. When the young sovereign had completed her task, it appeared that the country of her instructor was represented by a minute dot, while Holland had been exaggerated into an immense kingdom.

"You must come over and play with the baby some time," said a visitor to a little girl.
"Yes, ma'am; maybe I will," answered the little girl. "Is it a walking baby, or just a wagon baby?"

SCIENTIFIC.

Aluminum Air Ships of the Future.

I think it was about 1848 that aluminum was discovered, and for some years the process of separating it from the clay near the earth's surface was very tedious and quite costly, it being sold at about $12 per pound, and for many years French chemists held a monopoly of its product.

At length Yankee genius took hold of the business, and in a few years reduced the price to about $1 per pound, and it being three times lighter than steel and nearly as strong, and, no doubt, it will still be cheapened, and it has been hinted by some to even five cents per pound, and we dare not dispute this. Be this as it may, we can but hope, and I really expect, that an air ship will yet be constructed principally of this wonderful metal, with buoyant and propelling wheels similar to those of an ocean steamer, driven by electric power, possibly carried in a storage battery, or produced by the air ship itself.

The balloon, so far, has proved a very dangerous means of flying in the air, as well as a very expensive means.

Possibly, some Yankee or French genius may discover a simple method of separating the 30 per cent. of oxygen from the atmosphere, which is a supporter of heat, which will assist greatly in solving this difficult problem. Some aerial wizard will spring up, like Edison or Menlo Park, and then accomplishment is certain. At our 1876 Centennial, an electric light was produced as a mere curiosity. I then did not imagine that I would live to see cities and dwellings illuminated as they now are; but so it is. In my boyhood there was no railroad, no electric telegraph. No steamer had crossed the ocean. Talking with each other by telephone was scarcely thought of. Professor Morse, who in 1832, I think it was, sent the first message from Washington to Baltimore, lived to stand in Central Park, New York, in front of the bronze statue placed there, and send a message under the ocean and around the globe, and I had the pleasure of being present when this was done; and now, no doubt, a man will soon be able to stand in New York City and talk with a man in London by telephone.

We truly live in the age of possibilities and probabilities. One scientific discovery aids another. And an aerial ship is more probable to-day than a steam ship was two hundred years ago.—J. E. Emerson, in Scientific American.

An Object Lesson in Athletics.

The Greeks were a wonderfully athletic race.
They had their games, their races and their boxing matches, and the great events which marked their chronological period were the Olympian games, to which they gave so much attention. On the contrary, the Jewish people had their festivals, their seasons of solemn joy and praise, but no games, so far as we know.
They paid no special attention to athletics, and yet, notwithstanding their dispersion and chastisements, the Jewish people outlive all other peoples, and have maintained their existence through successive centuries, while other nations of greater physical strength, and devoting much of their time to physical culture and athletic exercises, have melted away, sunk into insignificance, or perished.

We sometimes meet a gentleman in the prime of life, who is constantly crippled in his limbs in business by a disease of the heart, which he explains to be the result of rowing with his athletic friends in his earlier years.
Numerous similar cases are said to exist. The Health Journal says: "Of thirty-two all round athletes, the safest kind, in a New York club of five years ago, three are dead of consumption, five have to wear trusses, four or five are lame, and three have catarrh and partial deafness. The writings of the eminent London physicians, Drs. Fothergill, Clifford Albani and Moxon, show the intimate relations between mechanical strain and diseases of the arteries and of the valves of the heart. Dr.
Patton, Chief Surgeon of the United States National Soldiers' Home, says that while of the five thousand soldiers in the home, fully eighty per cent. are suffering from heart disease in one form or another, due to the forced physical exertion of the campaigns, he makes the prediction that as large a percentage of the athletes of to-day will be found twenty-five years from now to be victims of heart disease, resulting from the muscular strain they force themselves to undergo.—The Christian, Boston.

ORIGIN OF THE PIANO.—The piano-forte was invented by Bartolomeo Cristofori, a harpsicorder maker of Padua, Italy, who exhibited four instruments in 1709. The honor was formally claimed for Merisus, a French maker, who produced a piano in 1716, while the German writers maintained that Schroeter, of Dresden, was the inventor of the instrument. The earliest date ascribed to the latter's achievement, however, is 1711. During the present century, however, an Italian document was discovered, written by Marchese Scipione Mattei, a Florentine scholar, in 1711, which testifies that Bartolomeo Cristofori, of that city, exhibited four pianos in 1709, which statement was originally published in the Giornale in that year, accompanied by a diagram of Cristo-fari's action principle, employing hammers, which constituted the chief difference between the harpsichord and the piano. In Mattei's writings, Cristofori's name is given as "Cristo-fallo," but this is proved to be an error, because inscriptions upon existing piano-fortes give the

OBITUARIES.

BROWN.—Mrs. Susan B. Brown was born Dec. 17, 1815, and was married to Samuel H. Brown in 1836. Their union was a happy one. Two children were the result of this marriage, one of whom had preceded her, and the other remains to mourn her loss. She was left a widow while still the bloom of youth was on her cheeks, and was again married to Elias Brown, whom she survived twenty years.

She had been a member of the Methodist Church for forty-five years, and died happy in God and in blessed hope of eternal life. All the days of her pilgrimage had been spent in suffering, and at the last these sufferings became so intense that she longed for death. In her last moments she was emphatically true to the life lived for others. The burden of her thought was, "What can I do to make others happy?" She was ever ready for work in the Master's vineyard. "Thy prayers and thine aid" applied to her as they did to Cornelius. No enterprise of the church failed because she was not ready with money and with prayers. She was a constant reader of the Word, and her Bible shows traces of much use; the marked passages revealing the great spiritual joy of the owner and her trusting confidence in the Lord of hosts. In the last years of her life she wrote many beautiful prayers. They breathe a spirit of deep humility and entire consecration to the Master's use.

She fell on sleep, March 20, 1892 (aged seventy-three years), commending her children and grandchildren to the God who had sustained her in life and who called her not at the portals of death.

The church at Enterprise has lost one of its oldest and purest members, and has gained the privilege of counting one more "saint in the arms of Jesus."

HER PASTOR.

BRUNER-MARGARET BRUNER (nee Holland) was born in Ireland, March, 1821; moved to South Carolina, 1824; was happily married to Jesse G. Bruner, March 16, 1837, and moved with her husband shortly after their marriage to Mississippi; moved from Mississippi to Arkansas in 1849, and died April 21, 1892. Jesse Bruner was a useful Methodist preacher in the local ranks for a number of years. He died Oct. 27, 1864, leaving grandma with the care and training of nine children. Four of the nine, preceded her to the better land; the remaining five are in the church, and we trust, are happy on the way. W. A. Bruner, her eldest son, is a Methodist preacher, and a useful man in the local ministry. Grandma Bruner was a Methodist for more than fifty years. When we say that she was a Methodist, we do not mean that she only had her name enrolled upon the class book, but we mean to say she was a good Methodist. A good Methodist is always a Christian. She did her work well in this life. She was a true woman in every sense of the word; true to her family, to her church and God.

Grandma and her faithful children have been a great help to the writer. She has left a large family of children and grandchildren, and a host of friends, to mourn her departure. Let us not mourn as those who have no hope. Since grandma has gone, earth is more lonely, but heaven is more precious. "Hail, Lord, take me," were the last words she ever spoke on earth; these were spoken just before she died. Grandma has been hearing the cross for many years; she has now laid it down to wear the crown forever.

F. L. DOAK.

HALL-MORGAN HALL died at his residence in Webster parish, May 11, 1892. Bro. Hall was born in the State of Georgia in 1800. He joined the M. E. Church in 1822. Sixty years were spent by him in the service of God and the church. Bro. Hall labored with the church from a sense of duty before he was converted, but was converted in a short while at his own bedside. Other duties soon presented themselves and were performed. Family worship was a duty that he discharged from the time of his conversion until God had him come up higher. He suffered a long time with a cancer, and was for some time confined to his room and bed. The writer visited him often in the past three years, and always found him ready to talk about the condition of his soul and the expected joys of the future. He often expressed a desire to depart and be with Christ, yet he was willing to suffer if it meant that he might be made perfect.

He leaves a large family connection, the majority of which belong to the church of his choice. Two daughters survive him, thirty-eight grand and fifty-nine great-grandchildren; he was a very industrious man, and made good property. His widow and children are well provided for. He was a good husband and a kind father. He loved his church and his God and left us in peace. May his mantle fall on some of his grandsons, and may the family live so as to be with him again in glory!

H. W. HAY.

McNAIR.—Mrs. SENEY McNAIR (whose maiden name was Castellan) was born Oct. 7, 1807, and died April 10, 1892.

She was a consistent and faithful member of the M. E. Church, South; a loving wife and devoted mother. She leaves a husband and several small children; but they have the consolation of knowing that she is at home with God. May they all meet above!

R. D. GALE, P. C.

Trenton, Miss.

YEAGER.—JAMES HATTS YEAGER, son of Rev. W. W. Yeager, was born July 6, 1866, in Montgomery county, Miss., and passed from the sorrows of earth to the glories of heaven at his father's home, in Sunflower county, Miss., April 6, 1892, leaving mother, mother, brothers and sisters and friends to mourn their loss, but not as those that mourn without hope, for he was soundly converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1889, and lived a consistent Christian until he received a summons to come up higher. He was elected steward at the last fourth quarterly conference, and served in that position until his Lord called him to give an account of his stewardship upon earth.

As to his testimony, we know nothing more than he died as he had lived—trusting Jesus. He was a very quiet young man, caring but little for the amusements of life; ever true to all trusts of responsibility committed to him, thereby setting an example worthy of universal admiration. He was kind to all, and would deny himself that others might be pleased.

Weep not, dear bereaved ones; your loss is his eternal gain, for he is not dead, but sleepeth. He fell a soldier of the cross, with the shield of faith covering him, to await the coming of the morning of the resurrection, when Jesus will come in clouds of glory to gather up his jewels of earth with which to deck his resplendent crown of immortal glory. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

VICKERY.—Mrs. MARTHA VICKERY (nee Lyons) was born in Chickasaw parish, La., Aug. 7, 1862, and died in Lake Charles, La., June 4, 1892, aged thirty-nine years nine months and twenty-seven days. On Dec. 9, 1875, she was married to her greatly bereaved husband, with whom she lived happily to the end of her pilgrimage.

Sister Vickery was converted and joined the church in 1880, under the ministry of Rev. Mr. Cotton, in Orange, Texas, and lived a devoted Christian till the call, "Come up higher," came. On June 1 her soul was released from the bondage of earth and ascended to a seat at God's right hand.

She lived the life of the righteous and died in grand Christian triumph. She realized that "Jesus can make a dying-bed feel soft as downy pillows are," and sweetly slept in Jesus. Sister Vickery leaves a devoted husband and three affectionate children, brothers and sisters, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but she has gone to inherit eternal life, and they expect to meet her again.

Thos. J. LUTON.

GORMAN.—E. A. GORMAN (nee More), after many months of patient suffering, departed this life near Osyka, Miss., April 4, 1892. She leaves a husband, Mr. D. K. Gorman, of Crowley, La., and four children to mourn their loss. She joined the M. E. Church at Pipkin's Chapel, St. Helena parish, La., when about sixteen years of age, in which she lived a consistent Christian until death.

This writer talked and prayed with her a few hours before her death, and she gave every assurance of perfect peace with God. Her only regret was to leave her husband and little children; but to her heavenly Father she commended them, and with that faith that fails not in the hour of death, she leaned her head upon her Savior and sweetly fell asleep, leaving the testimony of those who love the Lord till he comes.

May God comfort the husband and children, as only God can comfort, in this dark hour of bereavement!

GRIFFIN SEGALL.

HENSON.—Died, the little son and only child of William and M. Henson. He was a little over a year old. He was taken with cramp on Friday, and died Saturday, May 21.

One more star in the savior's crown, one more little jewel at home, to suffer no more, and to know nothing of the cares and troubles of this world. It was hard to give him up; but think how much better off he is—free from pain, and in the Savior's arms.

JULIA A. McBERTH.

HUNT.—Died at her home, Vernon parish, La., NANCY ANNE HUNT; born Feb. 23, 1830, in the State of Mississippi. Sister Hunt joined the church in 1872; was married to W. H. Hunt, May 13, 1875, and fell asleep in Jesus, May 14, 1892. She leaves a husband and six children and friends to mourn her loss. Sister Hunt suffered a long while, but with patience submitted herself to God.

Sister Hunt was a dutiful wife, a loving mother and a faithful Christian.

May God bless father and the children to go on to the home of the blessed to part no more!

AUNTIE.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville, La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Atlanta, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep at night, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend, hearing of my condition, recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. He had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The Official Government Reports:

The United States Government, after elaborate tests, reports the ROYAL BAKING POWDER to be of greater leavening strength than any other. (Bulletin 13, Ag. Dep., p. 599.)

The Canadian Official Tests, recently made, show the ROYAL BAKING POWDER highest of all in leavening strength. (Bulletin 10, p. 16, Inland Rev. Dep.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The crevasse water in Lake Pontchartrain is over the banks in some places, and the rear of the city is threatened. Hundreds of acres of vegetable farms are now under water.

The seventh Annual Louisiana State Fair and Shreveport Exposition will be held at Shreveport, La., beginning on Oct. 31, and closing on Nov. 6, next. Thirty thousand dollars will be paid out in prizes.

The Senate bill for the free coinage of silver has been favorably considered by the committee, and has been reported to the National House. It is thus assured of a place on the calendar, and will probably be taken up this week.

A bill appropriating $30,000 for the relief of the sufferers of the overflow in this State was passed by the Legislature last week. The relief boat, Danube, in charge of the State agent, left this city on July 9, destined for the overflowed sections.

An explosion at the Giant Powder Company's Works, in Highland, Cal., caused the complete demolition of the buildings at a loss of $150,000. About one hundred Chinamen, who composed the majority of employees, were killed; also three or four white men.

Work has been begun in Philadelphia on another big sugar refinery. It is expected to be in operation within a year. The buildings and machinery will cost about $1,000,000, and the refinery will start with another million of capital, all of which has been subscribed.

At the conference of Jewish rabbis, held in New York City, it was decided by unanimous vote to permit the adoption of cremation in the Jewish Church. It was resolved that the Jews of America would celebrate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus.

The eleventh International Convention of the Societies of Christian Endeavor assembled in New York City on June 7. About 10,000 delegates, representing all countries, were present. The convention renewed its protest against the Sunday opening of the Chicago World's Fair.

Nearly 9,000 new money order offices will be the result of the recent order which changes the rule governing the creation of such offices. Prior to April last, a postoffice must have a revenue of at least $250 before it would have the right to issue money orders. But now any office having receipts of not less than $300 is made a money order office without further preliminaries. The extension of this system to small towns is believed to be a great public convenience.

A force of Pinkerton's police were sent against the strikers at Carnegie's Iron and Steel Works, at Homestead, eight miles east of Pittsburgh, on June 6, and an attempt was made to secure possession of the property. The strikers resisted and a desperate fight ensued with Winchester used on both sides, while the strikers supplemented their resistance with cannon, dynamite and burning oil. The Pinkerton forces finally surrendered under promise of protection, and were subjected to most barbarous treatment on their way to the place of imprisonment, many women joining the infuriated strikers in cruelly beating and wounding the prisoners. Sixteen persons were killed, including two Pinkerton men, and about sixty police were wounded with stones and sticks after surrendering. The State militia was ordered to the scene of riot by Gov. Patterson.

FOREIGN.

Hon. John Morley, Mr. Gladstone's lieutenant, was defeated for Parliament in the election held at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

The revolution in Honduras is said to be over. The President has been captured, and the revolutionists have overcome all opposition. The revolution was fortunately accomplished with very little bloodshed, and the easy overthrow of the government proved its weakness.

The Prussian minister to the Vatican has been withdrawn. This is considered to be a hint that Germany will not permit the Holy See to meddle with international politics until the Pope's advisers persuade him to refrain from overt hostility to Germany. Diplomatic intercourse between them will henceforth cease.

A fire occurred in St. John, Newfoundland, on July 8, and it is estimated that fifteen million dollars' worth of property was destroyed. Nearly all the prominent buildings in the center of the city were burned. About 15,000 people, made homeless by the conflagration, are lodged in tents supplied by the military authorities.

Advices from Stockholm state that the Swedish government is unalterably resolved not to yield the concessions asked for by the Norwegians, and that if it is necessary a Swedish force will be marched into Norway. King Oscar especially is resolute in his determination that the union of the two countries shall be preserved, in fact as well as in name. A numerous minority of Norwegians are opposed to the agitation for separation from Sweden.

Prince Bismarck continues his denunciation of the German government's policy and methods, and if this course is persisted in, it is thought retaliatory measures will be adopted by those in authority. Government officials say that if Chancellor Von Caprivi is forced to renounce his disclosures regarding his predecessor, facts will be brought to light that will not be to Prince Bismarck's credit. The prince's closest friends and most intimate associates heartily desire that the fight shall come to an end.

Internal Vigilance

Is the price of health. But with all our precaution there are enemies always lurking about our systems, only waiting a favorable opportunity to assert themselves. Impurities in the blood may be hidden for years, or even for generations, and suddenly break forth, undermining health and hastening death. For all diseases arising from impure blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is the unequalled and unapproached remedy. It is King of them all, for it conquers disease.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The twenty-first annual camp meeting under the management of the Henington Camp Meeting Association will commence Thursday, Sept. 1, 1892.

Rev. Geo. S. Inge will conduct the services again this year, and will be present during the entire meeting.

Ministers of the gospel are earnestly invited to attend and will be provided for during the meeting.

A great gathering of the people is expected and ample arrangements will be made for the accommodation of all who come. Board at lower rates than heretofore.

The I. C. R. L. will give the usual reduction of fare from all points on the road.

To meet the expenses of the meeting and to avoid the necessity of a public collection, the usual entrance fee of twenty-five cents will be required—to be paid only once during the meeting. Tickets not transferable.

J. W. McNEIL, Secretary.

Bethel Camp Meeting will commence Aug. 4, 1892, and continue about a week. This camp ground is about ten miles from Woodville, and twelve from Centerville, Wilkinson county, Miss. Persons coming on the L. N. O. and T. R. R. can get conveyance from Centerville. Entertainment will be furnished at reasonable rates. Ministers will be entertained without charge.

J. W. SANDELL, P. C.

Providentia Camp Meeting will commence Aug. 18, 1892. Public buildings all lot, good and responsible hands. Ministers amply provided for. The editor and assistant editor are specially invited.

Tryon, Miss., July 1, 1892.

I am so favorably impressed with the medicinal virtues of Matchless Mineral Water, of Greenville, that I will continue to prescribe it in the future. I believe it to be the most wonderful natural remedy of the world. I have given it a fair test in many of the worst forms of female diseases. I make these statements for the benefit of professional men.

Still in "Old Ireland."

After a visit to Blarney Castle and some other historic places in the city of Cork, I left by the afternoon train for Dublin, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, who gave me much valuable information about the country through which we passed. That railway led us through the counties of Tipperary, Queens and Kildare, with good opportunity of making observations upon the agricultural condition of the section, and the manner of life of the tenantry. While driving over the hills near the city of Cork, I looked into several houses of farm laborers. Their buildings have been improved under some legislation a few years ago, but they live in filth and wretchedness still. I noticed the large family huddled in one room, on a dirt floor, the adjoining room being the stable for cow, horse and pigs. In some parts of the country I was told the family occupied one room, and the pigs were not excluded. The soil is productive, but American wheat has compelled farmers to convert their fields into grazing lands. Oats, barley and potatoes are cultivated, but the chief industry is raising stock. This, in a measure, accounts for the immense immigration to America for many years past.

Passing through Tipperary, I had a good view of the famous "bogs of Ireland." There the people get their fuel, and hundreds of men and women, were at work cutting out the black turf in blocks and piling them up to dry. It is said to make very good fuel. I saw much of it being hauled into Dublin.

One of the objects of interest to be seen from the railroad car is a mountain called "The Devil's Bl." And very appropriately is it named. It looks quite like some evil, hungry monster had bitten an immense piece out of that lofty ridge. Two or three of those tall, circular towers, found at different points in Ireland, each with an ancient and curious history, were also seen.

Dublin, the political capital of Ireland, the official residence of the Lord Lieutenant, and a rich treasury of romance and history, is well worth a visit. I much regretted that a longer stay was not possible. The two places where I longest lingered were Trinity College and St. Patrick's Cathedral. The three hundredth anniversary of the Dublin University, of which Trinity College forms a part, will be celebrated in a few days. Representatives from Australia and the different, distant parts of earth will be there. Trinity College was founded during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and has been the alma mater of some of the most distinguished names in the civil and literary history of the United Kingdom.

Edmund Burke, the great orator and statesman, was educated at Trinity, and a bronze statue of him appropriately stands near the front entrance. Oliver Goldsmith was also a student in those halls, a statue of whom stands just across the entrance from Edmund Burke, and in the library is carefully preserved a pane of glass taken from the room of Goldsmith, on which he had cut his name. Grattan, the Irish statesman, and the leader of the last Irish Parliament, known as the "Grattan Parliament," was also an alumnus of the college, and just in front of the main building is a large statue of that favored son of Trinity. Within the library is the roll of that Parliament from 1783 to 1790, containing the autograph of each member. The library contains 250,000 volumes, and is increasing rapidly. Under an act of Parliament, of many years ago, the college is entitled to a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom. I looked reverently upon some old manuscripts of the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries, and many of later date. The library of Archbishop Usher is there, and was really the substantial foundation of the whole collection. In glass cases are carefully preserved autograph letters of Mary, Queen of Scots; Dean Swift; Dr. Johnson, of Dictionary fame; Ben Johnson, Pope, Milton and others. Of the numerous venerable buildings, the ample equipment, etc., I need not consume space in writing. I noticed a number of young men passing from one building to another, wearing black gowns and peculiar caps, and was informed that all students in class hours are thus habited.

Diagonally across the street from Trinity College is the Bank of Ireland, a semi-circular building, with immense Corinthian columns. That was once the House of Parliament, and much of it is preserved exactly as when used for legislating in behalf of this law-making people. The building was begun in 1729, and cost over £90,000. It was purchased by the Bank of Ireland for less than half that sum. The old House of Lords looks now as when the peers vacated it—the same long table, chairs, etc.; everything the same, except a statue of George III. stands where the Lord Chancellor sat in presiding over the body. On the walls are two magnificent pieces of tapestry—one representing the Battle of the Boyne; the other the Defense of Derry.

Near this historic structure is a statue of Tom Moore, whose muse has given an immortal sweetness to the traditions of this Emerald Gem of the Sea. And just beyond, in the center of one of the principal streets, is a magnificent monument to Lord Nelson, surrounded by a life-sized bronze statue of the hero of Trafalgar. And near the Nelson monument is a statue of O'Connell. When passing that the driver of the jaunting-car, who had commented with characteristic volubility and eloquence on everything seen, exclaimed, "Oh, sir, there was the boy who could give any of 'em a molle, and then bate 'em!"

I spent some time in St. Patrick's Cathedral—the Westminster of Ireland—and early made famous by the ministry of Dean Swift. There is a marble bust of the witty Dean on the walls, and by its side the Latin inscription he had prepared for his own tomb. And just under the floor the great genius sleeps. The building is quite an old one, having been erected in the twelfth century. Tradition says it is built on the site where St. Patrick baptized his first converts from heathenism. At all events, near the chancel there is a bold spring of clear, cool water, and the sexton was kind enough to let down a cup and give me to drink. If there be any virtue in that sacred well, I shall claim it. All round the building are busts and marble slabs that commemorate the names and events of Irish history.

Of Phoenix Park—said to be the finest in Europe—with its Wellington monument 205 feet high, its Viceregal Lodge, the Summer residence of the Lord Lieutenant, the Constabulary Barracks, the Zoological Gardens, etc., I shall not write, but greatly enjoyed. And so other places will have to be passed by.

At two P. M. I left for Belfast and the Conference, and at six P. M. was met at the depot by good friends to welcome me to the hospitality of Irish Methodism, and the palatial home of Mr. George Horner, J. P., The Lodge, Cliftonville. Never have I received a more cordial greeting, or enjoyed more open-hearted, generous hospitality.

I was in good time to hear what is termed the "opening sermon" of Rev. Dr. T. Bowman Stephenson, the president of the Conference. The pastoral session of the Conference—attended only by ministers—met on the sixteenth instant, at which time the appointments and other matters confined to the pastoral session had been considered. The representative session—composed of the ministers present and a certain number of laymen elected from each district—had met that morning. This, now, was the formal, opening sermon; and an able, instructive one it was, quite up to some of Dr. Stephenson's platform and pulpit utterances at the Ecumenical Conference in Washington. The next morning, after the Minutes were read, a resolution of thanks to the president for his sermon was moved, the mover making quite a speech, which entered into a minute analysis of the good points of the sermon, and supported by two others in rather lengthy talks. The resolution was put by the vice-president and adopted most heartily, after which Dr. Stephenson made a short, modest response of thanks. That, of course, was all very new to me. I knew it was the custom on this side the sea, but had never witnessed it before. The secretary then read my credentials as a fraternal delegate from the M. E. Church, South, and I was introduced to the Conference in appreciative words by the president. On Tuesday evening the delegates from England, Rev. John Bond and Rev. Thomas Allen, and Rev. Dr. John Potts, of Canada, had been received, and delivered addresses.

The Conference, therefore, fixed that evening to hear Rev. Mr. Thompson, of the South African Conference; Rev. Mr. Best, of New Zealand, and myself. Being quite unwell from a severe cold contracted at sea, and commissioned chiefly to the English Conference in response to their message to us, I did not deliver a formal address—spoke only about twenty minutes. As is their custom, however, a resolution of thanks was offered by Dr. Wm. Crooks, seconded by Dr. McMullen, and supported by Dr. Oliver McCutcheon. All of these had been in the South, and spoke most delightfully of their observations upon Southern Methodism, and their acquaintance with some of our men. All spoke, and very generously, of Bishop McTearle, Dr. McFerrin and Dr. Summers, and were pleased that a representative of our great branch of the Methodist family had been sent to see them. And in private these honored brethren have much to say pleasantly of their visit to the South.

One from America, and accustomed to the proceedings of Methodist Conferences, enters readily into the spirit of the body, but is struck with the difference in the manner of conducting business. In the first place, their parliamentary methods are totally different. If several arise at once to address the chair, he recognizes one, and announces the order in which the others will be heard. Then each member has what they call a "Blue Book"—a large pamphlet in blue covers, which contains the statistical returns for the year, reports from all committees, colleges, schools, etc., and recommendations from the district meetings for Conference action. Any original propositions, not in the "Blue Book," on which the Conference is asked to pass, are given first as "Notices of Motion." These must lie over for, at least, twenty-four hours, and are generally printed. Other questions of important legislation—as, for instance, whether attendance upon class meeting shall be a condition of membership, which was discussed yesterday—are sent around to the district meetings for an expression of opinion. The action taken yesterday practically changes the rule. It provides that non-attendance upon class on account of sickness, distance, or other reasons, shall not be a bar to membership. This is well, for the rule is quite a dead letter. Several of the pastors told me that not more than one-fourth of the members attend class. They issue them the quarterly tickets regularly, whether they come or not. In some congregations the attendance is better than others—dependent, I am told, on the efficiency of the class leader. Another fact in this membership matter differs from our method. Members are admitted to class and registered by the leaders. They are not received before the congregation by the pastor, in a formal, solemn way, as with us. When I told some of the brethren about our plan, they expressed themselves as heartily favoring its adoption here.

On Thursday there was a great debate in Conference on a resolution introduced by Dr. McMullen, protesting against home rule for Ireland. All the Protestants of the country are strongly against Mr. Gladstone's measure. Many who have always been Liberals, and followed his leadership with enthusiastic admiration, have parted with him on this issue. They see in it the domination of the priesthood—the country ruled and ruled by Archbishop Walsh. It was a stirring discussion; Rev. Wm. Arthur, who is here attending Conference, making the speech of the day. The resolution was passed by a vote of 193 to 11—and that fairly expresses the Protestant sentiment of Ireland on the question. One can not understand this Irish problem without being on the ground, and hearing both sides presented. There has been much uninformed sentiment among us in America. The laws for the protection of tenants would not be tolerated in our country. The grants made to them for various purposes could never obtain with us. The tenantry control the land, and can borrow money from the government to make improvements at a nominal interest, and for a long term of years. It is not the laws or the landlords of Ireland that cause the poverty and ignorance of so many thousands, but their type of religion. Belfast, a Protestant city, is growing like places in Romanism in the south of Ireland, and a better location for commercial prosperity, has declined from 100,000 to about 70,000 in population. These Methodists have the revival spirit, and have seen their work prosper, but, of course, know not the inspiration of rapid movement that we do. They deserve, therefore, the more honor. These figures are encouraging to them: During the decade there was a decrease in the number of Roman Catholics of 10.6 per cent.; Protestant Episcopalians declined 4.4 per cent.; Presbyterians, 5.5 per cent.; and there was an increase in the number of Methodists of 16.1 per cent.

They legalize and utilize the work of evangelists—known as "general missionaries." Their salaries are paid out of the Home Mission Fund, houses are provided, and other necessary expenses. They hold meetings in conjunction with the circuit preachers, or in tents. The superintendent of the Belfast City Mission has a "gospel mission car." Several of these have been built for use in Ireland and England. Their expenses are largely met by the sale of books. It is said they have done much good. These cars are drawn by horses from village to village. The mission workers sleep in them at night, sell books during the day, and mission services held in the open air, or in chapels, in the evening. The car usually spends eight or ten days in a place.

There was a remarkable scene in Conference yesterday. Indeed, it was worth crossing the Atlantic to witness. The oldest local preacher in Ireland, the Rev. Mr. Hunter, was introduced to Conference, and gave $2,500 to foreign missions, and $2,500 to home missions. There was great rejoicing, and the venerable man was urged to speak. He said he had more pleasure in giving that sum than they in receiving. "Every penny I have earned myself, and there is not a fraudulent fraction in it. I haven't given all, for that would be too much." And in referring to his labors as a local preacher, said that in forty years he had only been at the Lord's table three times. Local preachers here, you know, are never ordained, and he always had appointments, so he could not be present when the circuit preacher administered the communion. He had held fifty-five New Year and watch-night services, had been over sixty years a total abstainer, and now at eighty-seven years of age he was able to preach twice a day. It was a gracious hour, and tears flowed freely while the old veteran gave the brethren his benediction.

This is a fine body of men—many of them having seen years of service, and of marked ability. Dr. Potts, of Canada, has worthily represented his church, and is enjoying a visit to his native land. My friend, Rev. Thomas Allen, of Sheffield, England, is a guest in the same house with me, and a pleasant companion. Rev. John Bond, whom American Methodists remember, is one of the honored visitors from across the channel. But of this occasion and the Methodism of Ireland I must write again.

Fraternally,
CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

P. S.—It is rumored that Rev. W. J. Dawson, of England, is about to accept a Congregational pulpit in London. He is the brother who wrote of the "Failures of the Ecumenical Conference."

A Noble Life.

A REMINISCENCE BY CHAS. F. EVANS, D. D.

The venerable subject of this sketch, who left us last January, I learned greatly to admire during my four years' pastorate at Shreveport, and I feel that so bright and beautiful a life, which illustrated for the church the ideals of her pulpit, deserve from the church, at least, an elegiac, if not a more permanent recognition. She was the wife of Rev. Jno. C. Burrus, one of our most remarkable preachers, and shared with him the toils and triumphs of the itinerancy in Mississippi and Louisiana, in days when both were of the heroic type. Her personal gifts and accomplishments would have easily carried her into the front rank, had her lot been cast in other circles, as promptly as she reached it in the church. She possessed the prudence and modesty of Abigail, the industry and sagacity of King Lemuel's model woman, "whose price was far above rubies," together with the faith of Lois, and the hospitality and zeal of Lydia, "whose heart the Lord opened." She was a woman of extensive reading and trained thought. Her accumulations represented the fields of history, biography, travel, philosophy, poetry, romance and theology. She could tell you why she adored the color of a flower, the composition of a landscape, or the entablature of an auditorium. She had definite standards with which to compare the imagery, sentiment or rhythm of a poem, and authoritative tests by which to verify the speculations of philosophy or the excursions of theology. With a decided preference and culture in the fine arts, her judgment was rarely at fault, where questions of beauty, propriety or delicacy bore any conspicuous relation to the merits of a case. In early life she evinced great skill in portrait painting. She was fond of music, and was a discriminating judge of what was excellent in popular or artistic productions. She loved the Wesleyan hymns, and the old tunes, the latter for their typical melody, and the former for the truest poetry and noblest interpretation of religious experience.

I have been surprised to find how thoroughly abreast of contemporaneous life she was. She knew the state of the public mind in England and France and Germany, and discussed the probabilities of war, the vicissitudes of parties, the conflicts of classes, and as easily moved or followed the conversation to Edison's inventions, the intrigues of President Arthur's Cabinet, the Romanist invasion of our "great West," or the outlook for our commercial or agricultural industries. She read the reviews and art journals and scientific papers, the latest works of fiction and poetry with great discrimination, and loved to find some one who had traveled over the same road, and had reflections with which she could compare her own.

No public enterprise was without interest to her. Whatever abated human misery, encouraged the unfortunate, strengthened the weak, defended the oppressed, whether it was a temperance organization or missionary enterprise, the projection of a railroad, the World's Exposition or a parish fair, easily found a place in her thoughts and sympathies and prayers, and, if possible, in her benevolence. That she should have preserved this vital touch with all the world at her advanced and infirm age was remarkable. I have known older people with firmer step and quicker senses, but I never knew one whose mind more resolutely

"The darkening universe defied
To quench her immortality, or shake her trust
In God."

She was a woman of fine common sense, and her opinion was valued and sought by a great variety of people on a great variety of subjects. Her life at home was one of quiet dignity, moderation, it may be, in later life by failure of sight and hearing. I never knew her to be visibly excited nor to forget the gravity becoming her years. The loneliness which only old age knows, left on her no acerbity of thought, no presumptuous self-assertion, no irritability, no suspiciousness. She did not seem to seek asylum among earlier memories, or fly defiantly into the face of innovations and novelties that must frequently have taken her by surprise. I have known old age to be retiring from selfishness, to be obtrusive from wounded pride, and to be arrogant from deferential indulgences; but she held on the even tenor of her way, with cheerful look and loving word and patient mien. In her exceptional benignity she was like the apple which, lingering long upon the tree, is enabled to translate the Autumn's glow and Winter's frost into the richest expressions of beauty and flavor.

She was thoroughly furnished for the sacred offices of motherhood. Her mind richly stored, vigorous and active; her conscience sensitive, and sitting sceptered upon a throne; her tastes domestic, and loving the quiet place apart; her physical health good; tender-hearted; indulgent and self-forgetful; and the motherly instinct brooding over all, she was eminently fitted for unfolding the shrinking faculties of childhood, and training them for pure and elevated occupations in life. "Her own works praise her in the gates." Her daughters, in their several domestic struotures, are "as corner-stones polished after the similitude of a palace." Trained in one of our best colleges, with the imprint of many a scholarly hand evident, yet the previous and later touches of a mother's hand constitute their noblest accomplishments.

Her friends will recollect with what tender solicitude she mothered, even to her latest breath, the youngest daughter, over whose path the shadow of sorrow had fallen. Even that daughter's manly boys were fondled as tenderly as though no mother-heart intervened. Never was the girl-mother more minute in direction or warning, nor was she prouder of her responsibility or more painstaking than this mother and grandmother to the sweet cares of her old age, and this self-assumed burden seemed to kindle afresh the hope and renew the energies of her youth. It was a gracious fæstination, and, doubtless, greatly prolonged her days. This may be the explanation of that shadow that fell so early and unexpectedly upon a tender life. There is no beauty in a shadow; but there is no beauty without it.

Sister Burrus' religious life was an even one. She read Methodist literature—standard and fugitive. She knew and admired our heroes of the present and past. She comprehended all of our enterprises, and participated in them. The missionary and temperance causes were not bold beyond her faith, nor did they open for her sex employments beyond her conscience or her courage. The door of womanly philanthropy swung open too late for her feet to enter, but not for her prayers. She loved the society of her pastor and all good people, and on proper occasions would talk of her experience and her hopes. When able to attend public services she was always present, though for several years she could hear scarcely a word of sermon or song. She was a fine judge of preaching, but was a charitable and sympathetic hearer. When present during the communion service she always participated in it. She loved the Methodist traditions and institutions and polity, the Methodist doctrines and songs and ministry. Though sensitively organized, and full of generous emotions, she was not obtrusive with them. I never knew her to be depressed, or in religious doubt; nor, on the other hand, to be effusive or ecstatic. Her faith was steadfast, her devotion regular, her self-denial established, her doctrinal opinions fixed. She was constantly moving with ordered step and expectant brow toward the goal. She understood death to be the "mark" which designated the end of life's course—the end of life's probation, privilege and peril; the threshold of its reward, the culmination of the august and awful mystery of life, and she trembled at its approach. But she met the last enemy as she had met many another—leaning upon the arm of her Lord. By her tranquillity and patience and charity, by her resignation and hopefulness and devotion, she plucked, as a diadem, a supernatural glow for her dying features, and, as she passed through the gates, signalled her final triumph and ineluctable rapture with the characteristic salutation of "Glory!"

Into the shadows her body, into the "light" her spirit have gone. For the redemption of the one we wait; for the triumph of the other we rejoice. When he "maketh up his jewels" her spirit shall have its own setting, and both shall be shaped and polished by the same hand.

It has been suggested that telephonic communication with the sun during the solar disturbances is possible, and an experiment will be tried soon.

the hospitality and zeal of Lydia, "whose heart the Lord opened." She was a woman of extensive reading and trained thought. Her accumulations represented the fields of history, biography, travel, philosophy, poetry, romance and theology. She could tell you why she adored the color of a flower, the composition of a landscape, or the entablature of an auditorium. She had definite standards with which to compare the imagery, sentiment or rhythm of a poem, and authoritative tests by which to verify the speculations of philosophy or the excursions of theology. With a decided preference and culture in the fine arts, her judgment was rarely at fault, where questions of beauty, propriety or delicacy bore any conspicuous relation to the merits of a case. In early life she evinced great skill in portrait painting. She was fond of music, and was a discriminating judge of what was excellent in popular or artistic productions. She loved the Wesleyan hymns, and the old tunes, the latter for their typical melody, and the former for the truest poetry and noblest interpretation of religious experience.

I have been surprised to find how thoroughly abreast of contemporaneous life she was. She knew the state of the public mind in England and France and Germany, and discussed the probabilities of war, the vicissitudes of parties, the conflicts of classes, and as easily moved or followed the conversation to Edison's inventions, the intrigues of President Arthur's Cabinet, the Romanist invasion of our "great West," or the outlook for our commercial or agricultural industries. She read the reviews and art journals and scientific papers, the latest works of fiction and poetry with great discrimination, and loved to find some one who had traveled over the same road, and had reflections with which she could compare her own.

No public enterprise was without interest to her. Whatever abated human misery, encouraged the unfortunate, strengthened the weak, defended the oppressed, whether it was a temperance organization or missionary enterprise, the projection of a railroad, the World's Exposition or a parish fair, easily found a place in her thoughts and sympathies and prayers, and, if possible, in her benevolence. That she should have preserved this vital touch with all the world at her advanced and infirm age was remarkable. I have known older people with firmer step and quicker senses, but I never knew one whose mind more resolutely

To quench her immortality, or shake her trust
In God."

She was a woman of fine common sense, and her opinion was valued and sought by a great variety of people on a great variety of subjects. Her life at home was one of quiet dignity, moderation, it may be, in later life by failure of sight and hearing. I never knew her to be visibly excited nor to forget the gravity becoming her years. The loneliness which only old age knows, left on her no acerbity of thought, no presumptuous self-assertion, no irritability, no suspiciousness. She did not seem to seek asylum among earlier memories, or fly defiantly into the face of innovations and novelties that must frequently have taken her by surprise. I have known old age to be retiring from selfishness, to be obtrusive from wounded pride, and to be arrogant from deferential indulgences; but she held on the even tenor of her way, with cheerful look and loving word and patient mien. In her exceptional benignity she was like the apple which, lingering long upon the tree, is enabled to translate the Autumn's glow and Winter's frost into the richest expressions of beauty and flavor.

Woodville District Conference.

The Woodville District Conference was held in Greensburg, La., June 8-12, 1892. Rev. P. A. Johnston, P. E., presiding. The presiding elder opened the Conference at nine A. M. by the use of hymn 22, by reading the fourth chapter of II. Timothy, and by prayer. The roll was called by Rev. J. J. Smylie. Only a few answered to their names. W. T. Woodward and W. O. Ligon were elected as secretaries. All the preachers of the district were present save three—Dr. H. W. Featherston, W. W. Hurst and G. W. Huff. But few lay delegates were present.

The Conference was a spiritual one. The power of the Holy Ghost came the first day, and remained through the whole. Sinners were convicted and converted to Christ. Well can we each say, "It was good for us to be there." As for myself, I returned to my work with more strength and determination to fight the devil than before. Such seasons of refreshing are both profitable to lay and preachers. It was said by the presiding elder that it was one of the most spiritual District Conferences he ever attended. The whole Conference session seemed to be so agreeable. Brotherly love, kindness, patience and long-suffering pervaded the whole. The preaching, from beginning to end, was good. Some preached about the call of the Spirit; some, the power of God to save; some, the immortality of the soul; some, supreme love; some, the glory of the cross; some on the judgment. Last of all, the doctrine of infidelity knocked in the head; no breath left in it.

Notwithstanding the assessment on all the charges being larger than last year, the reports of the brethren show a decided improvement in finances. The spiritual state of the district is good. Both presiding elder and preachers seem to be anxious and yearning for a higher state of spirituality among the church members. The Sunday-school reports from the different charges show that visible good is being done through them for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ.

In conclusion, I would say to the brethren of the district I should have written sooner, but was delayed on account of sickness.
